Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, with reference to the collector of internal revenue at New Orleans, may I ask whether there is any way for us to get an agreement to take up the nomination some day and dispose of it?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. I refer to the nomination of the collector of internal revenue at New Orleans. Why can we not take it up now?

Mr. LONG. I have no particular objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us take it up now.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before that is done, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar will be confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make the same request with respect to the promotions in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations for promotions in the Navy will be confirmed en bloc.

DANIEL D. MOORE

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Mississippi desires to take up the Moore nomination now?

Mr. HARRISON. I shall be very glad to do so and get it out of the way.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination be passed over. If this case is taken up today, we shall be here all night. Let us take it up tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I certainly should object to taking up the Moore nomination this evening. Great interest has been manifested in the hearings regarding this nomination, and a great many Senators desire to be here when the question of its confirmation comes before the Senate. Many Senators have left the Chamber upon the understanding that there would be no action this afternoon on anything other than the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. As a matter of fairness to them, and in the interest of the protection to which they are entitled, I shall object to the consideration of the nomination today.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me say to the Senator from Oregon that I was not insisting on the consideration of the nomination at this time. I said that it was perfectly agreeable, so far as we were concerned, to take it up now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the nomination be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the Senator from Arkansas that I am wondering if we can agree on a time for the consideration of the nomination.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to any arrangement that may be made in that respect.

Mr. LONG. I suggest that we take it up with the calendar tomorrow, or whenever we have an executive session.

Mr. McNARY. I have no personal interest whatever in this nomination. I have some interest in the orderly procedure which is usually followed in the Senate in the consideration of legislation.

We have before us two bills, neither of which has been disposed of. I suggest that we get through with the unfinished business and the business that is to follow it—namely, the Glass bill—and, after we have cleaned the legislative slate, that we come to some agreement as to a time for taking up in executive session the Moore case.

That is the logical way in which to proceed. We are going to be here some little time, I anticipate, in connection with the legitimate discussion of the case.

I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Arkansas that the matter be allowed to rest for a few days; and probably later in the week, after the legislative calendar shall have been taken care of, a date that is appropriate may be set for the consideration of the nomination.

Mr. HARRISON. It is agreeable to me to have it set for some future time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I had not anticipated that the nomination could be taken up this afternoon.

JABEZ W. DANGERFIELD

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I call the attention of my friend upon the other side to the nomination of Mr. Dangerfield to be postmaster at Provo, Utah. I should be glad to have it taken up now.

Mr. McNARY. Has it been reported to the calendar?

Mr. KING. It has been unanimously reported.

Mr. McNARY. Is it now on the calendar?

Mr. KING. No; it was reported today.

Mr. McNARY. What is the emergency?

Mr. KING. The commission of this man's predecessor expired several months ago. However, I shall not ask for its consideration if there is any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination?

Mr. McNARY. Under those circumstances, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jabez W. Dangerfield to be postmaster at Provo, Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be notified.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 8, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 7, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father and Savior of men, we unveil the cross and behold infinite love struggling of expression; how red is Thy heart and how full of mercy are Thy hands. Thy authority needs to be enthroned in every walk of life. How strong and sovereign is the manhood that breathes through Thee. Illuminate our minds and cleanse our hearts from all guile that we may be one with Thee in thought and purpose. Be Thou the ground and the pillar of our strength; be Thou the cradle song for every child of Thine; be Thou heaven's purity that cleanses every stained life; be Thou the fadeless flower for every weary breast. O be Thou the springtime for every dear heart clouded with the winter of discontent, and all glory be unto Thee. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 5, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5884. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. VAN NUYS, Mr. MCCARRAN, and Mr. HASTINGS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE FLORIDA CANAL

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what he is going to talk about? We have a rather heavy program for today.

Mr. GREEN. I am going to talk about a canal across Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

THE CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my fellow Members, it is my pleasure to report to you the progress which is being made upon the proposed canal across Florida. In 1927 you were good enough to pass a survey bill which I introduced, and again in 1930 you saw fit to approve the bill which I introduced and which provided for the physical survey. Surveys for a large number of routes across Florida have been made by the Board of Army Engineers. A few weeks ago they reported that the canal was feasible from an engineering standpoint and that it could be constructed. They estimated its cost to exceed $200,000,000.

During the past few months the Public Works engineers have made surveys for this waterway, which would connect the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf across the peninsula of Florida, and these engineers report that it is feasible and could be constructed for about $115,000,000. These estimates are for a canal from 30 to 35 feet in depth and of sufficient width to take care of all ships now using the Gulf of Mexico.

Its construction is estimated to utilize the services of from twenty-five to thirty thousand employees over a period of about 5 years. It is believed that this canal would soon develop from forty to fifty million tons per year, and that with a small toll it would in 50 to 60 years retire the cost of construction plus upkeep and interest.

A special board of review is now being appointed by the President for the further consideration of the reports of the Army engineers and the Public Works engineers. We confidently hope that this special board will harmonize the differences in the two reports and make such findings as will fully warrant beginning immediately on the construction of this great project. This proposed canal is next in importance to the Panama Canal, and will, I am confident, within 5 years after its opening handle greater tonnage than is now being handled by the Panama Canal.

The construction of the canal across Florida will redound great benefits to every State in the Union. It will save some 22 hours in time between New Orleans and ports of the East, and will, of course, reflect cheaper transportation to all the Mississippi Valley, the Southern States, and the eastern tier of States from Maine to Miami. It will eliminate storm hazards and also be a great asset in the event of war. Construction at this particular time will greatly relieve unemployment. From 76 to 82 percent of the amount expended will go to labor. We believe the time is now ripe for commencing of this project, and we believe also that it will soon be authorized. The cooperation of all waterways-development advocates is urged.

FREIGHT RATES ON FLORIDA VEGETABLES LOWERED

In connection with our previous vigorous effort for lower cost of transportation it is encouraging to know that we have finally been able to obtain through the Interstate Commerce Commission reduction of rates on vegetables shipped from Florida and other places in the Southeast. From the Florida Peninsula the rates on string beans, lima beans, and peas has just been fixed at 50 percent of the first-class freight rates. Beets, carrots, tomatoes, peas, green corn, cucumbers, eggplant, lettuce, and so forth, reduced to 45 percent; celery, 42.5 percent; cabbage, 35 percent; and potatoes, 30 percent. These reductions have been fought for by the members of the Florida delegation and by Florida shippers for many years, and we appreciate the cooperation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and know that with these reduced rates our Florida growers will begin to realize long-deserved benefits. There should be no discrimination in rates paid by Florida shippers and those paid by other places of equal distance from the eastern market. We are endeavoring to convince the Interstate Commerce Commission that any discrimination in rates heretofore existing must be corrected. If necessary, legislation to investigate the Commission and preferential rates allowed will be introduced. Florida strawberries and other vegetables and fruits must be transported as cheaply as Louisiana strawberries and vegetables.

MAJOR ADMINISTRATION MEASURES PASSED

The House has already passed nearly all of the important administration measures. We have passed such important and controversial matters as the tariff bill, the tax bill, crime bills, bills whereby the Government guarantees the principal of home-loan bonds and Federal land-bank bonds, the stock market bill, the annual supply bills, and others; but there are other bills which we should pass before adjournment.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

We should pass legislation for the sustenance and protection of the aged. My bill, H.R. 9228, meets this emergency, and I trust my colleagues will cooperate for its prompt passage.

PAYMENT OF BANK DEPOSITORS

Before adjournment we should pass legislation to pay the depositors in closed State and national banks throughout the country, particularly the deposits of the small depositor. For this purpose I have introduced a bill, H.R. 9018. I earnestly ask for your support of this legislation.

AID FOR SCHOOLS

Also do I urge upon my colleagues the importance of providing before we adjourn for the allocation of Federal funds to be used in prolonging the terms of public schools in places where local authorities are unable to maintain them for an 8-month period. During this grave emergency the education of our youth must not be neglected and the Federal Government should see to it that our children are provided with 8-month terms. Local control, administration, and jurisdiction must in all events be maintained. Local public-school authorities must be protected in their rights to manage their schools, employ their teachers, and approve the textbooks taught.

LABOR BILLS

We have pending several meritorious bills which have for their aim the protection of labor. These should be acted upon before adjournment.

CARE FOR SICK

Under the F.E.R.A. considerable assistance is being given to the sick who are unable to pay for medical care. This relief should be increased even to the extent of cooperation in the establishing and maintaining of county hospitals for the care of the sick. No American citizen should be deprived of medical attention because he is unable to pay for it. Neither should our doctors and nurses be compelled to serve for charity. Through the proper cooperation these hospitals can be under the direction and management of local physicians and nurses.

FLORIDA RECEIVES FEDERAL MONEY

We are led to ask the above cooperation from the Federal Government, because of the great assistance in the way of appropriations and expenditures which the Federal Government had made in the various States. Since I have been a Member of Congress Florida has received large Federal benefits. To partially itemize expenditures in Florida over this 10-year period, they are as follows: By the Veterans' Administration in 1932, $9,000,000; in 1933, $10,000,000. Over the past 10 years, including the amount of bonus loans, Florida veterans and their dependents have received in the neighborhood of $100,000,000. Federal road aid, including the $4,264,929 now available, amounts to $21,254,824; the Treasury Department, for public buildings, $6,141,040,88; the Navy Department, $1,036,460; Forestry Service, $2,623,576.77, also about three million for C.C.C. camps; the Bureau of Lighthouses, $1,280,000; the Farm Credit Administration, $39,976,594—$9,620,770 of this amount has been loaned by the Federal Land Bank of Columbia since May 1933. The War Department has spent $22,189,950 and authorized, in addition thereto, $11,450,000. For educational purposes, $1,368,702. The Public Works Administration, for Federal projects, $18,339,047, and for non-Federal projects, $5,749,487, or a total of $24,088,534. I have not the accurate figures on other Government agencies which directly and indirectly have given us several million more dollars, but even counting the above you will note that we have received $434,599,681. Much of this has been loans.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Relief Administration, and the Federal Home Loan Corporation have sent to Florida many millions which, added to the above total, would probably give Florida $500,000,000 Federal funds in the past 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein one or two very short letters, one of them from a colleague.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may be authorized to sit on the 8th and 9th of this month during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF THE DEBTORS

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech delivered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] before the Women's Illinois Bar Association a short time ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] before the Women's Illinois Bar Association a short time ago:

Madam President, members of the Women's Bar Association of Illinois, the pleasure of being here tonight is due to the gracious invitation of your committee and the earnest appeal of one of America's outstanding newspapermen.

This is an opportune time to discuss with the members of this distinguished association the Federal laws passed in the last few months for the relief of debtors in the United States. This is a human question, and you understand the human relations of debts to the distress of the men and women in all walks of life. The housewife is the budget officer of the home. Upon her shoulders falls the task of making the tongue of family income meet the buckle of family outgo.

The private debts in this country have reached an enormous sum, and the money to meet them has been shrinking until the losses by liquidation are simply terrific. The loss in Chicago, as shown by the schedules in bankruptcy alone in the last 4 years, has been in the neighborhood of $238,000,000. In the year 1933 it was around $88,000,000. That has been washed out and lost.

For more than 4 years I have been giving much study and labor upon the problem of devising some lawful and constitutional scheme by which the liquidation of property for debt-paying purposes at a time when there was no market could be stopped without resulting injury to the creditor class.

Marco Polo in his writings tells us of a country in his travels where the creditor if he had the opportunity could draw a ring on the ground entirely around his unfortunate debtor, and it was the law of that country that the debtor could not cross the line until he paid, upon the penalty of death. In other words, he had to pay, stay in the ring, or get killed by his creditors. We shudder at this barbaric law, but it is a tame affair as compared with that of the terrible law of the 12 tables whereby the creditors might cut the debtor's body to pieces and each of them take his proportionate part. Many learned men, however, tell us they have doubts that that law ever existed. In the days of the Roman Empire more humane laws were passed—if you can call them humane—whereby the debtor was imprisoned in chains and subject to stripes at the mercy of his creditor.

Later, under the Christian emperors, if a debtor yielded up his property he was not sent to jail; and if by accident or from causes for which he was not responsible he could swear an oath that he was not able to pay his debts, he was not required to give up the small amount left in his possession.

I used to wonder why our forefathers in England and the Colonies would imprison persons for debt—well, by research, I learned that the practice arose as a precaution against prodigality and extravagance on the part of people other than tradespeople. Upon this I quote from Chitty's Blackstone as follows:

"If persons in other situations of life run in debt without the power of payment, they must take the consequences of their own indiscretion, even though they meet with sudden accidents that may reduce their fortunes; for the law holds it to be an unjustifiable practice for any person but a trader to encumber himself with debts of any considerable value. If a gentleman, or one in a liberal profession, at the time of contracting his debts has a sufficient fund to pay them, the delay of payment is a species of dishonesty, and a temporary injustice to his creditor; and if, at such time he has no sufficient fund the dishonesty and injustice is the greater. He cannot therefore murmur, if he suffers the punishment which he has voluntarily drawn upon himself. But in mercantile transactions the case is far otherwise. Trade cannot be carried on without mutual credit on both sides; the contraction of debts is therefore here not only justifiable, but necessary."

While we cannot tolerate such a law in our present civilization, yet how much better our country would be today if the extravagance of our people other than tradesmen during the 10 years from 1919 to 1929 had been curtailed, even by a law. The first bankruptcy act in England was enacted during the reign of Henry VIII.

The first bankruptcy act in this country was the act of 1800. This was repealed after a few years, and the next act was the law of 1841. This law, after serving its purpose, was repealed. Then came the act of 1867, on the heels of the Civil War. It was the amendment of this latter act of June 22, 1874, that composition with creditors was first permitted in America.

After the close of the War with Spain we enacted our present Bankruptcy Act, which has from time to time been amended. The latest amendment is the act of March 3, 1933, known as "Provisions for the relief of debtors." Early in the second session of the Seventy-second Congress the Department of Justice laid before Congress a new proposal for relief of debtors as distinguished from bankrupts by way of amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. This was a new departure from the usual relief by bankruptcy. It proposed to deal with debtors as such and not as persons adjudged bankrupts.

In other words, it amended the Bankruptcy Act so as to offer a forum where distressed debtors could come, before their plight was hopeless, and avail themselves of this new procedure and thus avoid the stigma of bankruptcy. Thus debtors in their early stages, if insolvent, could seek a city of refuge while there is still something worth saving for themselves and their creditors. It always takes a new proposal a long time to percolate the Congress, and immediately the question of the constitutional power of Congress to enact such legislation arose. Challenging the constitutionality of a bill is the one question which Congressmen have the right to raise against a new or progressive measure, and more speeches have been made in both Houses on this subject, with less real enlightenment, than on any other subject ever discussed. Strange as it may seem, more lawyers have questioned the constitutionality of many of the acts of Congress, but few have ever fallen before the highest court of the land.

The Honorable Thomas D. Thacher, of the New York Bar, the then Solicitor General, filed a brief in support of the bill, which has not, in my opinion, been answered. Through his efforts it was possible to merge into one bill my House bill for the relief of individual debtors with Senator Hastings' corporate reorganization bill. Later a railroad-reorganization section was introduced by Congressman LaGuardia, now the mayor of New York City.

After much labor we finally passed the bill through the House containing a section covering individuals, corporations, and interstate railroads. When the bill reached the floor of the Senate in order to expedite the passage of the act, it was necessary to drop the section dealing with corporations. However, Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON of Arkansas put in a new section dealing exclusively with debtor farmers. So when the act emerged on March 3, 1933, it provided a new procedure for individual debtors (which includes any farmer), a section with groups of farmer debtors, and providing special procedure for them; and railroad reorganization.

Section 73 of the debtors' relief amendment deals with the jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy by adding to their jurisdiction right to entertain petitions for extensions of distressed debtors. Many lawyers contend that there must be an adjudication in bankruptcy or a prayer for such. I will quote from an old but governing authority. I quote from the opinion of Mr. Justice Catron in re Klein, found in forty-two United Sates (1 How.), page 277, as follows:

"In considering the question before me, I have not pretended to give a definition, but purposely avoided any attempt to define the mere word 'bankruptcy.' It is employed in the Constitution in the plural and as part of an expression, 'the subject of bankruptcies.' The ideas attached to the word in this connection are numerous and complicated; they form a subject of extensive and complicated legislation; of this subject Congress has general jurisdiction, and the true inquiry is, To what limits is that jurisdiction restricted? I hold it extends to all cases where the law causes to be distributed the property of the debtor among his creditors; this is its least limit. Its greatest is the discharge of a debtor from his contracts. And all intermediate legislation affecting substance and form, but tending to further the great end of the subject—distribution and discharge—are in the competence and discretion of Congress. * * *

"The question, then, as to what is a 'bankruptcy' law is one purely of substance. If it provides for the distribution of a debtor's property among his creditors, it is a 'bankruptcy' law within the meaning of the Constitution. Terminology is of no importance. As Mr. Justice Catron pointed out, every State law is a bankrupt law, in substance and fact, that causes to be distributed by a tribunal the property of a debtor among his creditors. * * * Such a law may be denominated an insolvent law (and never mention the words 'bankruptcy' or 'bankrupts'); still it deals directly with the subject of bankruptcies, and is a bankrupt law in the sense of the Constitution; and if Congress should pass a similar law it would suspend the State law while the act of Congress continued in force.

"The framers of the Constitution were familiar with Blackstone's Commentaries and with the bankrupt laws of England, yet they granted plenary power to Congress over the whole subject of bankruptcies and did not limit it by the language used. This is illustrated by Mr. Sherman's observations in the convention, that 'bankruptcies' were, in some cases, punishable with death by the laws of England, and he did not choose to grant a power by which that might be done here; and the rejoinder of Gouverneur Morris, that 'this was an extensive and delicate subject. He would agree to it, because he saw no danger of abuse of the power by the legislature of the United States.'"

I cite you to the case of Hanover National Bank v. Moyses (186 U.S. 181), an opinion by that great Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, a son of your great Commonwealth, which decision answers every doubtful Thomas.

Under this new procedure when a merchant finds himself losing money with sales falling to the point he cannot meet his debts as they mature, he can immediately file his petition in the bankruptcy court not as a bankrupt, but as a distressed debtor asking for extensions of due dates of his indebtedness or for a scaling-down of principal or interest or both and for an extension of time in which to meet his obligations. He files a schedule giving the names, addresses, and amount due each creditor together with a list of all his assets and with these a plan of settlement setting forth the extension he desires. A day certain is fixed by the receiver or trustee—if none, the court—and notice of his proposal with a brief outline of his indebtedness and a statement of his assets and a list of the names and addresses of all secured creditors and of 15 of his largest unsecured creditors is sent to each creditor.

At this meeting the creditors and the debtor discuss the plan suggested, and both may offer other plans or amendments; and if a majority of the creditors in number and amount agree with the debtor, the plan is then filed in the courts for approval and confirmation. The hearing is set at such place and time as will be most convenient for all parties in interest; and if it contains an equitable plan for liquidating the debts and rehabilitating the debtor, the plan is approved. Each creditor who files a claim must state that the claim is free of usury as defined by the laws of the place where the debt is contracted. The extension plan may extend the time for agreement of either or both unsecured and secured debts, but cannot reduce the amount of the debt or impair the lien of any secured creditor, but may affect the time and method of its liquidation. Upon the confirmation of the plan for extension the court may either dismiss proceedings or retain jurisdiction of the debtor and his property during the period of the extension. If a debtor fails to carry out the terms of the plans, he may appoint a trustee to liquidate the estate. The debtor may answer to an involuntary petition filed against him in bankruptcy and invoke the jurisdiction to submit a plan as a distressed debtor.

When a petition of a debtor is filed for an extension or composition or an answer as the case may be, the court takes jurisdiction of the debtor and his property and all other proceedings by way of suit, execution, or attachment are automatically stayed until action is had upon his application or answer for extension. I developed the idea of individual debtors' relief from the debtors' respite law as found in the old Louisiana Code, which came down from the Code De Nepoleon, chapter 75, dealing with agricultural composition, and the extension for farmers was modeled after the section dealing with individual debtors and was made especially applicable to distressed debtor farmers and was sponsored by the Federation Farm Bureau. Under its provisions 15 or more farmers who say they intend to file petition under the section may petition the Federal district judge to appoint a conciliation commissioner for that county. The commissioner designated to serve in that county or such commissioner appointed in an adjacent county may serve in the county. These commissioners are appointed for 1 year and may be removed by the court whenever their services are no longer needed or for cause.

Any person that may be appointed as a conciliation commissioner must have the qualifications of a referee in bankruptcy and in addition must be familiar with the condition of the agriculture in the county, and he cannot be engaged in the farm-mortgage business or engaged in financing farmers or dealing in transactions in agricultural commodities or in the business of agricultural marketing or in furnishing agricultural supplies.

The farmer under this section pays a deposit fee of only $10. The district judge has the power whenever the needs require to appoint also a supervising conciliation commissioner for his district. The conciliation commissioner shall receive as compensation for his services including his expenses a fee of $10 for each case docketed and submitted to him. It was the intention of Congress that this would include whatever personal expenses the commissioner might expend, but it was not contemplated to include the expenses of notices or any matter of that character. It was intended by Congress that such expenses as notices and letters mailed shall be paid out of the Treasury. The supervising conciliation commissioner is paid not to exceed $5 per day, together with subsistence and traveling expenses according to the schedule paid other such officers in the Department of Justice. This section has a limitation of 5 years and is not the permanent law.

In the case of farmers when they file their application no action can be brought against them for any demand debt or account or for the foreclosure of mortgages on their land or to acquire title to their lands by virtue of tax sale; nor the levying of an execution by attachment or garnishment; or sales of the land in the satisfaction of any judgment or liens except upon permission granted by the court; however there is no prohibition against the collection of taxes nor as to property not used for agricultural purposes.

A farmer may file either as individual or as a group if there is a conciliation commissioner in his county.

I will not undertake to discuss the procedure for reorganizing railroads contained in this act, nor will I attempt to discuss the reorganization of corporations which is still pending in Congress. There is also an amendment pending in Congress to give municipal corporations and taxing districts an opportunity to secure extension by agreement of their security holders. Under the section dealing with individual extensions there is to be found respite for the burdened debtor in every walk of life, the trader, the professional man or woman, and the employee.

It is my hope that thousands of distressed debtors may learn of this provision of the law and settle their debts by extension agreements while there is no market in which to liquidate their assets. The underlying plan upon which this legislation is predicated is that through the agencies of the bankrupt court we offer a forum to which the distressed debtor may invite his creditors to sit around the table in an open, free, and frank discussion of the whole situation, and may reach an agreement with the majority in number and amount to a plan that will not only rehabilitate the debtor, but will repay the creditor.

I hope this scheme will succeed. In conclusion I hope the business of the lawyers commences to recover immediately, and I am sure the new amendments of the bankruptcy law will show you the way to recover your own fortunes and at the same time render the distressed debtors of America a great service and add to the revenue of the creditors of America.

I thank you.

CROP-PRODUCTION LOANS

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a resolution pending before the Rules Committee, House Resolution 328, that has for its purpose an investigation of the manner in which crop-production loans are being made throughout the country.

I have here a letter from Dr. A. R. Johnston, of Reevesville, S.C., apropos of this resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to insert a portion of this letter in the RECORD with a copy of my reply thereto.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I shall undertake to read a portion of this letter to the House. It is addressed to me and dated May 4, 1934.

Hon. HOMER C. PARKER,
United States Congressman, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PARKER: I am delighted to see you are taking some action in behalf of the farmer, who hasn't had a square deal from the Government. I wish to state one concrete case, which is one among hundreds in South Carolina:

A Mrs. Crawford was told she could not borrow $60 from the seed-and-feed loan unless rejected by the Crop Production Credit Association. She had to borrow $60 from the Production Credit Association, mortgaging her livestock, chattels, and crop, in fact, everything she has. She gets in return 4 checks, as follows: 1 for $51 payable to Mrs. Crawford, 1 for $2 payable to Mrs. Crawford and the clerk of court to cover attorney's fee and recording, 1 for $2 payable to Mrs. Crawford and the inspector, 1 payable to the Production Credit Association for $5 for class B stock, making a total of $9 expense, plus $1 application fee, plus 5½-percent interest to be paid in October 1934.

This is a poor widow who has not the necessities of life; and not being satisfied with the cost deducted from the amount applied for, she offered her check back to the president of the Association and asked for her papers. She was told she could get her papers upon payment of $4, and not having the $4, she had to keep the $51, regardless of the usurious rate of interest. This is one concrete case with hundreds of others all over the country.

The above is nothing short of a crime, perpetrated by whom? When you destroy the home and farm you destroy America; and the above is a fair way to destruction.

You know Congress appropriated $40,000,000 seed-and-feed fund to be loaned to the farmers for crop production. It also states in that act the farmer can borrow up to $250. Did Congress rescind this law to enable the Crop Production Credit Association to force us to borrow from them at this usurious rate of interest? We were told by the officials of the seed-and-feed loan we could not borrow from them for crop production unless the Production Credit Association refused to make us a loan. If a farmer wanted to borrow less than $50, he could borrow through the seed-and-feed loan direct. It has only been about 10 days since we have been allowed to borrow direct from the seed-and-feed loan to the amount of $145 without first having to apply to the Production Credit Association. Unfortunately I am afraid they have waited too late in making this change to be of much benefit to the farmer. In other words, a case of shooting first and then investigating.

Congressman, we the farmers are not asking any special favors; we are demanding that we be put on a basis with other interests. Is there a business in America that could survive under such usurious rates of interest or cost of obtaining money?

* * * * * * *

Yours sincerely,

A. R. JOHNSTON.

My reply is dated today and reads as follows:

Dr. A. R. JOHNSTON,
Reevesville, S.C.

MY DEAR DR. JOHNSTON: I am in receipt of your letter of May 4 and I assure you that the information contained therein is greatly appreciated. I am going to do my best to get the portion of your letter with reference to crop loans inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today.

I am terribly busy and will not answer your letter fully at this time. Later on I hope to be able to write you again and tell you definitely whether or not I have been able to accomplish anything for the underprivileged farmers in your State and mine.

Thanking you for your letter, I am

Yours sincerely,

HOMER C. PARKER.

DANIEL BOONE

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3355) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has this bill been passed by the Senate?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It has been passed by the Senate, and an identical bill has been reported by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The coins are to be issued only upon the request of the secretary of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission. They are desired by Boone Station, Bryanville, and Boonesboro.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has been authorized by the committee to call it up?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes. If they do not get these coins very soon it will do them no good.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone, there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint 600,000 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and silver fineness and of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be legal tender in all payments at face value.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the secretary of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by said Commission and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission projects.

SEC. 4. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table. A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICE AT LAS VEGAS, NEV.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 3900) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., with a Senate amendment, and I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Goldsmith Metal Lath Co. the sum of $892.73, to Price-Evans Foundry Corporation the sum of $1,790.10, and to R. W. Felix the sum of $27.81, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for losses suffered by the said companies by reason of the default of the Plains Construction Co., general contractors for the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., and the contractor's failure to furnish the valid bond as required by law for the protection of labor and material men furnishing labor and material on public works: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman explain the purpose of this bill?

Mr. LANHAM. I shall be glad to do so. The bill H.R. 3900 was introduced by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] and passed both Houses. It provided for the payment to certain subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., of sums due them which had not been received by reason of the default of the general contractor, the Plains Construction Co. The bill was discussed in the House and passed.

A similar bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS], dealing with almost the identical situation growing out of some contracts that involved about $2,500 in addition. This bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, whereas the first one came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Committee on Claims has reported the bill and it is on the calendar. This bill by Mr. MCREYNOLDS is the item added by way of amendment in the Senate.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I am not going to object to this request, but I do hope we can get to this Consent Calendar as soon as possible. There are many bills on the calendar, and I think we ought to proceed with it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us when we are going to take up the suspensions?

Mr. BYRNS. I refer the gentleman to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Probably about 3 o'clock. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, in the last two sessions that we have had for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar I have objected to several bills which propose to refund income taxes that have already been paid into the Treasury of the United States. As a further justification and explanation of my action in objecting to the bills of some of my good friends in this House, I have prepared a bill to take care of the matter, and I ask unanimous consent to have the Clerk read it in my time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to repeal the provisions of title 26, United States Code, sections 1046, 1065, 3321, and 3322, etc., providing for administrative refund by the United States Treasury Department of overpayments and illegal collections of income-tax assessments and to reduce the statute of limitations applying to suits in the United States courts for tax refunds to 1 year from the time the tax was paid

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter in no case shall any refund of any overpayment of an income-tax assessment by any taxpayer be made by the Treasury Department or any subdivision thereof through administrative channels.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to any taxpayer recourse to the courts of the United States to recover any tax illegally collected. Such procedure, however, shall be the sole remedy for recovery of such overpayments.

SEC. 3. No action shall be brought in any court of the United States for the recovery of any illegally collected income-tax assessment unless the assessment shall have first been paid in full and formal protest filed with the collector at the time of payment setting forth the basis of the claims of overpayment.

SEC. 4. No action shall be allowed for the recovery of any such overpayment after 1 year after the date of the payment of the tax.

SEC. 5. Title 26, United States Code, sections 1046, 1065, 3321, and 3322, and any other acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed and superseded by this act.

THE TAXING POWER AND THE CONTROL OF INDUSTRY

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. On what subject is the gentleman going to talk?

Mr. GRAY. I think I ought to emphasize before I leave the House two of the great powers that are vested in Congress by the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, while men cannot longer openly and directly control government to take and exact from the people, they can and do secretly and indirectly control some of the great powers of the Government to take from the people their earnings and income. One of these great powers of Government is the taxing power, the power to levy and collect taxes from the people, the power to take from the people, the power to go down in the people's pockets and take the money, take a part of their money, a part of their property, earnings and income, or, if need be, the power to take all of their money, property, wages, and income.

AN ABUSED POWER

While the taxing power is a necessary power, a necessary incident of government, necessary to enable the Government to live, and without which power the Government could not exist for a single day, yet it is one of the most abused powers of the Government, the power under which great advantage can be taken to burden the people and take from them their earnings and income, the fruits of their toil and labor. In this day and age a few men cannot organize an army, lay and levy a tribute upon the people, and take it from them by force of arms as in the days of old. But today a few men can organize a political machine and finance and supply money to that political machine and thereby gain control of a political party and through that political party gain control of the Government and the taxing power. And then they can levy a tribute upon the people in the name, color, and form of taxes and call all the forces of the Army and Navy and compel them to pay and take it from them.

DIRECT AND INDIRECT TAXES

Taxes are of two kinds, direct and indirect taxes. Direct taxes are taxes the people pay at the courthouse, taxes which they know just how much they are paying, how much of their wages, income, or money is being taken from them. Indirect taxes are taxes which the people do not pay at the courthouse but which they are paying all the time. Indirect taxes are mixed and mingled with the price and levied upon the necessaries which the people must buy to live and in such way they cannot tell how much is price and how much is tax. They only know the high costs of living, they only realize the labor to live. Under this system of indirect taxation the people can be burdened, the people can be oppressed, the people can be impoverished, the people can be exhausted of their property, means, earnings, and income without knowing the cause of their distress.

The people are paying more indirect taxes, taxes hidden, covered, and concealed in the price, and of which they have no knowledge, than they are paying at the courthouse which they can see, realize, and know of, and which burdens them more than indirect taxes, because what they realize and know of burdens them more than what they know not of. If the people only knew, understood, and realized how much of their earnings was being taken from them, how much they were paying as indirect taxes of which they have no knowledge of the amount, how much of their toil and labor was going as hidden, indirect taxes, and how little of their earnings and income they were allowed to keep and use for themselves, they would give closer study to taxes and the tax problem. They would demand to know more of increasing costs, of the rising prices of the vital necessaries of life, and whether going as taxes or tribute to monopoly, and if for taxes, how much and what for.

THE POWER TO DESTROY

But the taxing power includes more than the power to take from the people. It includes the power to destroy, the power to break down one business or industry, the power to build up another business or industry. It includes the power to destroy competition in business, the power to build up monopoly in business, and thereby to take from the people by and through extortionate and excessive profits. The taxing power has been used to destroy the poisonous phosphorus-match evil. It has been used to destroy the narcotic evil, and to destroy or control other great evils. It has been used by good men to destroy bad things, and it has been used by bad men to destroy good things. The taxing power is a great power for good or for evil accordingly as the power may be used and controlled by selfish men, by private, greedy, selfish interests, or by humane patriotic men to conserve the public welfare.

THE SHIFT OF TAXES

Sometimes the people, staggering under the burdens of taxation, in righteous wrath and indignation, demand a tax law or system requiring an equal tax payment from individual men and corporations, assessed on intangible wealth as well as on tangible property, and secure its enactment into law. And, if by chance the statute runs the galling gantlet of the constitutional lawyers and the supreme courts, and the law is held valid and constitutional, and the tax is levied and assessed, then the certain special few upon whom the taxes will fall, in control of business and industry, production, transportation, and the distribution of the necessaries of life and what the people create with which to live, with the power of a king, with a flourish of a despot, shift the tax back upon the people, assessed and levied upon the vital necessaries of life, and makes the people pay the taxes which were assessed and levied for wealth and corporations to pay.

And when these two powers are combined, the taxing power with the economic or industrial power, the power to control business and industry, the power to control the supply and distribution of the vital necessaries of life, and exerted under one and the same control, they become a hidden, covered and concealed, a crushing, menacing force, an irresistible monster moving in the darkness, a rival power defying the Government itself. While the great taxing power, together with economic industrial power, the power to control production and distribution of the vital necessaries of life, both remain under one and the same control, there is no way provided under the power of the Government to enforce an equalization of the burdens of taxation. There is no way provided to enforce the levy and collection of equal taxes from men as individuals and less from corporations, capital, and wealth.

FORMER PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

I quote here from the Honorable Calvin Coolidge, former President of the United States, speaking upon another phase of taxation, but incidently observing, as follows:

> Taxing the rich to help the poor, the poor are not helped but hurt. Taxes have to be collected by the rich before they are paid. They are collected from all the people. A higher tax means real wages are lower. The costs of living are higher, the chance to work is less, every home is burdened, its value is decreased, the quality of the food, clothing, and shelter of the children is reduced.

This statement of the great former President is true and strongly and explicitly stated. I disagree with him only in one particular, as to the remedy. Instead of giving up the right to tax the rich because the rich compel the poor to pay it, I would search the Constitution, I would devise some means, method, or way whereby to tax the rich as well as the poor and to take the control of industry to tax the poor away from the rich and make the rich pay their own taxes.

DIFFERENT MEANS TO TAKE FROM PEOPLE

The people's earnings and income are taken from them in many different ways and by intricate, carefully considered, devised means and methods. What was taken from the people under despotic governments openly, with a brazen show of force, is now taken from them by stealth, artifice, and strategy under the intricate forms of specialized industry. What was once taken from the people as cringing serfs and subjects is now taken from them as dependent producers and helpless consumers. What was once taken from the people by kings, lords, and nobles, and the special ruling classes, is now taken from them by manipulating financiers and industrial monopolists. And what was once fair in love and war is now fair and honorable in business and industry in acquiring money and wealth.

THE KINGS OF OLD

The kings of old, as a class of men were the strong, shrewd, crafty, and resourceful—the men of mental power and vigor of their day, age, and generation. The great manipulating financiers, the industrial monopolists of today, are the same men only living in another age, only their operations have been transferred from open governmental activity to secret governmental and open industry. They are the kings, lords, and nobles of today, and from their economic thrones they are ruling with more absolute power than ever Caesar wielded. They are taking greater tribute than ever King Pharaoh exacted from the Hebrews under bondage in Egypt, and from which they are living in greater luxury and splendor than ever King Croesus lived in his gilded palaces of Lydia, than ever Belshazzar dwelt in the hanging gardens of Babylon.

SELFISH HUMAN NATURE

If we could speak of Christ in his human temporal relations, in his character as a man among men, it could be said that Christ was possessed of all the supermental powers and vigor of the kings who have ruled and ruined, but was wholly devoid and without semblance of the selfish impulse leading other kings to bloodshed, murder, and human slaughter to win fame and glory, and to pillage and plunder in quest of wealth and riches. It is this abnormal selfish impulse which is leading the kings of today to close their strangle hold on the throats of helpless humanity, in want, suffering, panic, and depression, under which to exact their industrial tribute in their invasion of the human race and the subjugation of the wealth of the world. While Christ has waged in the mind, heart, and conscience, and has built His kingdom to endure for time and the ages, for the rule and reign upon the earth of peace and good will among men, the economic and industrial kings of today are waging their conquest of exploitation of the many—the masses, the multitude—fomenting economic anarchy, industrial revolt, and lending its chaos to the overthrow of the existing order of things.

WEALTH A WORTHY AIM

I hope in my zeal to state the facts I shall not misstate my position and appear as opposing—in opposition to men, because of property and wealth—because the acquisition of property and wealth is prompted from a high, worthy aim and purpose, from a laudable ambition and motive. It is not my aim, object, and purpose to oppose any man or class of men who work more, produce more, and have more. The men I am opposing, in opposition to, are the men who work less, produce less, and claim and take more. And I would not even say these men, because of great wealth, are bad men. I would not go as far as Christ in this. They are not bad men—that is, measured by the moral standards of business integrity and industry today. I would not say these men are at all to blame. There are many things to justify them; they are doing only what other men today would do under like conditions and opportunities, under like environment, associations, and surroundings. They are taking all they can take. Most men would do that today under the impulse of abnormal, perverted, and overdeveloped selfish human nature.

THE BURDENED TO BLAME

I would further say that the men they take from are themselves to blame. God gave them the impulse of self-defense, the instinct of self-preservation, not only for the defense of themselves alone, but of those who by nature are dependent upon them. And our forefathers shed their blood and gave up their lives on the battlefields of the Revolution all that the many, the masses, might be assured and fortified to protect and defend themselves from the certain special few, in their natural and inalienable rights to live upon the earth, to labor to live, and to take the fruits of their toil and labor. The people of ancient times under kings were helpless, disarmed, without weapons or opportunity, held in the iron grasp of relentless military power from which there was no extrication or escape.

The people of today, with all the weapons placed in their hands, allow themselves to be led, swayed by the artful appeals to prejudice, and fail to use the means provided them for their defense.

The people of today are armed with the secret ballot. The opportunity for defense is open; it is theirs to use and exercise at will—the right to petition and assemble; to organize and mobilize for concerted action; to exert their united, combined strength and power. Their irresistible civil force and power is assured and guaranteed to them under the Constitution, written in the blood of martyred patriots and for which they fought and died. The downtrodden people of ancient times were not to blame; they were helpless. The people of today are to blame or, in a way, entitled to less sympathy. The people of today, under manipulating financiers and industrial monopolists, are held in subjection by strategy and subterfuge, by an artful appeal to prejudice, arraying them against each other to dissipate their strength and power in stupid conflict with each other and to exhaust and defeat themselves.

THE 10 CONTROLLING INDUSTRIES

Today a certain special few men, exerting the power of wealth and capital and by combinations in restraint of trade, are controlling industry and monopolizing production under a system of buying low and selling high. They are coercing the individual farmer to sell the products of the farm on a low-price level and to pay taxes and interest and fix charges and to buy his supplies and equipment on a high-price level. They are coercing the individual laboring man to sell his labor and services low and to buy back the necessaries of life weighted with profits, excessive and high. And thereby exhausting the individual man of his earnings and income and his means and power to buy, take, and consume what industry produces. And day by day and year by year the rich are growing richer, the poor are growing poorer, millions are multiplying on one hand and mendicants increasing on the other, and the people are suffering want and destitution in the midst of plenty and great abundance.

VICTIMS OF THEIR OWN INVENTIONS

The inventive genius and skill of the individual laboring man have brought and developed the automatic labor-saving machine to take the place and relieve mankind from toil, drudgery, and exhausting labor, and to make possible for men to enjoy more leisure time, to cultivate the mind, to care for the body while enjoying greater comforts and conveniences and some of the luxuries of life. But the certain special few men, the shrewd, crafty, and resourceful, have appropriated to themselves and are using the machine to take both the profits of capital and the labor earnings of industry; and the individual laboring man is left to suffer a victim from his own inventions, to be crowded from employment and opportunity to labor to live, and deprived of earnings and income with which to buy, take, and consume what industry produces, threatening to make him a cast-off and denied the right and opportunity to exist even for the use and service of others.

MANIPULATING VALUES

Millions of dollars are annually taken from the earnings and income of the people, hidden and covered and concealed in mystical transactions and transfer operations, under the intricate forms of stocks and bonds and corporation holdings, long obsolete and of minimum value to industry. And by over- and fictitious-valuations, by watering corporation stocks and bonds to make one dollar draw dividends for many, and by shifting and manipulating values, excessive profits and dividends, levied upon the necessaries of life which the people must use to live, are collected and taken from them without detection, hindrance, or protests. And the people are left buried in mystery, bewilderment, to realize only the high costs of living and the toil and drudgery of providing the necessaries of life and the burden to carry in living, and to provide for those by nature dependent upon them.

INDUSTRIAL GAMBLING

Under the evils of our system of industry and lax industrial morals and lax law enforcement, against crimes violating industrial justice and right, all the necessaries and comforts of life, and all the conveniences of life, and the 1,001 articles devised and produced to sooth, heal, and bless, are left exposed and subject to gambling, speculating operations, and to be held for ransom and the payment of excessive profits and burdensome charges. This is a system which will some day be looked back upon with as much revulsion as prison for debt or involuntary servitude and the traffic in human beings.

Every gambling operation, whether in corporation stocks or bonds or on the grain or produce markets, and every speculative transaction where men make quick wealth and acquire sudden fortunes without creating or earning the wealth or property taken, robs the people of their earnings and income and of the means and power to take, use, and consume what industry produces. Because some men must pay for, some men must labor to produce, what the gambler or speculator takes and all of which is levied and collected from the ultimate consumers and is taken from their earnings and income. Wealth is not made or created suddenly, by magic, overnight, as the gambler makes it, as the speculator takes it, as the monopolist grasps and holds it. The creation of wealth and property is a slow, tedious, and laborious process, the fruits of painful toil and strenuous labor. It can be stolen or taken quickly by robbers, gamblers, and manipulators, but only time and toil can make it.

BURDENS UNDER NEW FORM

The immortal Shakespeare, speaking of the antagonisms and resentments of men, said that there was method in their madness. And there is premeditation and method in the mad, modern craze for money and riches. There is foresight and method; there are plans, preparation, and systems in the greedy, frenzied haste for quick wealth and swollen fortunes whereby to take from the people their earnings and income. And they are continuously inventing, preparing new plans and new methods to meet new and changed conditions, new forms of monopoly, new forms of gambling operations, new forms of speculative transactions, new means and methods to take from the people their earnings and income. History shows that men have struggled to throw off and extricate themselves from one imposition or evil only to find themselves suffering from the same burdens under other and different forms.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday next be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, there is a great demand for consideration of the Private Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order tomorrow, after the day's session, to move to take a recess until 7:30 o'clock p.m. for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will not the gentleman make that Wednesday and Thursday nights?

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot do that, because other gentlemen object to Wednesday.

Mr. BLANTON. I am one of those who does a lot of hard work on this calendar. I cannot be here tomorrow night, as I have already made other appointments, and I ask the gentleman to fix it for some other night.

Mr. BYRNS. It was my hope that the House would meet Tuesday and Thursday and have two night sessions for the consideration of this calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not mind coming here at night on Wednesday and Thursday and Friday and Saturday, one or all of them, but I had made other appointments for tomorrow night and cannot be here then.

Mr. BYRNS. But other gentlemen object to Wednesday night.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I shall have to object to tomorrow night. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. That is all right. I have made the request.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE SABINE, TEX.

The Clerk called the first bill, H.R. 4870, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There is no objection.

DECLARATION OF INTENTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8317, to extend the validity of declarations of intention beyond 7 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN NATIONAL FORESTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Are any private lands involved in this? Do they propose to exchange public lands for private lands?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In connection with all these forest exchange bills now on the statute books, necessarily they involved the right of the Department of Agriculture to exchange forest lands for privately owned lands. There could not be any exchange unless private lands could be exchanged for Government lands. This law has worked satisfactorily in Montana and four other States for the past 5 years. My bill is an exact copy of the Montana bill which has been in effect for 5 years, without objection whatsoever.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If this bill becomes law and the Government takes over this property, the Government is not going to be required to pay taxes as it did in the Oregon cases, is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This bill is very similar to the bills that we have passed, on the same subject, for other States, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there was one objection to this bill previously, and I think three objections are required.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Three objections are required.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit that to be passed over without prejudice, and perhaps we can look over the matter and agree to it. Otherwise we will have to object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You think you can get three objections today, do you?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes, we can get three.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish some gentleman, in addition to objecting to this bill, would say why, and give some reason for objecting.

Mr. TRUAX. I will give the gentleman some reasons.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman is going to give me some experience that he has had, I suppose.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will consent to the passing over of this bill until one more unanimous-consent call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado, that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF FOREST EXCHANGE ACT OF MARCH 20, 1922

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5368, to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465).

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] to the fact that this bill is similar to the one just passed over, except that this applies to all forests.

I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RADIO ACT OF 1927

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2660, to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162).

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

There was no objection.

EXPENSES OF REPRESENTATIVES TO ISTANBUL, TURKEY

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 295, authorizing appropriation for expenses of representatives of United States to meet at Istanbul, Turkey, with representatives of Turkish Republic for purpose of examining claims of either Government against the other and for expense of proceedings before an umpire, if necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a $90,000 junket to Turkey, as I consider it, and I object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I object.

ANOTHER MEMBER. I object.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLANTON. No; we want to dispose of it now. This bill would take $90,000 out of the Treasury, and, in my judgment, it would be wasted and is wholly unnecessary, and we have enough votes now to kill it, and we ought to dispose of it now. I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, in my judgment, we should take care of our own people at home before we take care of those in Turkey.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is just what this bill does. Claims of American citizens are pending over there.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, three objections have been made, which knocks the bill off the calendar.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, why should we not appoint a commission, then, to go to England, and France, and all the other defaulters?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, three objections have been made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I object.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MOUNT HOOD NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1506, to amend the United States mining laws applicable to the Mount Hood National Forest within the State of Oregon.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the present status of the law and what change this bill will make?

Mr. DEROUEN. I shall be glad to. This is a Senate bill, which has already passed the Senate. It has to do with amending the mining law insofar as it concerns the Mount Hood National Forest only. It is a very desirable bill, because it is a protection to the miners and to the Government itself. The mining laws are frequently employed——

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What are the rights of the people who go upon the national forests now, as to mining and cutting off timber?

Mr. DEROUEN. That is corrected in this bill. It does not attempt to do that. It applies only to the Mount Hood National Park. That is all it does.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Do I gather correctly that this bill provides that anyone who goes in there to mine can only cut off sufficient timber for mining purposes?

Mr. DEROUEN. That is correct.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. They cannot go in there generally and take off the timber?

Mr. DEROUEN. No. That is just for this purpose. That is correct.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter mining locations made under the United States mining laws upon lands within the Mount Hood National Forest in the State of Oregon shall confer on the locator the right to occupy and use so much of the surface of the land covered by the location as may be reasonably necessary to carry on prospecting and mining, including the taking of mineral deposits and timber required by or in the mining operations, and no permit shall be required or charge made for such use or occupancy: Provided, however, That the cutting and removal of timber, except where clearing is necessary in connection with mining operations or to provide space for buildings or structures used in connection with mining operations, shall be conducted in accordance with the rules for timber cutting on adjoining national-forest land, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining or prospecting shall be allowed except under the national-forest rules and regulations, nor shall the locator prevent or obstruct other occupancy of the surface or use of surface resources under authority of national-forest regulations, or permits issued thereunder, if such occupancy or use is not in conflict with mineral development.

SEC. 2. That hereafter all patents issued under the United States mining laws affecting lands within the Mount Hood National Forest within the State of Oregon shall convey title to the mineral deposits within the claim, together with the right to cut and remove so much of the timber therefrom as may be needed in extracting and removing the mineral deposits, if the timber is cut under sound principles of forest management as defined by the national-forest rules and regulations, but each patent shall reserve to the United States all title in or to the surface of the lands and products thereof, and no use of the surface of the claim or the resources therefrom not reasonably required for carrying on mining or prospecting shall be allowed except under the rules and regulations of the Forest Service.

SEC. 3. That valid mining claims within the Mount Hood National Forest in the State of Oregon existing on the date of enactment of this act, and thereafter maintained in compliance with the law under which they were initiated and the laws of the State of Oregon, may be perfected under this act, or under the law under which they were initiated, as the claimant may desire.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SCHOOL AT GENOA, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7241, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey the lands and property used for the United States Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., to the State of Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2566, now on the Speaker's table, may be substituted for the pending House bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I note on page 2, line 19, the bill provides—

That as a condition precedent to this grant, Indians residing within the State of Nebraska will be accepted in State institutions on entire equality with persons of other races, and without cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that we propose to offer a committee amendment prepared by the Department which will make the bill satisfactory.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared an amendment, which I think is necessary, providing not only as a condition precedent but that in consideration of this grant that the State take these children over.

Will the gentleman accept such an amendment?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think that would be acceptable to the State or to the Department either. The amendment I intend to offer was prepared jointly by myself and the Department.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over at the present time, to be returned to later when the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Nebraska have reached an agreement as to the proposed amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4935, to amend the act of May 25, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Mammoth Cave National Park in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until we find out what the gentleman proposes to do.

Mr. CARY. I propose to ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the pending House bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Are the bills identical?

Mr. CARY. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill provide an allowance for the purchase of these lands to extend the park through the use of P.W.A. funds?

Mr. CARY. No; it does not. Practically all these lands were purchased with State funds. The State of Kentucky has expended $1,500,000; and a few months ago the Legislature of Kentucky appropriated another $250,000 to make the necessary additional purchases.

Mr. ELTSE of California. No application has been made for P.W.A. funds?

Mr. CARY. I do not know whether any application has been made or not. There are two C.C.C. camps located in this area and those boys are doing some work there.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Section 2 of the House bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept donations.

Mr. CARY. Those are donations from the State of Kentucky; then there are some funds now in the hands of the Kentucky Park Commission representing receipts from these caves. The caves are producing about $75,000 a year in the way of revenue. This park will be absolutely self-sustaining after the State of Kentucky has invested its money in it for the purpose of purchasing the lands which will be turned over to the Government and the proceeds used to operate the park.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 618 for the pending House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second and third provisos of section 3 of the act of May 25, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Mammoth Cave National Park in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes" be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows: "And provided further, That the minimum area to be administered and protected by the National Park Service shall be for the said Mammoth Cave National Park, 20,000 acres: Provided further, That no general development of said area shall be undertaken until a major portion of the remainder in such area, including all the caves thereof, shall have been accepted by said Secretary, and he shall have established a schedule of fees for admission to such caves."

SEC. 2. That in the establishment of the said Mammoth Cave National Park the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of money for the acquisition of lands and rights therein and to acquire the same by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SCHOOL AT GENOA, NEBR.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska and I have discussed our respective amendments to the bill (H.R. 7241) relating to the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 163, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey the lands and property used for the United States Indian School at Genoa, Nebr., to the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a similar Senate bill will be substituted.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Nebraska for institutional purposes the property known and designated as the "Genoa Indian School", located at Genoa, Nebr., such grant to include the land and buildings and such equipment as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That this grant may be effective at any time prior to July 1, 1934, if before that date the Governor of the State of Nebraska on behalf of the State files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the right is reserved by the Secretary of the Interior to retain until July 1, 1934, dormitory and other space needed for the housing and care of Indian pupils now accommodated at said school: Provided further, That as a condition precedent to this grant Indians residing within the State of Nebraska will be accepted in State institutions on entire equality with persons of other races, and without cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not quite understand the situation. I did not know that a Senate bill was to be substituted.

Mr. HOWARD. The committee amendment was prepared to be offered to the Senate bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then the understanding is that the gentleman will offer an amendment to the Senate bill?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; the committee amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What would be the advantage of subsituting a Senate bill if it must be amended?

Mr. HOWARD. The bill has already passed the Senate; it makes it much easier.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Very well. It appears that these gentlemen understand each other. I do not quite understand it.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD: On page 2, line 7, commencing with the word "and", strike out the balance of the line and all of line 8, and in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following: "except that tuition of Indian children in public schools may be paid by the Federal Government: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting the right-of-way heretofore applied for by and agreed to be granted to the Loup River public power district in Nebraska across said school property, and an easement over the land falling within said right-of-way is hereby granted to said Loup River public power district in Nebraska upon proper identification thereof through survey."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL AT OR NEAR OLD ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 302, authorizing the creation of a Federal memorial commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the western bank of the Mississippi River at or near the site of old St. Louis, Mo., of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Thomas Jefferson and his aids, Livingston and Monroe, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and to the great explorers Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has a rule on this bill. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice under the rule.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. May I say to the gentleman from California that this is a very important resolution and practically every Member west of the Mississippi River should be interested. This resolution seeks to create a commission to investigate the advisability of erecting a memorial in honor of the Louisiana Purchase and those responsible, Jefferson and others.

Mr. ELTSE of California. How much is this going to cost?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There is not a provision in the bill that carries one dollar of appropriation.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But this is the opening wedge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I could not say that.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The gentleman stated the last time this resolution was up that it was the opening wedge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not say that the Government at some future date might not be asked to contribute in part. It is to commemorate a national event of great importance. The Government should be interested in a matter of this kind.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is not the gentleman willing to have the bill come up under the rule?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think the resolution is so meritorious that it should be passed at this time by unanimous consent. We have precedent after precedent for the passage of resolutions of this character.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? Three objections are required.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. TABER objected.

MONUMENT IN MEMORY OF COL. ROBERT INGERSOLL

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 21, authorizing the erection in Washington, D.C., of a monument in memory of Col. Robert Ingersoll.

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. JENKINS of Ohio objected.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentlemen state their reasons for objecting.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think that is necessary.

INTERSTATE LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE BUREAU

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 19, to make available to Congress the services and data of the Interstate Legislative Reference Bureau.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That upon acceptance of the provisions of this joint resolution by the American Legislators' Association it shall be the duty of the Interstate Legislative Reference Bureau of such association, upon request therefor, to make its services and its indices, digests, compilations, bulletins, and other data available to either House of Congress, its committees, and Members, and to the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, and to act as a clearing house in making so available such data of the legislative reference bureaus of the several States and such data of other research agencies. For carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and for each fiscal year thereafter, the sum of $40,000 to be expended by the American Legislators' Association for the maintenance of said Interstate Legislative Reference Bureau; except that the amount appropriated for any fiscal year shall not be in excess of the aggregate amount provided by other sources for such purposes for such fiscal year and except that commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the amount appropriated for any fiscal year shall not be in excess of the aggregate amount that the several States have provided or obligated themselves to provide for such purposes for such fiscal year. The appropriations made pursuant to this joint resolution shall be disbursed by the Librarian of Congress.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOREST GROVE, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7185, to authorize the purchase by the city of Forest Grove, Oreg., of certain tracts of public lands and certain tracts revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218).

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of this bill to explain just what it is?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill authorizing a municipality in Oregon to purchase Government land for the protection of its watershed. The land surrounding the city of Forest Grove is owned by the Government and it is mostly cut-over land. In order to protect their watershed they must get this all in one area and build a fence around the land.

Mr. TRUAX. The city is to provide the funds for the purchase of this land at $2.50 per acre?

Mr. MOTT. That is correct.

Mr. TRUAX. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent, upon payment of $2.50 per acre, or fraction thereof, to the city of Forest Grove, Oreg., for the northwest quarter of section 14, township 1 north, range 5 west, Washington County, Oreg., containing in the aggregate 160 acres subject to all valid existing rights at the time of the filing of the application by the city of Forest Grove.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOISE NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7927, to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in the report on this bill there is a statement that it is proposed to add 272,340 acres, of which approximately 95,000 acres are publicly owned. How is it proposed to acquire the balance of the land?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this land is necessary to consolidate the national forest in an area in order to protect the watershed of the capital city of Idaho, Boise. It is also necessary for the protection of the watershed for the vast irrigation district in the Boise Valley.

This has been through the Committee on Public Lands, and approved by them as well as by the Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, and memorialized by the Legislature of the State of Idaho. This is to permit the consolidation of this land by the Forestry Department. There is no money involved in the matter. There may be some land exchanges in different sections within the boundaries of the national forest.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I refer again to the statement in the report that only 95,000 acres of the 272,000 acres are publicly owned at the present time.

Mr. WHITE. The land referred to is not now within the national forest, and this will extend the national-forest boundaries so that consolidation and exchanges may be made between the privately owned land and publicly owned land.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not see anything in the bill that permits exchanges. This must be a question of purchase.

Mr. WHITE. There is a clause in there which permits exchanges, because it is subject to a previous act which does permit these exchanges.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield to me before he makes that request?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TRUAX. I should like to ask the gentleman from Idaho how much of this land is publicly owned and how much is privately owned now?

Mr. WHITE. That is stated in the report.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Ninety-five thousand acres publicly owned out of a total of 272,340.

Mr. TRUAX. And under this bill the United States Government will purchase that land eventually?

Mr. WHITE. The Government will not purchase it, but will exchange other land for it. Under the terms of the law they are exchanging timber for the privately owned land and taking in new land that needs forest protection where there is new growth which requires such protection.

Mr. TRUAX. Is it exchanged on the same basis as the exchange embodied in the bill of the gentleman from Colorado, where the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to transfer land now owned by the Government for other land without any appraisal body or any other agency?

Mr. WHITE. No; the exchanges proposed are the same exchanges now going on in the national forests under the operation of the general exchange act. This simply provides a boundary within which such exchanges will be permitted.

Mr. TRUAX. Who determines the value of the land that is to be exchanged?

Mr. WHITE. The Secretary of Agriculture through the officers of the Forest Service. They are the men who will determine this, and the State of Idaho, for the protection of irrigation districts and the protection of the Boise Watershed, has memorialized Congress to pass such legislation to protect these lands from the ravages of fire.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman from Idaho that I shall not object to his bill, but I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks it is good business policy for this Government to place all such authority in the hands of a Cabinet officer who must delegate this authority to some understrapper to go out and exchange land without any appraisal body or any other agency to protect the interests of the Government of the United States?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what he means by an "understrapper"?

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman there are a lot of them in the Department of Agriculture and a good many of them are from Wall Street, United States of America. They are administering the Farm Relief Act. However, I have no objection to the gentleman's bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 14 OF THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5334, to amend the third clause of section 14 of the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 359; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 226).

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third clause of section 14, act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 359; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 226), is hereby amended by the addition of the following sentence: "Provided, That publications produced by the stencil, mimeograph, or hectograph process or in imitation of typewriting shall not be regarded as printed within the meaning of this clause."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOREIGN MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7340, to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredations upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or carrier, or an agent or employee thereof.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in reading over the bill it seems to me to be very far-reaching and to place a lot of arbitrary power in the hands of the Postmaster General, which he has not had heretofore.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, the bill does not place any further power, but simply clarifies existing legislation.

Mr. ELTSE of California. May I ask the gentleman the purpose of having the first sentence on page 2, in view of the matter contained in the second?

Mr. ROMJUE. The present law, if the gentleman will permit, gives the Department this power except it is not as clear as it ought to be and the Post Office Department is continually in controversy and discussion as to liability.

This bill merely amends existing law by clarifying the language of the law.

The gentleman will observe that the present law states that the Postmaster General may impose or remit fines on contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States for any unreasonable or unnecessary delay to such mails and for other delinquencies in the transportation of the mails.

This is present law and this bill clarifies the law and makes it definite and certain. The Postmaster General will only be able to serve the public better than ever before; his administration is one of public service and not power.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Where the mails are damaged due to the negligence of the contractor, the bill gives power to take care of that situation, which cannot be done under present law.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania why cannot that be done under the second sentence on page 2, with respect to such contractors or carriers? There is a general liability imposed there on account of failure to exercise due care.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is no provision of law now to make a contractor responsible for loss or damage in transit to mail due to his own negligence. This is simply a minor addition, which gives the Department power which we think rightly belongs to it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Does the Postmaster General at the present time have power to impose and remit fines as provided in the lines at the top of page 2?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Not for loss and damage to the mails in transit.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But he does have power to impose and remit fines with respect to other delinquencies?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. For delays, and so forth; yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. I notice Calendar No. 197, H.R. 7299, and from a hurried reading it would seem to include the same matter. What is the difference between the two?

Mr. ROMJUE. I think that bill involves the railroads and water transportation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the bill H.R. 7299 is passed is there any need of this bill being passed?

Mr. ROMJUE. If you wanted to incorporate the other bill into this you would only have another method of transportation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 7088, to amend the provisions of laws relating to appointment of postmasters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, this bill provides that the Postmaster General may, at the expiration of the term of a postmaster, appoint an acting postmaster. Heretofore, I understand, he has not had that authority. I do know that in many instances he has appointed acting postmasters at the expiration of the term. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee under what authority the Postmaster General has been making these appointments of acting postmasters at the expiration of the term of the postmaster?

The reason for asking the question is this: In the civil-service examination, which is held later on, experience is given a high rating, and it is almost inevitable that the person who is appointed acting postmaster, having had 4 or 5 months' experience, will be no. 1 man, and so the appointments are made not on the basis of merit but on political expediency.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it has been the practice under Republican administration to have postmasters resign and appoint acting postmasters for the past 12 years. If the gentleman will examine many civil-service examinations, where the three eligibles did not happen to meet the requirements of the appointing power, the examination was obliterated, wiped out, and a new examination was held, and new examinations were continued to be held until there were three eligibles that met with the requirements.

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. I want to say that the Postmaster General has always had the authority to request a resignation at the expiration of the postmaster's term of service. If that resignation was not made, he could remove the postmaster for cause.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is an answer to my question in one particular. What I should like to know is what authority the Postmaster General has in cases where there has been no resignation.

Mr. ROMJUE. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might say in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that during the few years that I have been in Congress I have never known such an instance, but I do have in mind in my own particular town in 1921 a postmaster who had been appointed by a previous administration was allowed to hold over until his successor had qualified, but now it seems to be the practice to immediately appoint an acting postmaster.

Mr. ROMJUE. I think this is the situation. I have been in this House some time and have many friends here whose valuable public service I appreciate, but I will say this to the gentleman. He asks by what authority, and so forth. I want to give the gentleman all of the history of handling postmasterships in this country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should be glad to have the gentleman tell the history of it if by so doing he will answer my question.

Mr. ROMJUE. I shall do it in my own language and not in the gentleman's language; a Missourian speaks for Missouri and himself. I was here during Mr. Wilson's administration, the second administration, and I remember that Mr. Wilson put the postmasters of this country under civil-service regulations, and he made a regulation that the man who made the highest grade secured the appointment to the post office, without regard to politics or party service. I did not like that rule. In many ways I admired President Wilson, but I belong to the Andrew Jackson philosophy or rule.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That was an advisory regulation, was it not?

Mr. ROMJUE. I spoke a dozen times to Mr. Burleson, the Postmaster General. I told him I thought there ought to be a modification so that you could take one from the three highest in grade from an examination, and I said, "If we Democrats cannot get one out of three, we ought not to have the post office"; but Mr. Burleson stood fast, and in a number of instances Republican postmasters were appointed. For instance, in Brookfield, which was not then at that time in my district, one of the best post offices in northern Missouri was given to the Republicans, and, so far as I know, some Democrats there who now profess their democracy did not even object; and, as a matter of fact, the regulation ought to have been modified. I said then that I believed that the party in power ought to have the privilege of holding these responsible positions, and I still think so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And may I say to the gentleman—and I refuse to yield longer—I hope the time will come when all of these postmasterships will be taken out of the spoils system.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If Gen. Albert Burleson, a Texas man, ever put a Republican in office during a Democratic administration he made a mistake, and I do not approve of it; but we have learned something since then from our brother Republicans, and we are not going to put any more in if we can help it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. He may have made a political mistake, but the gentleman must admit that he had a good man in there if he appointed a Republican. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman defer that for a moment and yield to me?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. In order to explain this bill. I introduced it. It is an economy measure. The Democrats want to save money for the taxpayers, and we are actually saving money for the Department. Under the present law when the term of office of a postmaster expires, unless he resigns it is necessary for the Post Office Department to summarily remove him. Now, when his term expires it is not necessary for the Post Office Department to carry on correspondence or spend a lot of money for telegrams threatening that it will remove him and ultimately effecting a removal. I ask the gentleman in the interest of economy to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand it, this bill is designed to make it possible for the Postmaster General to name immediately an acting postmaster.

Mr. ROMJUE. He may or he may not.

Mr. TRUAX. It is not mandatory?

Mr. ROMJUE. Not at all; it is optional and that is right.

Mr. TRUAX. Did this bill originate in the Post Office Department and has it the approval of Postmaster General Farley?

Mr. ROMJUE. It did not have its origin in the Post Office Department but it is approved by the Post Office Department. Postmaster General Farley is saving this Government and the taxpayers a vast amount of money and is deserving and receiving just credit therefor.

Mr. TRUAX. I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] if he is the sponsor for official legislation from the Post Office Department? He says that he wants to take it out of politics. Under the present regulation it is possible for the Democratic Party to secure the appointment of a postmaster now and then. I should like to see them secure more. If this bill has the approval of the Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, I have no objection to it. If it does not have his approval, I object to the bill.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOURLY RATES OF PAY, SUBSTITUTE LABORERS, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7213, to provide hourly rates of pay for substitute laborers in the Railway Mail Service and time credits when appointed as regular laborers.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1925, is amended by inserting after the fourth paragraph of such section (43 Stat. 1053; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 607) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Substitute laborers in the Railway Mail Service shall be paid for services actually performed at the rate of 55 cents per hour, and when appointed to the position of regular laborer the substitute service performed shall be included in eligibility for promotion to grade 2 on the basis of 306 days of 8 hours constituting a year's service."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NINTH PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 59, to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think some more time should be given to this bill. I have not been completely satisfied by reading the report that there is a particular necessity for the expenditure of this money. I do not want to say that it provides for a junket trip, until I am better informed.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am sorry the gentleman has not had an opportunity to read the report thoroughly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will withdraw that statement, I have read the report thoroughly and I said I had not been convinced from the report that there was any need for the appropriation of this sum.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am sorry I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand there are several Members here waiting, and I am going to ask for the regular order.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Well, I object to the gentleman "butting in" on me and taking me off my feet this way.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The regular order is that I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I just want to say that this bill was reported out unanimously by the committee. It is considered very important for the health of this country. Secretary of State Hull recommends it very highly. It has the unanimous report of the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], sitting by the gentleman from Michigan, knows that. Mr. Hull, Secretary of State, says in this report:

I regard the work of these conferences and of the Sanitary Bureau as being highly meritorious in character and urge the approval of this relatively small expenditure for delegates to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference, which is tentatively scheduled to meet in Buenos Aires in November 1934.

The main purposes of this conference are, first, to prevent the introduction of epidemic diseases from one American republic to another.

Second, it is to obviate the necessity for costly quarantines against infected ports which would operate against vessels and other common carriers and against passengers and their effects.

Third, it is to stimulate health authorities in all the American republics to greater effort in the eradication of disease.

It is purely on the ground of trying to protect the health of the people of this country from contagious diseases that come from South American countries.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask if the gentleman would object to passing this over for a short time until we have an opportunity to look into it a little bit, and perhaps we can get together?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee how many delegates or representatives are included?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Three. Surgeon General Cumming, I presume, will be one of them.

Mr. TRUAX. I notice in the report that the attendance at this conference is partly to prevent a contagion of yellow fever in this country?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman think it might be more important to take notice now of the spread of amoebic dysentery that occurred in this country last year and is likely to occur again in a delegation of this sort?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman has no objection to taking all means to prevent that, of course, but that is not before this House any more than the gentleman's farm bill is before the House.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, my farm bill ought to be before the House.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that we made a commitment or a quasi-commitment at the Havana Conference to do our part to participate and help prevent the spreading of this disease from one nation to another?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is in the agreement of November 14, 1924.

Mr. FISH. Of course, it being a Republican agreement, the gentleman, of course, will agree to that?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Has the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who has been an active member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for many years, ever checked up the number of junkets that the various officials of the State Department take every year to almost every foreign country in the world? If the gentleman has not done so, he should do so, and he will find some very enlightening information.

Mr. FISH. What I am complaining about is that I have been on that committee for 14 years, and nobody has yet asked me to go on a junket.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about officials in the State Department. There are more of them junketing every year than from any other department in the Government. I have been checking up on them for 15 years.

Mr. FISH. I cannot talk as fast as the gentleman can. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that under the distinguished leadership of the great Democrat from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] we have not had any more of this legislation, so I think the gentleman should be kind-hearted and let this little bill of only $3,000 go through.

Mr. BLANTON. I was watching it when our good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] was chairman of the committee. I was watching it when the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers] was in charge of the committee. I have been watching it for 15 years. And I know what these repeated junkets by the State Department have cost the Government.

Mr. FISH. Oh, but you have brought about a change of policy. Now we have an entirely new deal—no more junkets.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a fact, these junkets must stop. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question. Has anyone here, particularly the gentleman from New York, who knows there are thousands of undernourished babies in his great city—has anyone here the figures as to how many quarts of milk this $9,000 would buy to take care of those babies?

Mr. BLANTON. It is only $3,000; but this $3,000 every year, added to the many other State Department junkets, aggregates quite a large sum annually. One bill on this calendar asks for $90,000 for a junket to Turkey.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

MOTOR VEHICLES SEIZED FOR VIOLATION OF CUSTOMS LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7302, to authorize the Postmaster General to receive, operate, and to maintain for official purposes, motor vehicles seized for violation of the customs laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCREYNOLDS). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it has been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations not to furnish motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for the Post Office Department. This bill would entirely change the program. It provides for just such service in the Post Office Department. I see our good friend, the able Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], in the Chamber. I should like to ask him just what he thinks of this bill as affecting the policy of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I say to my colleague that I do not think it ought to be passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I intend to object, but I reserve my objection and yield to the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, so that he may state his views.

Mr. ROMJUE. That is all right in a way, but I want to ask the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee a question or two myself. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] states that he does not think this a good policy. This bill has the approval of the Post Office Committee and of the Post Office Department. Mr. Farley generally knows what he is doing and is in close touch with Mr. Roosevelt. The Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations no doubt is aware of the fact that both the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice or State Department have this same privilege now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Which ought to be taken away from them.

Mr. ROMJUE. Possibly that answers the question; I do not think so. The gentleman states that it ought to be taken away from them, yet he has never protested against it. Why did he not do so, or why can he give the privilege to one department and deny it to another?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The matter has never come before me for attention.

Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that the Government has never provided passenger automobile service for the rural service of the Post Office Department. It has provided passenger automobile service in the District, but never in the country.

If we allow the taking-over of automobiles condemned for the violation of certain laws, we will get passenger automobile service throughout the Postal Service of the country, and the appropriation it will eventually involve will be enormous.

Another thing, if we take over these condemned second-hand cars, the upkeep will be too high and appeals for new cars will be made to the Appropriations Committee because the cost of the upkeep of these condemned cars is too expensive.

Mr. BLANTON. And this bill authorizes the Post Office Department to pay off mortgages existing against the cars it takes over.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly. The bill also provides that the appropriation for the maintenance of cars shall be available to pay for the seizure and condemnation proceedings on these cars. It provides, further, that it shall be available to pay any liens on these cars, thus transferring the expenses of the Customs Service to the Post Office Department in condemnation proceedings on the cars, incurring additional bookkeeping and accounting, and rendering accurate estimates and appropriations impossible.

Mr. ROMJUE. It costs nothing for these cars. They should be be used in Government service when it costs nothing.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

SALE OF TIMBER ON QUINAULT INDIAN RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8494, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of existing contracts for the sale of timber on the Quinault Indian Reservation when it is in the interest of the Indians so to do.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians involved, expressed through a regularly called general council, and of the purchasers, is hereby authorized and directed to modify the terms of now-existing and uncompleted contracts of sale of Indian tribal timber on the Quinault Indian Reservation in the State of Washington: Provided, That any such modifications shall be upon the express condition that said purchaser shall forthwith proceed to operate under all the terms of said contract as modified or suffer forfeiture of such contract and collection upon bond: And provided further, That any modification of said contracts shall stipulate that in the event of sufficiently improved economic conditions the Secretary of the Interior with the consent of the said general council is authorized and directed, after consultation with the purchasers and the Indians involved and after 90 days' notice to them, to increase stumpage prices of timber reduced in any such modified contract: And provided further, That hereafter no contract of sale of Indian timber on the Quinault Indian Reservation in Washington shall be entered into without the consent of the said general council.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior may modify existing contracts between individual Indian allottees or their heirs and purchasers of their timber, under the terms and requirements of section 1 of this act, with the consent of the allottee or his heirs.

SEC. 3. In all such modified contracts the purchasers of Indian timber on tribal lands or on restricted or trust allotments in all operations pertaining to the logging and manufacturing of said timber shall be required to give preference to the employment of Indian labor.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "and directed."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Washington: Page 2, after line 24, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 4. That any modification of the contract with the Ozette Railway Co. shall stipulate that that company shall haul logs of other timber owners on its railroad line, as freight, for such other owners with its ordinary equipment and at reasonable charges when such logs are tendered to it at places on its railroad line designated by such company, and its railroad shall be, and become, a common carrier railroad and be extended to the Hoh River and be a common carrier railroad for its entire length."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE INSPECTORS AND CHIEF CLERKS, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6675, to authorize the acknowledgment of oaths by post-office inspectors and by chief clerks of the Railway Mail Service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That post-office inspectors are empowered and authorized with like force and effect as officers having a seal to administer oaths required or authorized by law or regulation promulgated thereunder in respect of any matter coming before them in the performance of their official duties and likewise oaths to accounts for travel or other expenses against the United States, but no compensation or fee shall be demanded or accepted for administering any such oaths. Chief clerks and assistant chief clerks in the Railway Mail Service are required, empowered, and authorized, when requested, to administer oaths to employees on appointment or promotion and to accounts for travel or other expenses against the United States with like force and effect as officers having a seal: Provided, That for such service no charge shall be made and no fee or money paid for such service shall be paid or reimbursed by the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOTTERIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7023, to amend section 213, United States Penal Code, as amended.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object and I hope no other Member will object to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Is the gentleman in favor of lotteries?

Mr. TRUAX. No; the gentleman is in favor——

Mr. BLANTON. First, I should like to ask the gentleman if the gentleman is in favor of Government lotteries?

Mr. TRUAX. I insist on answering the gentleman's first question and answering it in my own way. That is the way the gentleman from Texas always answers questions asked of him.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I should like to ask the gentleman this——

Mr. TRUAX. No; that is not satisfactory.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill. I am against all lotteries.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection, I will answer him.

Mr. BLANTON. No. I object to this bill which recognizes lotteries as lawful. I am against all kinds of lotteries.

Mr. TRUAX. I am not. I am for the American Legion, the Eagles, the Moose——

Mr. BLANTON. I am for the American Legion and fraternal organizations also, but I am against lotteries. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7711, to permit postmasters to act as disbursing officers for the payment of traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Postal Service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That those parts of the acts of May 4, 1882 (22 Stat. 54), July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 156), July 28, 1916 (39 Stat. 418), and June 3, 1924 (43 Stat. 356), which are incorporated in section 50 of title 39 of the United States Code are amended to read as follows:

"Postmasters may be designated by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of mail messengers and others engaged under their supervision in transporting the mails. He may also designate postmasters at Presidential post offices as disbursing officers for the payment of the salaries of the officers and employees of the Postal Service concerned in the transportation of mails or in their distribution in transit, and for such other payments as they are authorized to make from postal revenues, and he may designate postmasters at money-order post offices as disbursing officers for the payment of the salaries and traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Postal Service, and for such other payments as postmasters are authorized to make from postal revenues."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MINING CLAIMS IN UNITED STATES AND ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2313, providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment here that will cut down the size of the claims that will be exempted from improvement or assessment work; and unless the amendment is accepted, I shall object. The amendment merely cuts down the size of the claims that will come within the exemption.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the year beginning at 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1933, and ending at 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1934: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1933: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1934, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant or claimants were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1933: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than six mining claims held by the same person nor to more than twelve mining claims held by the same partnership, association, or corporation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ZIONCHECK: On page 2, line 13, insert, after the word "six", the word "lode", and in line 14, after the word "twelve", insert the word "lode."

In line 15, strike out the period at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 placer mining claims, not to exceed 120 acres in all, held by the same person nor to more than 12 placer mining claims, not to exceed 240 acres, held by the same partnership, association, or corporation."

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman what was inserted before the figures 6 and 12.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The amendment provides that the restrictions on the placer claims will be made in line with the lode claims.

Mr. ELTSE of California. What was the word that was inserted?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Lode. For the further information of the Members, may I say it seems that it was possible for an association or group of 8 people to file 1 joint claim on 160 acres, and under the wording of this bill it is possible to exempt 12 such claims, or a total of 1,920 acres. That permits a large mining company to hold a lot of mines without putting improvements in them. This amendment merely provides that large companies may not take advantage over the small ones.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING SITE, FINDLAY, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8909, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to amend the contract for sale of post-office building and site at Findlay, Ohio.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to agree to an amendment to the existing contract between the city of Findlay, Ohio, and the United States of America for the sale of the old post-office site and building at Findlay, Ohio, for the sum of $50,000, negotiated on the basis of one fourth cash and the balance in equal installments payable in 3, 6, 9, and 12 months with interest on deferred payments payable quarterly at 5 percent per annum; the amended contract to provide that payment may be made in five annual installments of $10,000 each, with interest at the rate of 5 percent per annum on the unpaid balance: Provided, That such extension of time for payment shall be effective upon date of execution of amended contract between the city of Findlay and the United States of America:

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, at the end of the line insert "Provided further, That the provisions of the original contract between the city of Findlay, Ohio, and the United States of America shall not be modified, except as herein specified."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEE FOR DOMESTIC REGISTERED MAIL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7301.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill for a brief statement on the merits of the bill, and as to whether or not this has been approved by Postmaster General Farley?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. It is approved by the Post Office Department Administration.

Mr. TRUAX. What is that?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. It was drafted at their request.

Mr. TRUAX. By what official?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. By the Postmaster General and all his assistants.

Mr. TRUAX. I notice in connection with some of the Post Office bills the name of the Solicitor General, Carl Crowley, of Texas, a gentleman for whom I have the highest respect. His signature has been attached to the statement in connection with many of these bills, but there is no signature on the report I have on this bill. It simply says it was further endorsed by the Solicitor for the Post Office Department in his letter of February 13 addressed to the committee.

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. The bill was drafted at the request of the Department and was in conformity with their suggestion. It is purely a technical bill intended to liberalize delivery of the mail and to get paid for the services rendered.

Mr. TRUAX. How does it liberalize the present regulations when it charges an additional fee of 10 cents for effecting the delivery of registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. This is to pay for the extra cost which is caused by sometimes three or four trips in order to make delivery of a letter where they cannot find the addressee the first time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think the purport of the bill is that a registered letter can be delivered at the home of a person without delivering it to him personally. The letter may be delivered to anyone else living there; but if you address it so that it has to be delivered to the one person only, or may not be delivered at his order, then the postman must come there several times.

Mr. TRUAX. This bill states "to charge an additional fee for effecting delivery of domestic registered, insured, or collect-on-delivery mail." This includes all classes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. No; only where it has to be delivered directly to the addressee.

Mr. ROMJUE. This simply means that where you want a letter to go to a specified person and no one else, this fee is to be charged.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman that I personally am opposed to any further increase in the postal rates. I think we ought to reduce the postal rate from 3 to 2 cents, and I do not think we should charge any more for delivering a letter.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose I addressed a registered letter to the gentleman in Washington from myself in Texas. I could register it for 18 cents with receipt demanded. It goes to your office; and if you are not there, it is delivered to your secretary and your secretary signs for it; but suppose you put on the letter that it must be delivered to you, Mr. TRUAX, in person, and the messenger has to go to your office five times, do you not think that is worth the little 10 cents extra that this bill provides? That is all on earth that the bill provides.

Mr. TRUAX. Is not the delivery man on a salary?

Mr. BLANTON. There are lots of them on a piece basis, and they get so much for delivering a letter or package. It is an extra expense to the Government, and I think this is as little as we could expect.

Mr. ROMJUE. And it costs no one anything except the person who wants the service and wants to pay for it.

Mr. TRUAX. And that is the man I do not want to be required to pay any more. The Postmaster General has said that under the 3-cent rate and the air-mail rates the Budget will be balanced and there will be no deficit, and there is nothing in the report over anybody's signature in that Department to show that they are asking for this legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is a service that is well worth the 10 cents extra.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And the person who sends the letter will determine whether he pays the additional 10 cents or not.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there is not a more meritorious bill on this calendar today, and I do not think there are three men in the House who would object to the measure. I therefore object to the gentleman's request that the bill go over, so that the next time three objections will be required. If the gentleman wants to object to its consideration today, let him object to it.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object. I asked that the bill be passed over without prejudice, but the gentleman from Missouri objected to that request.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the bill were passed over without prejudice today, the gentleman could prevent its consideration 2 weeks from today by a single objection, and I am not going to let the gentleman do that. Two weeks from today three objections will be required. I do not think three Members of this House will object to a bill that is fair to all and one that will help the Department get out of the red.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

CHIEF CLERK OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7343, to remove inequities in the law governing eligibility for promotion to the position of chief clerk in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his request a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill. That is the quickest way to dispose of the matter.

ADMINISTRATIVE FURLOUGHS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9046, to discontinue administrative furloughs in the Postal Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection? Every man in the Postal Service is in favor of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MAIL CONTRACTORS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7299, to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or an agent or employee thereof.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. It is a very involved measure, and I want to give it further study.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF RAILROAD COMPANIES CARRYING THE MAILS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7392, to authorize the Post Office Department to hold railroad companies responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the railroad company or an agent or employee thereof.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the committee I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

OBSOLETE INDIAN LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7600, repealing certain sections of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States relating to the Indians.

There being no objection, the Clerk read a similar Senate bill (S. 2671) as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sections of title 25 of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States be, and they are hereby, repealed: Sections 171, 172, 173, 186, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, and 226.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill were laid on the table.

ADDITIONS OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE OCHOCO NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 285, to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following described public lands are hereby included in and made a part of the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., subject to all the laws and regulations applicable to national forests, but such inclusion shall not affect any entry or vested rights acquired under the public land laws prior to the passage of this act: The west half southeast quarter, and the southwest quarter section 7; the southwest quarter northeast quarter, the northwest quarter northwest quarter, the south half northwest quarter, the north half southwest quarter, the southeast quarter southwest quarter, the north half southeast quarter, and the southwest quarter southeast quarter section 17; the north half northeast quarter, the southwest quarter northeast quarter, the west half southeast quarter, and the west half section 18; and all of section 19; all in township 13 south, range 24 east, Willamette meridian.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN LANDS IN HAWAII TO THE TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 8235, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey by appropriate deed of conveyance certain lands to the District of Ewa, island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the Territory of Hawaii lands in the District of Ewa, island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, described as follows, to wit:

TO AMEND SECTIONS 203 AND 207, HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 8052, to amend sections 203 and 207 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920 (U.S.C., title 48, secs. 697 and 701), conferring upon certain lands of Auwaiolimu, Kewalo, and Kalawahine, on the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, the status of Hawaiian home lands, and providing for the leasing thereof for residence purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from the Hawaiian Islands if these allotments would go to native Japanese?

Mr. McCANDLESS. No; only Hawiian and part Hawaiians.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The native Japanese are not included?

Mr. McCANDLESS. No; only Hawaiians.

PROMOTION PARITY IN THE COAST GUARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8644, to provide warrant officers of the Coast Guard parity of promotion with warrant officers of the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is coming up under suspension today. I am against the bill. It would be very foolish to let a majority vote pass it or let it go through by consent when it is coming up under suspension. I object.

STOCK OWNERSHIP BY DIRECTORS OF FEDERAL RESERVE MEMBER BANKS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2601, to amend section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 with respect to stock ownership by directors of member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

PROMOTION PARITY IN THE COAST GUARD

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I was under a misapprehension in respect to Calendar No. 203, H.R. 8644, to provide warrant officers of the Coast Guard parity of promotion with warrant officers of the Navy. I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold his request for a few minutes.

Mr. GOSS. Very well.

DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS—AMENDMENT TO JUDICIAL CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4337, to amend the Judicial Code by adding a new section, to be numbered 274D.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has the gentleman any objection to declaratory judgments to advise any legislative body as to the constitutionality of an act before any actual controversy arises?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I have no objection to declaratory judgments. I rose to ask why you have not the report of the Attorney General?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am the patron of the bill. This bill passed the House twice if not three times. The Senate has been the obstructing medium of government. I cannot recall whether the Attorney General in this particular instance was asked his opinion, but the bill was recommended unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary. It has been thoroughly considered by that committee. It means expedition, economy, and simplification of judicial procedure. It has every element that should meet the approval of the citizens of our country.

It has been adopted by 27 States—not exactly this bill but a similar bill. It has been adopted by Great Britain for a great number of years, and adopted by Scotland for over 400 years.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Judicial Code, approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended by adding after section 274C thereof a new section to be numbered 274D, as follows:

"SEC. 274D. (1) In cases of actual controversy the courts of the United States shall have power upon petition, declaration, complaint, or other appropriate pleadings to declare rights and other legal relations of any interested party petitioning for such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be prayed, and such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and be reviewable as such.

"(2) Further relief based on a declaratory judgment or decree may be granted whenever necessary or proper. The application shall be by petition to a court having jurisdiction to grant the relief. If the application be deemed sufficient, the court shall, on reasonable notice, require any adverse party, whose rights have been adjudicated by the declaration, to show cause why further relief should not be granted forthwith.

"(3) When a declaration of right or the granting of further relief based thereon shall involve the determination of issues of fact triable by a jury, such issues may be submitted to a jury in the form of interrogatories, with proper instructions by the court, whether a general verdict be required or not."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES SHIP "NEWPORT"

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4944, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make available to the municipality of Aberdeen, Wash., the U.S.S. Newport.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, can the author of this bill give some explanation of it?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make available to the city of Aberdeen, Wash., the old gunboat Newport, which was built in 1897, and stricken from the naval list 2½ years ago.

Mr. GOSS. I was wondering why it made it particularly available to that one city.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. There are precedents for this legislation.

Mr. GOSS. I understand that.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Vessels have in the past been rendered available to several other municipalities for the same purpose.

Mr. GOSS. That is true, but are there any others available for other localities, or is this the last one on the list?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I am not prepared to answer that question. This vessel will be rendered available to the Naval Reserve at Aberdeen, Wash., where the vessel now is and has been for several years. The city of Aberdeen is willing to assume the expense and cost of maintaining the vessel and taking care of it and keeping it and using it for the Naval Reserve, without any expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Is that all provided for in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Yes, sir; it is. The bill provides that the vessel shall be made available "for the use of the Grays Harbor district in connection with the training of the Naval Reserve organization of the district, provided that no expense to the Government shall be involved."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2681, an identical Senate bill, be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to turn over to the municipality of Aberdeen, Wash., the United States ship Newport for use of the Grays Harbor district in connection with the training of the Naval Reserve organization of the district: Provided, That no expense to the Government shall be involved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

AMENDING TITLE II, PUBLIC ACTS OF SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6379, to amend title II, section 203 (a) (2), chapter 67, Public Acts of Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. MOTT. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know what this bill is?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I am sure the gentleman will observe from the bill and the report, which is brief, that the purpose is to amend title II, which is the Public Works title of the National Industrial Recovery Act, so as to broaden simply the discretionary power of the President and Administrator, so as to allow grants and loans of a similar type as those now made under that title to medical schools, hospitals, and institutions of a public nature, such as municipal institutions and institutions of that type.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if this is not extending the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act a little beyond its original purpose? In the first part of section 203 (a) I find this: "With a view to increasing employment."

Does not the gentleman think that this is an unjustifiable extension of the original act?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. No; it does not relate to that particular provision of the act at all. However, the very purpose sought to be accomplished by that provision will undoubtedly be accomplished by this bill.

There has been a rather narrow construction placed upon this provision that is sought to be amended. The purpose of the pending bill is simply to broaden the discretionary authority in the manner indicated. I do not think it in any way affects the provision to which the gentleman has invited attention, and certainly could not adversely affect that provision.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The amendment, however, is included in section 203 (a).

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. This is an amendment of section 203 (a) (2), which will be found at the top of page 9 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I see it. I spoke to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WEST] a while ago on the same matter. I called his attention to the fact that the language of that section reads, "with a view to increasing employment quickly."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. This would undoubtedly accomplish that purpose.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. The pending bill does not amend section 203 (a) but does amend section 203 (a) (2), and is concerned primarily with construction projects in that group of institutions that would normally come under the provisions of section 202 which precedes this. The legal staff of the Public Works have held that the language of the act, "States, municipalities, or other public bodies" includes only public bodies that are subdivisions of States and municipalities but does not include worthy projects of a public character that are provided for by public funds and are under public control, such as these educational institutions and hospitals.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I may say that I believe in the purpose of the amendment, but I think it might be extending the provisions of the original act beyond its purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this matter of sufficient importance to merit more attention than it is being given right now?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WEST of Ohio. The purpose of this bill is merely to clarify the interpretation with reference to the type of projects mentioned in section 203 (a) (2) and to authorize the awarding of the grant to educational institutions and hospitals. There has been a question as to whether or not institutions that are clearly public in character, institutions supported by public funds, institutions having definitely the character of public bodies, come within the interpretation of the present act and to remove any doubt about educational institutions and hospitals these are specifically mentioned as having the character of public bodies.

It is not a controversial issue; it is merely for the purpose of clarifying the interpretation of the act.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. This is simply for the purpose of clarifying certain regulations that have been issued for the administration of this act. There is no controversy about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Could relief be extended to private hospitals by reason of this amendment?

Mr. WEST of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I should like to say that this amendment is intended to authorize the awarding of the grant to hospitals under public control. Where a city maintains a municipal hospital supported by public funds, governed by a board of directors selected by the mayor and council as public officials to govern the hospital, it is clearly a public body; but under the interpretation now existing with reference to the provisions of the present act such an institution does not become eligible for aid, and so, likewise, with nondenominational educational institutions supported by public funds.

The purpose of the amendment is to make it clear that the term "public bodies" in section 203 (a) (2) is interpreted to apply to nondenominational educational institutions or hospitals not operated for profit which have received or are receiving public aid for construction, repair, or improvement of such project, or to hospitals or nondenominational educational institutions not operating for profit for the purposes and projects designed to serve the interests of the general public, and to make such institutions eligible to the grant under the act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title II, section 203 (a) (2), chapter 67, Public Acts of Seventy-third Congress, be amended as follows:

"(2) upon such terms as the President shall prescribe to make grants to States, municipalities, or other public bodies, or to nondenominational educational institutions not operating for profit, which have received or are receiving public aid, for the construction, repair, or improvement of any such project, or to nondenominational educational institutions not operating for profit for purposes and projects designed to serve the interests of the general public, such as hospitals in connection with class A medical schools, for the construction, repair, or improvement of any such project, but no such grant shall be in excess of 30 percent of the cost of the labor and materials employed upon such project."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "schools", insert "or hospitals under public control, such as municipal hospitals."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment correcting a chapter number. It is of a clerical nature only.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Tennessee: Page 1, line 3, after the word "chapter", strike out "67" and insert in lieu thereof "90."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill be amended accordingly.

The title of the bill was amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2568, granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the years 1932, 1933, and 1934.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it was my understanding that this bill was to come up under a suspension of the rules. It is worth talking about, so I object to its coming up now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California object?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEE DEE RIVER AND BRIDGE ACROSS WACCAMAW RIVER, GEORGETOWN, S.C.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8714, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Pee Dee River and a bridge across the Waccamaw River, both at or near Georgetown, S.C.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Pee Dee River and a bridge across the Waccamaw River, both at or near Georgetown, S.C., authorized to be built by the county of Georgetown, S.C., by an act of Congress approved May 29, 1930, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from May 30, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after "1930", insert "heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 14, 1933, and May 12, 1933."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, SHAWNEETOWN, ILL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8908, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., and a point opposite thereto in Union County, Ky.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to 216.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. This bill is reported unfavorably by Dr. R. G. Tugwell, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, and since I think the doctor knows more about bridges than he does about agriculture I want to follow his recommendation on this bill.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I withhold my objection.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I objected.

Mr. TRUAX. The author of the bill wants to make an explanation.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I reserve my objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, the time for the beginning and completion of the bridge is extended in this bill. This is about the second or third time it has been extended, but they have made plans to construct this bridge if the time is extended. I am very sorry that the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture saw fit to object to this bill, and I hope the gentlemen from California, Ohio, and Washington will not object.

Mr. ELTSE of California and Mr. ZIONCHECK objected.

BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER NEAR DELPHI, IND.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8937, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Wabash River at or near Delphi, Ind.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether a report has been made on this bill by Dr. Tugwell?

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. A report has been made by Dr. Tugwell and also by the Secretary of War, the Honorable George Dern.

Mr. TRUAX. Their report is favorable?

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. They report the bill favorably.

Mr. TRUAX. Again I am willing to favor the doctor's recommendation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto, across the Wabash River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Delphi, Carroll County, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 3. The said city of Shawneetown, Ill., is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8958, authorizing the city of Wheeling, a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at Wheeling, W.Va.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate 3099 for the bill H.R. 8958.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and to provide for military and other purposes, the city of Wheeling, a municipal corporation of West Virginia, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in Wheeling, W.Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The said municipality of Wheeling may charge toll for the use of said bridge, which rates of toll may be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay (a) the reasonable cost of maintenance, repair, and operation of the said bridge and its approaches; and (b) the amortization within a reasonable time and not exceeding 25 years from the date that the bridge is opened to traffic, and under reasonable condition of any loan or loans including reasonable interest, taxes, and financing charges made, or to be made in connection with the construction of said bridge and its approaches.

SEC. 3. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches and of all expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the tolls collected from time to time shall be kept and shall at all reasonable times be available for the information of all persons interested in the construction, operation, and maintenance thereof.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, or pledge any or all of the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said city of Wheeling or any corporation to which, or any person to whom, such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same through mortgage, pledge, foreclosure, or otherwise, including therein the United States of America acting by or through the President, the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, such other agency or agencies as may be designated or created for such purpose pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act or any other amendment or supplement thereto, or any other agency or agencies as may be created for such purpose by the Congress of the United States, and such person or corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise all of the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon the city of Wheeling as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. Whenever a sum sufficient to amortize and pay off the amount of money used in building and constructing said bridge shall have been collected, the city of Wheeling shall declare said bridge free and open to the use of the general public without the imposition of any further tolls or charges for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SUSQUEHANNA RIVER AT OR NEAR HOLTWOOD, LANCASTER COUNTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9000, granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near Holtwood, Lancaster County.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Holtwood, Lancaster County, Pa., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SUSQUEHANNA RIVER AT OR NEAR BAINBRIDGE, AND MANCHESTER, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9257, granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near Bainbridge, Lancaster County, and Manchester, York County.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, actinig through its department of highways, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Bainbridge, Lancaster County, and Manchester, York County, and between the counties of York and Lancaster, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 5, after the figures "1906", insert "and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARGO IMPORTED AND EXPORTED UNDER TRADE AGREEMENTS

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 282.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PAYMENT OF SEAMEN'S WAGES IN FOREIGN PORTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5266, to amend section 4548 (U.S.C., title 46, sec. 605) of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF SEA LIONS IN ALASKA WATERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8639, to repeal certain laws providing for the protection of sea lions in Alaska waters.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all acts and parts of acts making it unlawful to kill sea lions, as game animals or otherwise, in the waters of the Territory of Alaska are repealed: Provided, however, That the laws concerning game animals in Alaska, except insofar as they relate to sea lions, shall not be affected thereby.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POSTAL TREATIES OR CONVENTIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7317, to provide for the final construction, on behalf of the United States, of postal treaties or conventions to which the United States is a party.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LIMITATION UPON THE EXTENSION OF STAR ROUTES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7212, to remove the limitation upon the extension of star routes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire what this bill is proposed to do? Does it propose to make an unlimited number of miles to a star route?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. No. The purpose of this legislation is to give authority to the Post Office Department to make a contract at the same rate that is paid now for a continuation and extension of a desirable service.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This will permit the extension of a route only a very short way?

Mr. MUSSELWHITE. There is no specific statement, but this says it may be extended.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman withhold his request a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROMJUE. I simply want to explain to the gentleman that there is no further limitation placed by this bill so far as the length of the route is concerned than there is already with respect to the general rural routes. There is no limitation now on the mileage of a rural route, and I think this is a very important and a very desirable piece of legislation. I am satisfied the Post Office Department is not going to abuse the privilege of extension.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is nothing wrong in passing this over for 2 weeks.

Mr. ROMJUE. The only difficulty is we are approaching the end of the session, and the Postmaster General is very anxious to get the bill through.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not think passing it over for 2 weeks will make any difference.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

UNPAID MAIL MATTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7348, to amend section 3937 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill a question with respect to the language in line 1, on page 2: "But in large cities and adjacent districts of dense population, having two or more post offices within a distance of 3 miles of each other."

I know of several situations where there are large cities adjacent to each other where a drop letter in one city will not be delivered in the adjacent city, and I think the gentleman should be willing to submit to an amendment providing that letters may be delivered to adjacent cities as well as adjacent district where there is dense population.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, this bill was sent to me by the Department, and I was given no authority by the committee to have the bill amended. However, I do not see any objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAINES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Of course, the purpose is not to have it apply to adjacent cities. The purpose is that where there are post offices within 3 miles of each other these letters which contain no postage or less than one full rate shall then be handled directly within that district.

Mr. ELTSE of California. May I ask this question? I have in my own district the cities of Oakland and Berkeley. The post offices are 5 miles removed, and yet the cities are contiguous and adjacent. A drop letter in my home city of Berkeley would not be delivered in Oakland, under this bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. ELTSE of California. My contention is there is no particular reason why you should put on a limitation of 3 miles any more than you should, say, 7 or 10 miles.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Of course, the purpose of the Department is to have a certain rule laid down where there is no postage at all on the letter or less than one full rate, and they have to provide a mileage limit of some kind.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice, so that I may take the matter up in the meantime and see if this suggestion will be agreeable to the Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CONVEYANCE OF LETTERS BY PRIVATE MESSENGERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7670, relating to conveyance of letters by private hands without compensation, or by special messenger employed for the particular occasion only.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask some questions of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

I ask the gentleman from Missouri how far this measure goes in permitting the delivery of mail by private messenger.

Mr. ROMJUE. The proposed change in language will still make it possible for senders to send up to five letters by special messenger without payment of postage and will also permit the sending of more than five letters in this manner if, for some special reason, the sender does not desire to make use of postal facilities, but in the latter event it is proposed to require the payment of postage in order to protect the Government's revenues.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a Post Office Department measure, and not a measure to get around the postal laws.

Mr. ROMJUE. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. And this bill has the approval of the Post Office Department?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I am for it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will permit, in the city of Seattle the Puget Sound Light & Gas Co., instead of sending their bills through the mail, send them by messenger.

Mr. BLANTON. I am heartily in favor of the bill, and I shall not object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what is meant by the language in line 7, "conveyance or transmission of letters or packets." I assume that is where letters are wrapped up in a package.

Mr. ROMJUE. It may mean three letters or more than three letters.

Mr. DOBBINS. That is simply a repetition of the language of the present law.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, will this prevent the distribution of handbills?

Mr. ROMJUE. No; it is not intended to prevent the distribution of handbills.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It seems to me it would tend to prevent the distribution of handbills.

Mr. DOBBINS. This does not change the law as to what may be sent outside of mail matter. The limitation relates only to first-class mail. The telegraph companies and those who furnish messenger service have been coming in and taking the cream out of the Postal Service by the inexpensive handling of local delivery letters, and the Post Office Department estimates that this deprives the Department of four hundred or five hundred thousand dollars of revenue a year.

Mr. TABER. I should like to ask a question. A man running a store wants to send out for a particular purpose 10 or 12 letters that he wants people to get in an hour or two hours in a particular locality. Would he be prohibited by this bill from doing this?

Mr. DOBBINS. Not if he sent them out by his own employees.

Mr. TABER. I am inclined to believe that we ought to proceed very carefully in this direction. I suggest that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. TRUAX. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from New York. I think the measure would place a hardship on the merchant in the little country town who wants to send out handbills.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It does not affect handbills at all.

Mr. TABER. It would affect the ordinary business man who had some special occasion for sending out communications. It would not affect the big corporation, but it would affect the little fellow who is obliged to call in messenger service once in a while.

Mr. DOBBINS. This is intended to get at the big fellows and protect the little fellows.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that you do not get at the meat of the thing. The electric-light companies and the telephone companies send out bills by their own employees. You do not get at the situation that exists now.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Everybody knows that utilities companies have their own employees and they can send out the bills by them.

Mr. DOBBINS. Can the gentleman recall any case from his own experience where men having letters to be distributed have gone out and solicited someone to deliver them?

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that the big fellows are specifically exempted by the provisions of the bill, and the little fellows who only want to send out a few communications are obliged to carry the burden.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMPENSATING POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY ORDERS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3214, to compensate the Post Office Department for the extra work caused by the payment of money orders at offices other than those on which the orders are drawn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the payment of postal money orders", approved February 6, 1913 (38 Stat. 280; U.S.C., title 39, sec. 727), is amended to read as follows:

"That under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General shall prescribe postal money orders may be issued payable at any money-order post office, and on and after the date upon which such rules and regulations become effective all money orders shall be legally payable at any money-order post office, although drawn on a specified office; and as compensation for the extra labor involved in paying a money order at an office other than that on which the order is drawn the Postmaster General is authorized to exact a fee of the same amount as that charged for the issue of the order; and that all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TIMBER OPERATIONS OF MENOMINEE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7759, to amend the law relating to timber operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a bill with reference to a timber operation. I wish the gentleman from Wisconsin would tell us more in detail about this.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, the Menominee Indian Reservation is the only reservation that has extensive timber operations. The Indians own their own sawmills and they have quite a stand of timber. This bill provides that at the end of each fiscal year the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the fair market stumpage value of the timber cut during that year.

Mr. GOSS. Stumpage value?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; stumpage value, and then distribute that amount equally among the living members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians, provided a profit is shown, and provided that no more than the actual profit shall be distributed.

Mr. GOSS. In what way is it proposed to amend the law?

Mr. BOILEAU. There is no such provision at the present time. All this money goes into the tribal fund.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman not think it should?

Mr. BOILEAU. No; because up until this year for the past 20 years or so, every year or two the Indians have submitted a bill and Congress has passed bills providing for a per capita payment out of the tribal funds.

Mr. GOSS. Is the gentleman trying to tell the House now that if this bill should pass there would be no more money paid out of the tribal funds?

Mr. BOILEAU. I would not want to say that definitely, but it is our hope to accomplish that. We hope there will be some material changes made with reference to the operation so that the operation will show a profit. As a matter of fact there has been no profit during the last few years.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman know of any other Indian reservation where that has happened?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not know of any other Indian reservation that has a timber operation such as that. That has been going on since 1908.

Mr. GOSS. Then it is a new practice. It is the form of work which these Indian get in a pro rata share, rather than to go into the trust funds of the tribe and then be distributed to the members of the tribe.

Mr. BOILEAU. The entire operation is an experiment. It is confined to that one operation only. But it has been going on since 1908. There is nothing comparable to it in any other Indian reservation.

Mr. GOSS. They have oil on some of these Indian reservations.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is true.

Mr. GOSS. And should we take out so much oil and distribute it to each Indian there or put it into the fund?

Mr. BOILEAU. The law now has limited the amount of timber that can be cut, I believe, to 12,000,000 feet a year, so there is no possibility of the Indians exploiting the timber on the reservation.

Mr. GOSS. Would the gentleman be willing to let this go over?

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman is inclined to want more information, well and good, but I am anxious to have this passed. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs both approve the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA, ALLEGHENY, AND YOUGHIOGHENY RIVERS, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8241, to authorize the construction and operation of certain bridges across the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Youghiogheny Rivers in the county of Allegheny, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman explain what the operations of this bill will be in the event an assignment is made to Allegheny County or to a private individual?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the corporation is the Allegheny County Authority, created by the State of Pennsylvania. The legislature of the State passed a charter bill providing for the incorporation of Allegheny County Authority for the purpose of constructing the public projects which are included in this unified program. There are some 12 of these important projects. A great deal of work has been done and they are now preparing the plans. Application has been made to the P.W.A. for a loan. The permission of Congress is asked now for the construction of these bridges over navigable rivers, the Allegheny, the Monongahela, and the Youghiogheny.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I call attention to the specific language to which I am trying to object. The gentleman says this authorization is granted to the Allegheny County Authority. I read the following language:

> Allegheny County Authority and the county of Allegheny, Pa., or either of them, their successors and assigns—

And so forth. I can conceive that either the county authority or the county of Allegheny might get P.W.A. funds, an allocation by way of a 30-percent grant. There is nothing in this bill that would prevent assignment by either of those authorities or organizations to a private individual or a private corporation, and the private individual or the private corporation would derive the benefit of a grant of Congress to the extent of 30 percent.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I assure my friend there is no such purpose as that. The whole purpose of this duly chartered corporation established by the Pennsylvania Legislature is to permit them to take on the obligation and responsibility for the full payment of this loan.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think there ought to be some language included in the bill to prevent assignment to a private individual or corporation?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We took this up with the War Department and went over it very carefully, and they approved it. The Department of Agriculture went over it very carefully and approved it. We went into that matter thoroughly. I am sure this is in the proper form.

Mr. ELTSE of California. This is a very ambitious program you are undertaking. There are seven bridges that are being constructed. I can conceive of danger there. I should like to have this passed without prejudice, so that I can go over it with the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. I want to say, as a member of the committee on bridges, that we went into this very thoroughly in connection with the building of these proposed bridges. As a matter of fact, all of these bridges are replacing bridges at these various locations that are now owned by the county of Allegheny; but I understand, in order to secure a loan from the P.W.A., they have requested in several instances that we set up or give permission to the authorities to create a commission to take over the construction and amortization of all these bridges, rather than making the loan direct to the municipality. Consequently, when it is done, the assignment will be made back to the county of Allegheny, which originally owned the bridges. I am personally familiar with most of these bridges, and I know they are inadequate to handle the traffic which is required today. Also, you will notice in the bill it refers to associated projects. Associated projects in connection with this are street widenings in order to handle the traffic.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But that has been eliminated.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that these bills had been approved by the War Department and the Department of Agriculture. I find that is true with certain provisions. In the report of W. R. Gregg, Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, he says:

> The Department will interpose no objection to the pending bill other than the change therein suggested as to the term "associated projects."

In the report of the Secretary, Mr. Wallace, he makes it clear that the bill must be amended to specifically limit the collection of tolls to the bridges themselves, with the proviso that such limitation shall not operate to bar rentals from the utilities which might use such bridges, or which might use what are referred to in the bill as "associated projects." Now, we find that the terms "associated projects" and "utilities" are one and the same thing. I want to ask the gentleman, and I assure him in advance that I will personally rely on his own statement, have these provisions been fully met in the bill as now drafted, so as to protect future generations and the present people who will use these bridges from paying tolls to privately owned companies or utilities ownership?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Without hesitation I say "yes." The purpose of clarifying the bill was to make sure that the authority could charge a fair amount for street-car franchises across these bridges; also for water lines, gas-company lines, and electric-light lines.

Mr. TRUAX. In other words, you have safeguarded the interest of the people against the encroachment of utilities?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Absolutely.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I should like to ask the gentleman one other question. Would you have any objection to amending the bill by including the word "municipal" before the words "successors and assigns" in line 6 and again in line 7?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would not object to that, if that would make sure that the assignees could only be a governmental authority. However, this is Allegheny County, which is not a municipal authority.

Mr. ELTSE of California. A municipal organization is a county organization within the definition of the law.

Mr. HOLMES. Any assignment will have to be back to the authority which granted it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Why does the gentleman say that?

Mr. HOLMES. You have separate divisions. You have McKeesport on one side and Pittsburgh on the other, but all these bridges are now under the control of the county itself; not the city of Pittsburgh or any one of the intermediate communities where the bridges are located; so that the only possible thing that can be done will be for this authority, after it has amortized the bridges, to then authorize assignment back to the county. The authority is just the agent of the county, and in order to comply with the regulation of the P.W.A. and in order to get these funds, this is set up in this particular form. There is only one way that it can be assigned, and that is back to the county.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Back to the county or State which chartered the corporation. It is a State-chartered corporation especially for construction-and-loan purposes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Then the bill goes much further than your intent, because under the bill there is nothing to prevent assignment from Allegheny County authority to a private individual or a private corporation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is no such intention as that, I am sure, and I hope the gentleman will let this measure pass. The officials from Pittsburgh and from Pennsylvania went over this carefully. They went over it with the War Department and with the Department of Agriculture. They all agreed that this was the proper language. It will be of great advantage to a section of Pennsylvania that has had very little aid from the P.W.A. in the past.

Mr. ELTSE of California. As I understood a moment ago, the gentleman was willing to have the word "municipal" inserted before the words "successors and assigns."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If that does not confuse the matter I trust the judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] on that point.

Mr. HOLMES. To do that would be to complicate the situation, for then this authority could assign all the rights in this bridge to the city of Pittsburgh or to any other city. They would have to assume the burden of liability. On the other hand this comes within the scope of public works and has a direct bearing on the entire highway projects of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I do not want to see this fall into the hands of private individuals.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; it will not.

Mr. HOLMES. I can assure the gentleman that the bill is drawn in the regular form.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Allegheny County authority and the county of Allegheny, Pa., or either of them, their successors and assigns, or the successors or assigns of either of them, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate bridges and approaches thereto at any or all of the following points within the county of Allegheny, Pa.:

(a) Across the Monongahela, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from Pittsburgh to Homestead, Pa., near to, and to replace, existing Brown's Bridge.

(b) Across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from Pittsburgh to O'Hara Township, Pa., near Dam No. 2, to replace the existing Highland Park Bridge.

(c) Across the Monongahela River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., between the Wabash and Point Bridges.

(d) Across the Monongahela River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from the Glenwood to the Hays sections of the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., to replace existing Glenwood Bridge.

(e) Across the Monongahela River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from Dravosburg to McKeesport, Pa., to replace existing Dravosburg Bridge.

(f) Across the Youghiogheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the city of McKeesport, to replace existing Fifth Avenue Bridge.

(g) Across the Monongahela River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation from the borough of Rankin to the borough of Whittaker, Pa., to replace existing Rankin Bridge, all in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of said bridges or any of them, or the approaches to them or any of them, the rates of toll may be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay such part or all of any one or more of the following items as shall not be from time to time otherwise provided for, namely: (a) The reasonable cost of maintenance, repair, and operation of said bridges and approaches and their associated projects; and (b) the amortization, within a reasonable time and under reasonable conditions, of any loan or loans, including reasonable interest, taxes, and financing charges, made or to be made in connection with the construction of any of said bridges and approaches and their associated projects. By the term "associated projects" is meant any and all other construction projects which may be associated with said bridges and approaches in the borrowing of money or the issuance of bonds by the Allegheny County authority or the county of Allegheny, Pa., as the case may be, or which may be jointly pledged with said bridges and approaches as security for the repayment of any such moneys borrowed or bonds issued, whether or not tolls or other fees shall be charged for the use of said projects.

SEC. 3. An accurate record of the cost of the bridges and their approaches and associated projects and of all expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of tolls collected from time to time shall be kept and shall at all reasonable times be available for the information of all persons interested in the construction, operation, and maintenance thereof.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, or pledge any or all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Allegheny County authority and the county of Allegheny, Pa., or either of them, their successors or assigns, or the successors or assigns of either of them; and if such rights, powers, and privileges shall be sold, assigned, or tranferred to, or shall be acquired through mortgage, pledge, foreclosure, or otherwise by the United States of America acting by or through the President, the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works or such other agency or agencies as may be designated or created for such purpose pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act or any amendment or supplement thereto, or otherwise, or by any person, corporation, or political subdivision, the United States of America or such person, corporation, or political subdivision is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon the United States of America, such person, corporation, or political subdivision.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 11, after the word "approaches" strike out "and their associated projects."

Page 3, strike out all of lines 17, to and including line 24, and lines 1 and 2 on page 4.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS GRAND CALUMET RIVER, GARY, IND.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9064, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River at or near a point suitable to the interests of navigation, east of Clark Street, in Gary, Ind.,

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the author of the bill how close this proposed bridge will be to the nearest existing bridge?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the author of the bill, my colleague from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] is in Indiana because of the primary election to be held there tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS CONNECTICUT RIVER AT TURNERS FALLS, MASS.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9065, granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Public Works of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Connecticut River at Turners Falls, Mass.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Department of Public Works, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Connecticut River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Montague (Turners Falls) and Gill (Riverside), Mass., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SUSQUEHANNA RIVER AT MILLERSBURG, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 9271, granting the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near Millersburg, Dauphin County, Pa.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the author of the bill how close the proposed bridge is to the nearest existing bridge.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not know whether the author of the bill is here, but I do not see what difference it makes how close this proposed bridge may be to an existing bridge.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It makes a lot of difference if it happens to be a toll bridge and this new bridge is to be erected out of P.W.A. funds.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We still have a state of free competition and will have until bridges are put under an N.R.A. code. I do not see why we should object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. We are living in a time when public-utilities commissions have something to say about such matters by the grant of certificates of public necessity and convenience.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Under those circumstances the authorities desiring to build a bridge would have to secure such certificate of public convenience and necessity.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. There has been an attempt made from time to time here on the floor to consider P.W.A. funds as not being funds of the Treasury of the United States. There is no distinction at all.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Not on my part.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not referring to the gentleman for I am sure he considers it the people's money.

Mr. ELTSE of California. This is a matter of principle entirely, and not any question of the allocation of P.W.A. funds.

Mr. BLANTON. I was not speaking of the gentleman's interpretation.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I do have some question with regard to the wisdom of granting $30,000 for the construction of a bridge which would come into competition with an existing bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it is agreed on both sides of the aisle that P.W.A. funds are nothing in the world but tax money of the people of the United States that comes out of the Treasury, and are Treasury funds belonging to the people.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I am not speaking for all the Members on this side of the aisle. I may agree with the gentleman personally, but I could not speak for the rest of the Members.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all it is, tax money of the people of the United States that comes out of the Treasury, and we should be just as careful about spending it as any other public money.

Mr. ELTSE of California. That may be true, but the fact remains that we should inquire into these matters.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Whether it be in the State of Pennsylvania, the State of Massachusetts, or down in the South.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I probably shall not object, but I want to make this statement.

Page 2 of the committee report contains this statement:

This bill would authorize the Pennsylvania Department of Highways to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River, at or near Millersburg, Dauphin County, Pa.

As I understand this bill and what has previously been said, this means the appropriation of a certain amount of P.W.A. funds or C.W.A. funds, one or the other, to be handled by the State Highway Department of Pennsylvania. Now, if the State Highway Department of Pennsylvania handles the funds allotted to them as such funds are handled in the State of Ohio, then I would certainly object to this bill. Every member of the Ohio delegation has received complaints by the score from citizens of Ohio as to the manner in which the C.W.A. funds and P.W.A. funds are administered by the State highway department, by the adjutant general of the State, who wears boots and spurs—and that is the way he treats the people. They are objecting to it and are protesting against the manner in which the taxpayers' money is used in my State to build up a political machine for Gov. George White.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, acting through its department of highways, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the Susquehanna River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Millersburg, Dauphin County, and between the counties of Dauphin and Perry, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILK INVESTIGATION

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 32.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman reserve that for a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman tell the House whether or not Mr. Howe, of the Consumers' Council of the N.R.A. is making a very thorough study of the milk situation?

Mr. MONAGHAN of Montana. I may say to the gentleman from Washington that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has made what it thought was a necessary investigation here, but the investigation was found by those interested not altogether satisfactory as the basis for needed legislation. The Federal Trade Commission stated that this is the best possible method of handling the matter. I may say further that the Federal Trade Commission has recommended that this resolution be passed. As it concerns every dairy farmer and every consumer of milk in the Nation, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Howe, of the Consumers' Council, is with the N.R.A., and I recollect that I received a letter from Mr. Howe about a week or two ago stating that the Consumers' Council of the N.R.A. were making a very thorough investigation from the consumers' standpoint.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. There is not a more important issue before the Congress right now than the question of getting rid of the big profits that exist between the producer and the consumer of milk. The profits of the middlemen are outrageous. It affects the welfare of every little baby in the United States, and I sincerely hope that the gentlemen will not interpose an objection to this bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have no objection to an investigation being made. I know that one of the greatest iniquities now is the difference between the price that the farmer gets and the price that the consumer has to pay.

Mr. MONAGHAN of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. BLANTON. May I say that it will not hurt to get at it from two different angles? If we can find out just how to eliminate the middleman's profit by cutting it out and giving the consumers and the babies of the country the benefit, it will be a great accomplishment.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this concurrent resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MONAGHAN of Montana. Will the gentleman withhold his request?

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this concurrent resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MONAGHAN of Montana and Mr. BLANTON objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

I do not object to this resolution because I am against it, but because I feel it is of great importance and of far-reaching consequences. The resolution merits fuller debate than can be given it at this time, and it should come up under rules where its provisions can be fully explained and amended, if necessary.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2901, to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundedth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union there shall be coined at the mints of the United States 500,000 silver 50-cent pieces of such design as the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may select; but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models or master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage authorized by this act.

SEC. 3. The coins authorized by this act shall be issued only to the Arkansas Honorary Centennial Celebration Commission, or its duly authorized agent, in such numbers, and at such times as they shall be requested by such commission or any such agent, and upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DECORATIONS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 330, authorizing certain retired officers or employees of the United States to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not expect to object, may I say to the members of this committee that I am in accord with what they stated in their bill, but everybody knows what is wrong with the milk industry of this country. The Borden Milk Co. and the rest of the trusts are robbing the producers.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TRUAX. We will have to fix a minimum price on milk the same as we do on wheat, hogs, or any of the other commodities.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following-named retired officers or employees of the United States are hereby authorized to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments:

State Department: Robert Woods Bliss, Fred D. Fisher, George Horton, William H. Hunt, Frank W. Mahin, Thomas Sammons, Harry Tuck Sherman, Alexander Thackara, and Craig W. Wadsworth.

United States Army: Charles J. Allen, Bailey K. Ashford, George G. Bartlett, Herbert C. Crosby, William Crozier, Albert C. Dalton, Hanson E. Ely, James E. Fechet, Harry E. Gilchrist, Francis W. Griffin, William W. Harts, John L. Hines, William E. Horton, John A. Hull, Girard L. McEntee, Charles P. Summerall, John J. Pershing, Trevor W. Swett, and Thomas F. Van Natta, Jr.

United States Navy: William C. Braisted, William B. Caperton, Robert E. Coontz, Herbert O. Dunn, John Rufus Edie, Noble E. Irwin, Harry H. Lane, Norman T. McLean, William V. Pratt, Henry J. Shields, George W. Steele, Montgomery M. Taylor, and Arthur L. Willard.

United States Marine Corps: Ben H. Fuller and George C. Thorpe.

Department of Agriculture: L. O. Howard.

Department of Commerce: Antone Silva.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to furnish to the Seventy-fifth Congress and to each alternate Congress thereafter a list of those retired officers or employees of the United States for whom the Department of State under the provisions of the act of January 31, 1881 (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 115), is holding decorations, orders, medals, or presents tendered them by foreign governments.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF SCIENTIFIC UNIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6781, to authorize appropriations to pay the annual share of the United States as an adhering member of the International Council of Scientific Unions and associated unions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. We belong to too many of these international unions now that permit annual junkets to countries all over the world.

Mr. BLOOM. We belong to these things now and have belonged to them for years.

Mr. BLANTON. And we are separating ourselves from them now pretty fast, and we ought to do so. We ought to come back home and look after our own business. I am determined, if it is possible, to stop these annual junkets.

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman will read the report of the Secretary of State he will find that this is merely to pay the dues; that is all this is for. There are seven different institutions.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on most of his bills, but I am against him on this one. I want to stop paying foreign dues to every foreign country in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF FOR DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY

The Clerk called up the next bill, S. 2046, to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PAYMENTS UNDER WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1928

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 325, extending for 2 years the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the Tripartite Claims Commission, and extending until March 10, 1936, the time within which Hungarian claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the War Claims Arbiter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (g) of section 2 and subsection (f) of section 5 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended by Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 12, 1933, are further amended, respectively, by striking out the words "six years" wherever such words appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "eight years".

SEC. 2. The first sentence of paragraph (h) of subsection (2) of section 6 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 is amended to read as follows:

"No payment shall be made under this section unless application therefor is made by March 10, 1936, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR OF 1933

The Clerk called the next joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 311, to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at A Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago, Ill., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the purpose of this bill is to let articles come into the Chicago Century of Progress Fair without the payment of any import duties. I recollect being at the fair the last time and it looked like a market. Every place you go the cash register is ringing and they are doing nothing but selling goods, and therefore I am constrained to object.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I reserve it.

Mr. SABATH. This bill has the approval of the Department and on anything that is sold there the Government gets the proper amount of duty. I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the bill provide for the payment of the tariff in such cases?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. They pay the duty on any of these things that are sold.

The regular order was demanded.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas pursuant to legislative authorization of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois therefor there was held by A Century of Progress, an Illinois corporation not for profit, during the year 1933 in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, a celebration commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of Chicago as a municipality; and

Whereas in response to a general demand, A Century of Progress has consented to hold a similar celebration during the year 1934 in order that educational and recreational advantages presented by such celebration may again be enjoyed by the people of the world; and

Whereas A Century of Progress has received legislative authorization from the General Assembly of the State of Illinois to hold a world's fair in the said city of Chicago during the year 1934: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the exposition to be held by and known as "A Century of Progress", or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition, to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulation for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the dutes, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles, which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure, the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That articles, which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond, and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That A Century of Progress shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for, articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by A Century of Progress to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning on page 1, after the title, strike out the preamble.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATCHEZ TRACE PARKWAY

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2825, which is identical with House bill 7312, now on the Consent Calendar. The bill provides for an appropriation of $50,000 with which to make a survey of the old Indian trail known as the "Natchez Trace", with a view of constructing a national road on this route to be known as the "Natchez Trace Parkway."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this authorizes an appropriation for an Indian trail of some kind?

Mr. BUSBY. No; it is an authorization for an appropriation of $50,000 with which to make a survey of what was a national highway leading from Nashville, Tenn., to Natchez, Miss.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry, but I feel I must object to that.

Mr. BUSBY. I think, if the gentleman understood the situation, he would not object. This bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Roads, every member expressing himself as being favorable to it. This is merely an authorization of funds for a survey, and I think it is a very meritorious proposition.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Why would we have to appropriate $50,000 to make a survey of a road like this?

Mr. BUSBY. It is about 500 miles long and is the route over which Jackson returned from New Orleans. It was a national highway and was one of the principal roads that served the Nation at the time the section of the country through which it passes was being developed. I hope the gentleman will not object to this authorization. Of course, we will have to go to the Committee on Appropriations and make out a case there.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to know what the guardian of the Treasury on the Democratic side, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], thinks about this.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the matter is pretty well looked after over there. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I feel I must object at this time. I am willing to request that its consideration may be deferred until the next call of the calendar.

Mr. BUSBY. I may explain to the gentleman that it will be impossible for me to be here on next Consent Calendar Day and I hope the gentleman will let the measure pass. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] and other gentlemen who have investigated the matter I am sure will tell the gentleman that it is all right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I object at this time, subject to making some arrangement whereby it may come up again. Personally, I have no objection to it, but it seems to me that this amount of money for a survey of an old trail is out of the question.

Mr. BUSBY. I know the gentleman is always fair and I hope he will not object to this authorization.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection because the ranking member of the committee on the Republican side states it is all right. In spite of this assurance, I still feel some doubt as to its merits. The responsibility for this expenditure is with the Democratic majority.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that I am not the ranking member on the Republican side of the Roads Committee, but I do know we had extensive hearings on this matter and the report was unanimous. We all agreed on both sides of the table that this is a desirable thing and a good piece of legislation and that an appropriation should be authorized.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he is a member of the Roads Committee?

Mr. BUSBY. I am not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Who is the chairman of the committee?

Mr. BUSBY. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] is Chairman of the Roads Committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What does he say about it?

Mr. BUSBY. He is enthusiastically in favor of it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What does the President say about it?

Mr. BUSBY. All of them are for it and I am sure the gentleman would not offer any objection if he knew all the facts.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection, understanding all the Democrats are for it.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

S. 2825

Whereas the Natchez Trace was one of the most ancient and important Indian roads leading from the territory in the section of Tennessee about Nashville in a southwest course, crossing the Tennessee River at Colbert Shoals, a few miles below Muscle Shoals, thence passing in a southwest course through the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indian lands, in what is now Mississippi, in an almost direct course by Jackson, Miss., to Natchez; and

Whereas the Natchez Trace is located throughout almost its entire length on highlands between watersheds on the most suitable route over which to establish the national parkway through a section of the country greatly in need of such road facilities from a national standpoint to connect the North and East directly with the Natchez, New Orleans, and Southwest section of the country; and

Whereas the Natchez Trace was made famous for the service it rendered in affording General Jackson a route over which much of his forces moved to take part in Jackson's famous victory over the British at New Orleans, and also by reason of the fact that General Jackson returned with his army over this trace to Nashville after the Battle of New Orleans; and

Whereas the Natchez Trace is known as one of the Nation's most famous old roads, and has been marked by handsome boulders with suitable inscriptions by the Daughters of the American Revolution at great expense, these boulders being placed every few miles from one end of the trace to the other; and

Whereas unusual interest is being manifested in the building of a national parkway by the Government, Natchez Trace organizations having been perfected in almost every county through which the trace passes; and

Whereas the Government has recently adopted a policy and set up a division in the Department of the Interior, known as the "Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations" to engage in a national way in laying out parks, reservations, and building parkways: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States a sum not exceeding $50,000 to be used by the Department of the Interior through the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations with which to make a survey of the Old Natchez Trace throughout its entire length leading from the section of Tennessee about Nashville to Natchez, Miss., the same to be known as the "Natchez Trace Parkway." The said survey shall locate the Natchez Trace as near as practicable in its original route. An estimate of cost of construction of an appropriate national parkway over this route, and such other data as will be valuable shall be obtained by said survey with the objective of determining matters concerning the construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUSBY: Page 2, strike out in the last "whereas" of the preamble the words "Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "National Park Service"; and

Page 3, line 1, strike out "Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "National Park Service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the bill, but in order that we may have a hearing I demand a second.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather long bill, covering nearly every agency of the Government. I expect to explain it, and there may be many questions asked which will need an answer. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the time be extended to 40 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BRITTEN. Reserving the right to object, and I may not object, there are a number of important bills scheduled for consideration this afternoon.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill, as my colleague knows, will stop 367 back-door appropriations that come out of the back door of the Treasury. Nothing could be more important than this bill, as it will save millions of dollars annually.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Texas has convinced me already.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] has done wonderful work on the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe it is fundamentally wrong to ask an extension of time on motions to suspend the rules. I believe 40 minutes is ample time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I am indifferent as to the length of time given to the bill. I thought I would leave it to the convenience of the House and ask for an extension; but if there is objection, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

CURRENCY RESERVE—PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MILLARD. I will.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the bill H.R. 9459 was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. It is a companion bill to the one that the Committee on Insular Affairs has reported out dealing with the currency reserve of the Philippine Islands. I have discussed this with the ranking member, in the absence of the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and it is thoroughly satisfactory to him to have it referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs. The Department requested it, in view of the fact that the same subject has been handled by the Committee on Insular Affairs. I ask that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, not that the committee is seeking additional work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What committee has the bill?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the gentleman wishes it referred to the Insular Affairs Committee?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; I am making that request.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman discussed it with the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. McDUFFIE. As I said, I have discussed it with the ranking member in the absence of the chairman, and also with another member of the Ways and Means Committee, and there is no objection. It is not of great importance.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill (H.R. 9410) is the first bill that has emanated from the Subcommittee on Permanent Appropriations of the Committee on Appropriations since 1914.

It is the culmination of a feeling of resentment which for several years has been manifesting itself in both Houses of Congress against the growth of permanent, automatic, and mandatory appropriations made by past Congresses to permit millions of dollars to go out of the back doors of the Treasury without the concurrence or consent of sitting Congresses.

Last year, the Senate in an amendment to the Treasury appropriation bill cut them out with one fell swoop of the ax. In conference, however, the amendment was withdrawn when the Senate conferees were informed that this Subcommittee on Permanent Appropriations of the House was making an intensive study of the subject.

For many years, the existence of these appropriations was not even mentioned in the annual estimates. Lately, all reports on departmental appropriation bills carried a summary of permanent appropriations affecting the respective departments but the summaries were far from complete.

For instance, the 1934 Budget estimates revealed 115. In the 1935 Budget there appeared 117.

In our researches we unearthed 253 more of them and even while we were working on the subject another bill of this character slipped through and is now a law. It is, however, corrected in the present bill.

It is clearly a violation of article I, section 9, subparagraph 7 of the Constitution, which provides:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and
> A regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

It ought to be emphasized that not only do permanent appropriations violate the spirit and intent of the Constitution but in the process of administration of the vast majority of them the mandate to make "a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures" is utterly ignored.

If that mandate was ever at any time observed, it is certain that for many years Congress has never had furnished it by the disbursing agencies any such regular statement or account of receipts and expenditures.

It is maintained that neither by ethics, by logic, nor by constitutional authority has any one Congress the right to bind the hands of posterity by the enactment of laws mandatorily calling for automatic withdrawals from the Federal Treasury without annual examination, approval, and supervision of succeeding Congresses.

It is the conclusion of the committee, after hearing numerous witnesses, that permanent appropriations are a vicious usurpation and invasion of the rights of sitting Congresses; that they complicate bookkeeping in the office of the Treasurer and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Treasury Department; make auditing in the Comptroller General's Office difficult; conceal from Congress many avenues of receipts and expenditures (which in itself is an invitation to extravagance), and, for lack of proper annual disclosure, make the work of the appropriations subcommittees conjectural and uncertain—many of the agencies of our Government receiving these invisible permanent allotments, as well as annual appropriations, for the same purposes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I prefer to answer questions when I have concluded my main statement.

This vicious practice of usurping the rights of succeeding Congresses has been going on since 1799. In 1910 Congress revolted for a time. A subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, headed by Mr. George R. Maltby, was appointed to look into the matter, and upon his recommendation the sundry civil appropriation bill of June 25, 1910, repealed the permanent appropriations for the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Shipping Service. Also, the Customs Service, which had been half permanent and half annual, was, under the act of May 24, 1912, put on an annual basis. That was all that was done at that time. That is as far as they were willing to go.

Then Mr. William P. Borland, of Missouri, was appointed the head of the subcommittee on permanent appropriations, and he made an extensive and exhaustive study of this subject, particularly on reclamation, and as a result of his labors, under the act of August 13, 1914, the Reclamation Service was put on an annual basis. (A more detailed history of the background is to be found in the introduction on page 1 of the hearings.)

Last year a committee was appointed by the then head of the Appropriations Committee, the Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS, now our esteemed majority leader, consisting of myself as chairman, Mr. William C. Wright, now deceased, Mr. W. W. Hastings, Mr. Louis Ludlow, Mr. Michael J. Hart, Mr. Burton L. French, Mr. Frank Murphy, and Mr. John Taber. This committee held a number of hearings, but the Seventy-second Congress adjourned before it got fairly started. Those who survive and are in Congress today are Mr. HASTINGS, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. HART, Mr. TABER, and myself. Thanks are due them for their help in beginning this difficult task.

In the present Seventy-third Congress the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Honorable JAMES P. BUCHANAN, appointed a subcommittee on permanent appropriations, consisting of myself as chairman, Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. PARKS, Mr. CARY, Mr. GOSS, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, and we began our study of these permanent appropriations as soon as we could get down to it after the members of the committee had finished their work on other subcommittees. At this point I want to pay my sincere tribute to the activity and energy and loyalty of the members of this committee in the preparation of the agenda under which the hearings were held, and in the preparation of the bill. I have never seen a committee that worked so hard and so studiously, attentively, as this committee on permanent appropriations, and the bill which I present to you today has their unanimous support, as well as that of the entire Committee on Appropriations. I also pause to pay tribute to the clerks in the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Jack McFall, who worked with us during the hearings, prepared the witnesses and got the program out for each day. He worked far into the night. Also I pay tribute to Mr. James Scanlon, who prepared the cross-reference indices to these hearings. They deserve the highest praise for their industry and devotion.

Letters were sent out to each department and Government agency for precise information which, when received, formed the basis of the examination.

Much time was thereby saved. The examination was kept within proper limits, and no witness was taken by surprise.

The hearings contain nearly a thousand pages and embody a history of every permanent appropriation from 1799 down to within the past month.

THE INDICES

The indices to which I have referred will enable you to find at a moment's notice any permanent appropriation. First is the agenda number, then the department it refers to, then the page of the hearings. Then the cross-reference index, which gives the title of the permanent appropriation, the department to which it refers, the page number of the hearings, and the agenda number. Furthermore, in appendix A there is a fiscal breakdown of these permanent appropriations. In appendix B there is a historic alinement of all these permanent appropriations from 1799, giving the name, the type of the appropriation, the date of the original act, and the amendatory legislation.

THE BUDGET DIRECTOR APPROVES

Not only is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations itself, but it has the approval of the Budget officer in a letter which he wrote to me, as follows:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, May 4, 1934.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN GRIFFIN: In response to your telephone message, I have to advise that the bill (H.R. 9410) providing that permanent appropriations be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress, and for other purposes, is in accord with the financial program of the President. The bill will go a long way toward simplifying the bookkeeping of the Treasury Department and the preparation of the Budget, and will, I am sure, have the effect of materially reducing the expenditures of Government.

Yours very truly,

L. W. DOUGLAS, Director.

Now, coming to the bill itself, it is rather a long bill, containing a great many items. I want to put in the RECORD at this point an index of the annotations or symbols used in the bill for convenience of reference.

(The statement is as follows:)

SYMBOLS USED IN THE BILL

(Each item of the bill is identified on the books of the Government by a group of figures and letters.)

First numbers

0. Legislative, executive and independent offices.
1. Justice Department.
2. Treasury Department.
3. Agriculture Department.
4. Interior Department (proper).
5. Interior Department (Indian).
6. Commerce Department.
7. Navy Department.
8. .001 to 899 War Department (proper).
8. X900.01 to 8X999.99 War Department (river-and-harbor projects).
9. X001 to 9X099 (Panama Canal).
9. 100 to 9–349 Post Office Department.
DC–001 to DC–650. District of Columbia.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The first digit thus represents the department; the second letter represents the character of the fund. Thus "x" represents "general funds"; "s" represents "special funds"; "c" represents "contributed funds"; and "t" represents "trust funds", while a dash (—) represents the fiscal year.

Now, taking at random an entry in the bill, page 16 of the bill, line 8, subdivision 3: "Replacing subsistence of the Army", you will see the figures 8s666, which means the War Department, special fund, and number of the account. The figure "8" stands for the War Department wherever it is used. "s" means the special fund, and "666" is the title of the account. So on through the others. They are all described by Treasury symbols which they have adopted in their books, and which identify them more particularly than a reference to the law itself, but the laws themselves are set out in full in the index at the end of the hearings.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. No doubt the committee has given this matter very careful consideration and has devoted a great deal of time to the preparation of the bill, but those of us who have not had an opportunity to investigate it as the committee has done, of course, must accept the report of the subcommittee. May I ask if, in repealing the appropriation, the law has been repealed which would authorize these annual appropriations?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Generally only the part of the law that makes the appropriation has been repealed. All of the items repealed in the first section have been recommended by the respective departments. The laws repealed are obsolete.

Mr. DOWELL. And your committee has confined itself to the repeal of the appropriation?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes; except where we repeal laws that are obsolete.

Mr. DOWELL. That is, the permanency of the appropriation?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. In all instances except two or three here, and in the others we have repealed the entire law, and not even left the authorization where it has become evident to the department that it is no longer necessary.

Mr. DOWELL. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman state in the aggregate the total number of dollars that have been disbursed annually under these various items not covered by annual appropriations?

Mr. GRIFFIN. You will find that in appendix A, at the back of the hearings.

Mr. PETTENGILL. About how much is it?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It amounts to over $2,000,000,000.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I congratulate the gentleman and his committee upon the splendid work they have done.

Mr. GRIFFIN. At this point I want to insert a summary of the bill and also a table of the items excluded:

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice there is some feeling of disturbance with reference to the retirement fund; that is, those who have had deductions from their pay and which now stands to their credit, and whose services have been severed for reasons other than for cause, and who are allowing the money to remain in there.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I understand what the gentleman is referring to. He is referring to an article in the Washington Herald today?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; exactly.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Now, that article is not strictly veracious. When I saw it I sent for Mr. Alcorn, who is legislative agent for the employees, and he said that the bill was perfectly satisfactory to him; that he understands that this transfer of accounts in the Treasury for moneys due to persons separated from the service, and who have disappeared for a time, is perfectly proper. It keeps the money in the Treasury and makes it possible for an individual to obtain his money when he turns up to claim it. The civil-service fund, the pension fund, and all other funds are amply protected by the terms of this bill. We have not impaired or threatened a single one of them.

At the present time the money may be paid out by the disbursing officer's department on inadequate proof with consequent risk of forgery and misrepresentation. The claimant now is really benefited by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am concerned whether there is necessity for fear on the part of those who might have money in the retirement fund that they cannot get it out.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Absolutely not.

Mr. McCORMACK. I wanted that cleared up.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am glad the gentleman brought the matter to the attention of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman such additional time as he desires.

TRUST-FUND SECTION

Mr. GRIFFIN. The trust-fund section of the bill covers 89 items and is perhaps one of the most important sections in the bill. There is evidently some confusion as to its interpretation, so it would seem to be proper to make this explanation: The object of this section is to collect all the trust items under one head.

Take, for instance, the item we have just been discussing, namely:

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND

This item falls under section 22 and is number 72 on page 32 of the bill. It is identified on the books of the Government by the figures in parentheses, namely "0t843."

I have heretofore explained the significance of the symbols used in identifying the various items on the books of the Government.

The "0" signifies that the item is maintained on the books of the Government under the heading "Legislative, Executive, and Independent Offices." The letter "t" signifies that it is maintained as a "trust fund." That is its present status, and with respect to that item this bill makes no change whatever. The reason why the item is at all mentioned in the bill is to confirm its present classification on the books of the Treasury as a "trust fund." The object is to put all the trust funds in one classification to simplify bookkeeping. It does not impair or reduce the principal of the funds or the provisions of law respecting their disbursement. In fact, the bill unequivocally declares:

All moneys accruing to these funds are hereby appropriated, and shall be disbursed in compliance with the terms of the trust.

No language could make it any clearer.

It will be noted that other items among the 89 in this section of the bill are designated by the letter "s" (meaning special funds). That indicates that they are transferred from "special" status and put in the category of "trust funds."

THE SURPLUS-FUND PROVISO

This proviso of section 22 reads as follows:

Provided further, That on June 30 of each year there shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury such portion of the balances in any trust-fund account hereinbefore or hereafter listed or established which have been in any such fund for more than 1 year and represent moneys belonging to individuals whose whereabouts are unknown, and subsequent claims therefor shall be disbursed under the appropriation account "Unclaimed moneys of individuals whose whereabouts are unknown", authorized to be established in section 19 of this act.

This proviso is simply a time-saving bookkeeping device. Its object is to put all unclaimed money accounts under one head, so that they may be identified on the books of the Government. The transfer does not impair the principal of the fund or make the unclaimed moneys less available. On the contrary, it really makes them more easily identifiable and, if anything, more accessible when the parties who are entitled to them turn up to claim them.

Putting them in the surplus fund is, in fact, a protection to them and removes all danger of their being merged in the general trust fund. So all this talk of confiscation of the employees' contribution to the retirement fund is utterly unfounded and ridiculous.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the House that in every case where a fund is transferred from one account to another to the Treasury in the manner provided in the bill, provision is always made that the original purpose of the act shall not be impaired; for instance, pension moneys, moneys for unknown claimants.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, if there is a continuing appropriation of $5,000,000, under the operation of the pending bill, if the Committee on Appropriations thought the activity should have only $3,000,000 for the ensuing fiscal year they could make that recommendation?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No such condition as that may exist. The section I have been discussing deals only with matters where there is a specific sum due to the party in the matter of claims.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am talking about the continuing appropriations—the permanent appropriations.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We do not continue any appropriations.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let us assume that this bill becomes a law, that a person has money in the retirement fund which is covered into the general fund of the Treasury; would it be necessary in order for the person to get the money back to have a private bill introduced in Congress?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No; we take care of that in the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is taken care of.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is taken care of.

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. CONDON. Section 8 of the bill provides that, effective July 1, 1935, the appropriation account on the books of the Government entitled "Recreation fund, Army", is abolished, and the balance thereof shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury.

In the first instance this money did not come from the Federal Treasury, did it?

Mr. GRIFFIN. No; that money came from the Army canteens and entertainment activities conducted by the Army for the benefit of the men. This money is to be used for their entertainment during war time. A part of this item of $800,000 is $32,000 which is called the "Stars and Stripes fund." This money was carried in a private bank. It never was in the Treasury. The Government did not have the benefit of interest on it or the use of it. It did not show up in the possible assets of the Treasury, but was kept in abeyance, kept in the air, so to speak, subject to disbursement by the Secretary of War. My colleague, Mr. Goss, of Connecticut located this item and had it put in a special fund in the Treasury, where its safety was guaranteed. It is now a part of this bill, the only change being to put it in the surplus fund of the Treasury.

Mr. CONDON. By this act we are to cover into the Treasury $800,000 that did not originally come from the United States Treasury but came from profits derived from the operation of agencies of the Government during war time?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. CONDON. Is there any provision in the bill for the return of the $800,000 should such an emergency arise again?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes; there is in the original law.

Mr. CONDON. Where is it to be found?

Mr. GRIFFIN. The present law itself provides that the money shall be used for recreation in time of war. So, if such an occasion ever arises this money may be made available.

Mr. CONDON. Will it be made available without another act of Congress?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I do not think so under the terms of this bill.

Mr. CONDON. It seems to me that ought to be so.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is a matter of argument. The committee covered this matter very thoroughly and came to the conclusion that whatever went into the Treasury should not be taken out except by the cognizance, the supervision, and the approval of Congress.

Mr. CONDON. But that was based upon the assumption that the money originally appropriated, or authorized to be appropriated, came out of the Treasury.

Mr. GRIFFIN. There was no such assumption.

Mr. CONDON. But this $800,000 never came out of the Treasury to begin with.

Mr. GRIFFIN. No; but we have safeguarded the fund. As it is under existing law, in the event of war, the fund would be automatically disbursed by any disbursing officer. Now, under the terms of this bill, an appropriation would be required.

Mr. CONDON. What I am interested in is having the $800,000 automatically become available during another emergency.

Mr. GRIFFIN. And we want to get away from these automatic appropriations.

Mr. CONDON. But this money did not come out of the Treasury originally.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Existing law specifically provides that this money shall be spent only for recreational purposes in time of war.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The existing law provides that. We are not repealing that part.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We have to declare war to call upon it. First of all you have to declare war, which would require an act of Congress. Then after you declare war you have to provide for munitions, and so forth, and then coincident with that would come an appropriation providing for the use of the Stars and Stripes fund and the other fund which we have put into the Treasury. The United States Treasury is a better custodian of that money than a private bank.

Mr. CONDON. But this is converted into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. GRIFFIN. It is covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury for its protection. Formerly it was kept in private banks, and the committee ascertained it had been used for unauthorized purposes.

Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield me 2 minutes to conclude?

Mr. GOSS. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I want to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GOSS. Is the gentleman through with his statement?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am through.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the unanimous endorsement of all 35 members of the Committee on Appropriations. May I commend especially the subcommittee headed by the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. GRIFFIN, for the hard, able, effective, and valuable work that he and the other Members of the Committee have been doing in bringing out this bill, with the help of the splendid clerk, Mr. Jack McFall, who has been of great assistance to them?

I do not know whether the chairman called attention to this or not, but the bill stops 367 back-door appropriations that for 135 years have been going out of the back door of the Treasury of the United States without any accounting by all to the Congress. Hereafter, they will have to come to Congress every year before they get money. There are only four indeterminate permanent appropriations left after we pass this bill.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is the last Congress in which I shall serve that I will vote for another appropriation of money to be turned over to and spent by somebody else just as they choose, regardless of the wishes of Congress. Hereafter the money that is going to be spent in this Nation that I will help to appropriate is not only going to be controlled by the Congress, but the Congress itself is going to say exactly how the money is going to be spent. [Applause.] We are not going to turn over hundreds of millions of dollars to some Cabinet officer who will arrogantly snap his fingers at Congress, and ignore the wishes of Congress, but we are going to know when, how, and where it is going to be spent. I hope in this new bill, which the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] is now preparing, that he will earmark every dollar of the money in order that Congress will know when the bill is passed exactly how the money is going to be spent. [Applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty accord with the principle embodied in this legislation. I think that legislation in the general field of permanent appropriations is absolutely essential, and I believe that it can result in the saving of many millions of dollars for the people of this country.

I take this opportunity, as a member of the subcommittee which has had charge of this bill, to pay my tribute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] for his painstaking and effective work as chairman of the committee with a view to the presentation of this bill to the House at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I really think that the House and the country owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], who has stood on this floor for years protesting against these permanent appropriations. It was his protests that brought about this investigation and the introduction of this bill. I say this on behalf of the gentleman, feeling that we should extend credit where credit is due. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am glad to join in every word that the gentleman from Missouri has said in respect to my able and forceful colleague from Connecticut, Mr. Goss.

Mr. Speaker, it is an amazing discovery to find that there are today on the Federal statute books no less than 370 so-called "permanent appropriations"—370 pieces of legislation calling for mandatory expenditure in each and every year without any consideration whatsoever by Congress—amounting, according to estimates for the fiscal year 1935, to well over $2,300,000,000.

These automatic appropriations exist because preceding Congresses have seen fit, perhaps without realizing the importance of the matter, to legislate in permanent terms rather than in those of authorization for annual appropriation subject to annual approval by the Congress. They exist also because the several attempts by other Congresses to eliminate them have never been fully consummated.

Sometimes the amounts payable are definitely specified. More often they are left indefinite, being dependent entirely upon the decision of the administrative authority concerned. Payments are made year after year without justification to Congress, without approval or supervision by Congress. They have been aptly characterized as "invisible appropriations."

The existence of these permanent appropriations serves in instance after instance to deprive the Congress of power which it should possess and exercise in the national interest. It serves to conceal the real facts in regard to the receipts and expenditures of the National Government. It serves to complicate bookkeeping and to impede auditing by the appropriate officials of the National Government. Merely to state that there are 370 avenues of appropriation which Congress does not control—370 unguarded doors, if you will, to the Treasury of the United States—is to demonstrate conclusively the urgent necessity of appropriate legislation.

The bill under consideration is directed at the evils referred to. A summary of its provisions appears in a very complete committee report. More detailed information will be found in the nearly 1,000 pages of hearings held in connection with its preparation.

The bill provides for the repeal of certain permanent appropriations no longer required. It impresses upon others a trust status, with authority for expenditure in accordance with the terms of the several trusts. By its principal provisions it aims to substitute for appropriation of permanent character authorization for annual appropriation on an equivalent basis, assuring continuing supervision by Congress.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Could the gentleman give to the Congress any idea as to what the actual saving will be each year from this bill?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The saving is problematical. It depends upon the action of Congress from year to year. It is impossible to state a definite figure, but the door to administrative appropriation is largely closed.

The bill does not deal with all existing permanent appropriations. A few have been excepted for reasons indicated in the report. It does, however, deal with the great bulk of those known to exist at this time, and it does make provision for such further action as may be desirable in the future by requiring an annual survey and special report with recommendations to the Congress by the Comptroller General of the United States. This provision, embodied in section 27 of the bill, assures the opportunity for continuing supervision.

The end in view, as I hope every Member of the House will appreciate, is to reestablish in Congress appropriate control insofar as practicable over every avenue of appropriation.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I join with the gentleman from Texas in urging upon the Members of the House the importance not only of supporting this principle at this time but also of continuing support to the end that the tendency to create further appropriations of permanent character may be definitely eliminated. [Applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY].

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I truly believe this is the most important piece of legislation that has been brought before this Congress. I believe it will do more to protect the Treasury of the United States against raids that are constantly made upon it than any piece of legislation that has been presented here. In short, all this legislation means is to stop these annual, recurring appropriations and to make the Departments come before the Congress and submit their estimates and then have their appropriations set out in an appropriation bill.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot take the Budget of this country now and tell anything about it as long as these appropriations continue. You cannot look at a balance sheet of this Government and tell what it means when we have millions of dollars that are hidden away and go out through the back door by this sort of appropriation.

For instance, this thing is happening which this bill will correct. Up to the last fiscal year, salaries and expenses of national-bank examiners were paid from assessments levied on the national banks, the assessments being permanently appropriated for this purpose. Even the freedom from congressional control that goes with a permanent appropriation was apparently not sufficient latitude to satisfy the administrative officers, for we find a provision in the Banking Act of 1933 that the money derived from these assessments are not Government funds nor appropriated moneys, with a result that the Comptroller of the Currency collects these funds and pays the examiners and fixes their salaries, and Congress never has any supervision over them at all. Thus, in the case of these expenses, Congress has lost not only the right to make annual appropriations, but has surrendered the right to make any appropriations at all. This bill stops that and each year they must come to the Congress and submit an estimate showing what they need and then let the Congress pass upon the appropriation. [Applause.]

This is a real economy measure and will undoubtedly result in a savings of millions of dollars every year to the Federal Treasury. The Subcommittee on Standing Appropriations has spent weeks investigating this subject and the information gathered has been most astounding. A casual reading of the report upon this bill will convince every Member of the House that this bill should pass and these back-door appropriations stopped.

These standing appropriations encourage extravagance in the Departments and various branches of the Government and should not be tolerated. All moneys that go into the Treasury should only be taken out by appropriation of the Congress after having been examined and passed upon by the Appropriations Committee. In this and no other way can proper protection be given to the public funds. I urge you to support this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask my colleague a question, if he will yield.

Mr. GOSS. I yield to the chairman of our committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman believe that the very fact that the officers who disburse or spend this money will know they will have to come before the Appropriations Committee and before Congress to justify their actions will have a salutary effect on the efficiency of expenditures?

Mr. GOSS. Absolutely.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill extends this protection to all the present permanent appropriations except four in the Federal Government, and does not my colleague believe that there should be some reviewing system followed by the Congress with respect to every cent that is expended by any department or any Government corporation?

Mr. GOSS. I certainly do; and I will say to the chairman of our committee that I hope before this Congress adjourns he will see to it that all the money in the P.W.A. fund is earmarked, and, further than this, that the P.W.A. cannot spend one dollar of Government money unless it has been authorized by the appropriate legislative committee of the House. [Applause.]

I hope we can get this type of legislation presented on the floor here. If we get such legislation and this bill goes over to the other body, if that body will keep it as clean as this committee has—and, believe me, we have had to take it on the chin and have had to do a number of unpopular things in respect of this bill—we will save our Government millions and millions of dollars. I hope the gentleman will use his influence, as I know he will, to help to protect the bill in the other body.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The question I was addressing to the gentleman was this: I believe this bill will go through both Houses of Congress, but we have a good many corporations now organized or being organized that are obligating the Government for vast sums of money and there is no power of review by the Congress. In other words, in my opinion, we ought to have a whip like a school teacher has over his children. We may not have to use it, and I do not think we will, but the fact we have it will make for more efficient administration.

Mr. GOSS. I agree with the gentleman absolutely.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the gentleman think it would be in the interest of economy if we would quit making so many lump-sum appropriations and require more details with respect to all of these appropriations, so they will be more closely supervised?

Mr. GOSS. Absolutely. The gentleman is very familiar with the type of appropriations that come to us in every bill and I know he is opposed to appropriations of that kind.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have always opposed them, and I may say to the gentleman that a bill is now pending before the legislative Committee on Indian Affairs asking for lump-sum appropriations instead of itemized appropriations.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Congress has been accused and abused for years for large expenditures when, in fact, millions and millions of dollars have been expended over which Congress has had no control.

Mr. GOSS. That is true, and I want to say right now that this bill ought to pass this House in a few minutes without a dissenting voice. The vote should be unanimous and if we can get it I am going to ask for a division so that another body may see that the vote is unanimous.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Goss) there were—ayes 230, noes none.

So (two thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROMOTION PARITY IN COAST GUARD

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 8644) to provide warrant officers of the Coast Guard parity of promotion with warrant officers of the Navy.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10, chapter 742, act of July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 817; U.S.C., title 14, sec. 219), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Warrant officers of the Coast Guard who have completed or shall hereafter complete 6 years' permanent service as such shall, after passing satisfactorily such examinations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be commissioned chief warrant officers shall receive the same pay, allowances, and benefits as officers of the Coast Guard, and such chief warrant officers shall receive the same pay, allowances, and benefits as chief warrant officers of the Navy of like length of service: Provided, That a chief warrant officer promoted from the grade of warrant officer shall suffer no reduction in pay by reason of such promotion."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I demand a second.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, there has always been the greatest admiration for men who "go down to the sea in ships." The history of the United States Coast Guard, both in war and in peace, has been one of the grandest epics of the Nation. I believe as an organization they are closer to the American people than any other branch of the service, and its unsung heroes are on every coast line of our country.

This bill seeks to wipe out the last remaining and only discrimination now existing in law between the Navy and the Coast Guard.

It provides that after a warrant officer in the Coast Guard has completed 6 years of service, upon satisfactory examination he may be promoted to the position of chief warrant officer, as now exists in the Navy.

Now, mind you, before he can become a warrant officer he must have patroled his lonely vigil on those beaches of our coasts for anywhere from 15 to 25 years—before he can reach that grade, and he must remain in that grade at least 6 years before he is entitled to this other promotion.

The cost of this measure is absolutely negligible. The highest it will ever cost is $84,000 a year, and that will not be reached until 1939.

This legislation, gentlemen of the House, is simply a question of fairness. The Coast Guard at the present time is, with the single exception of the warrant officers, organized like the Navy; the same commissioned personnel, in numbers, rank, precedence, privilege, pay, and so forth. That parity holds throughout in the two services except that in the Coast Guard there is omitted this one provision whereby warrant officers may become chief warrant officers. I certainly hope the House will wipe out this discrimination and give justice to these men. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman has spoken of the service of these men. Will he tell us what that service is, under what weather, and all those things?

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman knows that every single minute of the night our entire coast is patroled by men making a distance of 2½ to 3 miles, and that it is a hard and terrible life that they lead. They must have served 15 years or more before they can get any warrant. The bill requires that they shall be there at least 6 years before they come into the higher grade.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The sailor, except in time of war, is not in danger. But every time these men go out in a vessel they are in danger of going on the rocks and they risk their lives.

Mr. WARREN. Absolutely.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

No man in this House is a better friend of mine nor I of his than the gentleman who has just spoken, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. I have no personal or political interest in this bill, but I feel it my duty as Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to present to you the facts, and whatever action you take will be satisfactory to me.

The gentleman from North Carolina just spoke of the hardships encountered by the Coast Guard. Those hardships are encountered by the enlisted men as well as by the warrant officers, and I find no clause in this bill to increase the salaries or to advance the grade of the enlisted men. In fact, they do more dangerous services than the warrant officers. We will pass that.

I say to you the bill ought not to be passed, especially at this time, and I shall tell you the reason why. In the first place it is not necessary, it is not needed, and on that feature of the matter I read to you from a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

> The provisions of the present law (U.S.C., title 14, sec. 219), which gives to the President of the United States authority to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chief warrant officers of the Coast Guard from the permanent list of warrant officers of the Coast Guard, as the needs of the service may require, are deemed sufficient authority of law for the proper conduct of the Coast Guard in respect to these matters.

In other words, whenever the necessity arises for a chief warrant officer, the President sends the name of the warrant officer to the Senate and advances him to that grade, and he is made a chief warrant officer. The Secretary says that that is all that is needed. They become commissioned officers of the Coast Guard.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the same rule prevail in the Navy?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does not the gentleman think they deserve the same treatment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not gone into the merits of the provisions in the Navy. I have not gone into the vast number of officers the Navy may need over the Coast Guard; I have not gone into the complication of large vessels as compared to the Coast Guard. Does my friend know that most of the vessels in the Coast Guard are little bits of vessels carrying two or three or four or five men, and a warrant officer is sufficient to direct and control those vessels.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that they would become commissioned officers?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Is not the gentleman mistaken there?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I think commissioned officers are only those who graduated from the Coast Guard Academy at New London.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not an officer confirmed by the Senate in the Coast Guard.

Mr. SUTPHIN. This is a warrant officer.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The law provides that they shall become commissioned officers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. All these warrant officers are commissioned officers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. All the chief warrant officers; yes.

Mr. GLOVER. Can the gentleman tell us what the additional drain will be upon the Treasury by reason of the passage of this bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can. For this coming year it would be $55,000 and by 1939 it will be $85,000. Some claim that it cannot go higher than that. I claim it can. There are 600 warrant officers in the Coast Guard. Eighty-four of them are now chief warrant officers. In 6 years every one of those will be advanced to a chief warrant officer, and the advancement would keep going on, and as each one completed his 6 years of service, finally you would have nearly all chief warrant officers and a very few warrant officers. It reverses the order of service in the Coast Guard or the order of service that should exist in the Navy or the Coast Guard or any military or semimilitary organization. Let me go on with the reading of this letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

> If the proposed bill were enacted into law, 309 present permanent warrant officers who have had 6 years or more service in that grade would be required to be advanced to the grade of chief warrant officer.

Three hundred and nine at one swoop:

> With the 84 chief warrant officers already in the service, the total would be 393, a number not needed for the proper conduct of the Coast Guard.
> If the bill were enacted into law, within a few years the Coast Guard would have about 572 chief warrant officers, as the warrant officers pass the 6-year service requirement.

With only 84 needed, with an advance in salary of from $400 to $600 per warrant officer. On that point let us see how these folks are taken care of under the present law. A warrant officer, not a chief warrant officer, who has served 6 years in the Coast Guard now receives $2,016 annual salary. In addition to that annual salary, he is allowed $480 for rent and $219 for subsistence, making the total of $2,715 that they now receive. Yet they want you to pass this bill advancing those salaries from $200 to $300 to $600 a year, with the country in the condition that it is, when there are millions who would gladly take $100 for this service.

Let me develop another fact, and then you can see into this thing properly. They have not looked into it properly. There are 8,800 personnel in the Coast Guard. There are 507 commissioned officers, and there are 600 warrant officers. You have there over 1,100 officers to direct and control the action of only 8,800 men altogether. I say to you and the Secretary of the Treasury says to you that we do not need them, we do not want them. If they did, all they had to do is to request the President to send the names to the Senate. That is all I have to say. I just want to impress this fact upon you: The President and his administration are trying their best to conduct an economical government. How in the world can they conduct an economical government if bills like this come in day after day and compel an increase in the administration's expense of from $75,000 to $85,000 a year, and some of them millions?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. In the report it says the purpose of the bill—> is to wipe out the last remaining organizational discrimination between the Coast Guard and the Navy. This method affords the only opportunity for enlisted men—the very best, who work up after long and faithful service through all enlisted grades to warrant officers—to reach a commissioned grade, the lowest, ranking with but after ensigns.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, it is not the only method, because every recommendation of the President for a warrant officer to be advanced to that of chief warrant officer has to come from the warrant-officer grade. He must recommend a warrant-officer grade. That is the avenue of advancement that the law requires and now is open to these people. When the service needs them, the President recommends a warrant officer for promotion. It is the natural way it should be done; it is the proper way it should be done.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONNERY. If that is the only discrimination, if the organizations are lined up together on an organization standpoint, why should the Navy be preferred against the Coast Guard, who risk their lives day in and day out?

Mr. BUCHANAN. My dear sir, I have not gone into that character of promotion in the Navy Department. No bill has come before my committee for me to go into it, as far as I know; but I do know this: Suppose the Navy ought not to have that promotion; suppose it ought to be repealed in the Navy, then you take that as an example and wrongfully follow that example, and put promotion in the Coast Guard as well as the Navy. Take the Thomas amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill. It interfered with the Board in fixing the wages of certain of our Government activities. It increased a great many thousand men, and now they claim there are many thousand more who that bill did not affect or promote, and they want clarification and additional scope of that bill to increase the salaries of other employees. We cannot take one bad example and follow it. How do we know but what the Navy is a bad example, or the law that now governs it? Never in my life have I found such a complicated system of compensation as exists in the Army and Navy of the United States. It would take a Philadelphia lawyer a lifetime to understand it. I do not believe the gentleman understands it.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to my colleague there are many things about the Army and the Navy that I do not understand. I should like to see a lot of things changed. I should like to see them corrected, and I should like to see a decent air force in the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I join with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the rather extreme statements of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], I have not changed my views with regard to this bill. The gentleman speaks in a rather feeling way about the poor enlisted man having no chance for advancement. My dear friend, this would give the enlisted man his only opportunity for advancement. It is from the enlisted men that these warrant officers are taken. This bill proposes to make it possible for a warrant officer to advance to the rank of chief warrant officer as a reward for faithful service, a practice that is absolutely essential to real morale in the service.

Napoleon recognized the value of being able to take a man whom he recognized as a valuable soldier and on the spot, without the necessity of going to headquarters or anything of the kind for ceremony, raised the man to the rank to which he thought he was entitled, and thereby demonstrated to all of those about him how he rewarded men of real merit. Now, that is one of the purposes of this bill. The assurance of advancement is certain to make the men more contented and to cause them to work more enthusiastically. Now, my friends, let us not be misled by inaccurate statements as to the cost of this measure of justice to the Government even if it were willing to disregard the right of these men to fair treatment.

For the first year the total increase to the Treasury will be $18,000. For the second year it will be $55,000; for the third year $67,000; for the fourth year $81,000; for the fifth year $83,000, and finally $84,000 which is the maximum. Now, if there is one branch of the service which appeals to me, not only in a sentimental way, but in a very practical way, it is the Coast Guard. No man who has lived near the sea or the Great Lakes of the country can fail to recognize the great value of the service that the men of the Coast Guard render to the American people. They may not have the glamor of the man with the gilded uniform and a sword at his side but they are real men who risk their lives day after day.

The worse the storm may happen to be the more certain it will be that they must brave its dangers to save human lives and also property. Thousands of lives have been saved by the valorous service of these men who risk their own lives in the darkest night as well as in the daytime in order to protect those in danger. Shall we be so small as to indulge in stereotyped talk about saving money at the expense of justice to the men who constantly risk their lives and endure hardship to protect and save the lives of human beings? Yes, by all means, let us avoid extravagance, but let us not save at the expense of men who sacrifice and risk all in the service of humanity. Let us pass this bill by such an overwhelming vote as will show that the American people appreciate the high order of service rendered by the brave men of the Coast Guard, whose service is always constructive, never destructive.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, the estimate of the cost of this bill by the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was too generous. The Appropriations Committee is not apt to be generous; but we know its chairman has been in his estimated cost of the warrant officers provided by this bill. We know it cannot cost more than $190 per man per year. The officers of the Coast Guard point out that there will always be a certain amount of attrition through death and resignation. The estimates of the chairman apparently are based on the idea that members of the Coast Guard seldom die and never resign; but there is an attrition in that service as there is in the other services. I do not, however, wish to lay great stress on the money involved. At best and at worst it is too small to have any effect on this bill. This bill is an act of simple justice; and I take it that the United States Treasury is not in such a dangerous state that we must be unjust to a very deserving lot of men.

It has been pointed out that had these same men enlisted in the Navy they would have had the opportunities given them in this bill. The Coast Guard performs every type of duty that the Navy performs; the Coast Guard has the same classes of men the Navy has; and every class in the Coast Guard receives the same treatment as corresponding classes in the Navy except these warrant officers.

The dangerous nature of the service these men are constantly performing has been pointed out. The only difference between the Navy and the Coast Guard is that the Navy does have periods of peace, but the Coast Guard has nothing but war—war against the elements under the most dangerous circumstances. In time of actual war, as was shown in the last one, the Coast Guard officers are drafted into the Navy and become the most competent of pilots because they know the coast as no other men do.

Every day, somewhere on this coast, men in the Coast Guard are endangering their lives in saving the life and property of others. The same service rendered on the field of battle would entitle them to the Distinguished Service Medal or any other reward given to fighting men.

The men of the Coast Guard risk their lives but are seldom mentioned in the newspapers. If they die it creates no excitement; if they win they get but little praise.

Not to pass this bill would be an unjust act against the most deserving arm of the sea service combining the Navy and the Coast Guard. There is no reason under heaven why we should discriminate between the men in the two services. The men in the Coast Guard perform the harder and more dangerous work. It is but simple justice to pass this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] the remainder of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am taking my position not because of any personal interest in this legislation but because I believe it my duty as a Member of the House to try and keep down governmental expenses.

I wish to tell you a little bit about these warrant officers, what they receive, and what chief warrant officers receive. The enlisted men of the Coast Guard can be promoted to the grade of warrant officers provided they pass certain tests and examinations. They are given an opportunity to do this. The initial pay of a warrant officer is a salary of $1,836 a year, a rent allowance of $480 annually, and an annual subsistence allowance of $217, making a total of approximately $2,500 a year. When he has served 6 years he is entitled to a promotion of $200 a year approximately. After serving an additional 6 years he is entitled to another promotion of $200.

This bill would jump him up after 6 years' service to $3,100.

The Treasury Department tells us that in a few years we would have 572 warrant officers, a number which they say in their letter they do not need. This is practically 600 chief warrant officers. In the entire naval service, with an enlisted personnel of 81,000, there are but 1,400 warrant officers. The enlisted personnel of the Coast Guard is but 8,700.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill will jump 309 up immediately and others as they serve 6 years without any examination, without any test to determine their qualifications to occupy the higher commanding position in the service, will it not?

Mr. TABER. It will.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I wonder if the gentleman has read the hearings on this measure before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. TABER. No; I have not read those hearings, but I know something about the matter.

Mr. WARREN. I did not think the gentleman had read the hearings, by his statement.

Mr. TABER. After 10 years' experience on the Naval Appropriations Subcommittee I know something about the Navy and something about this situation.

Mr. WARREN. I know the gentleman wants to be fair to the House.

Mr. TABER. I should like to have the gentleman point out one single mistake I have made in my statement.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman does not mean to let the House infer that there would be an increase in the total personnel of warrant officers, does he?

Mr. TABER. I know that the Treasury Department has told us that there would be in a very few years 572 chief warrant officers. Maybe they do not know their business. Maybe they do not know what they are talking about, but there is nothing anywhere in the committee's report or anywhere else to dispute that.

Mr. WARREN. I dispute it, because the hearings dispute the gentleman's statement.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman should call attention to it in the time he has remaining.

It seems to me it is ridiculous for us to go ahead and increase our Budget expenses by a lot of money in the way of an increase in wages. We should not do that.

Let us look at the picture a little bit closer. Of course, it is nice to help these Coast Guard men, but what is the situation? They have smaller boats, and they require less highly trained men than in the case of the men on the great big battleships who have the responsibility of the mechanical devices on the big ships, such as the turrets, the big guns and the tremendous engines. The boats the Coast Guard have charge of are smaller and do not require the same sort of work or the same sort of responsibility. You know and I know that the man who takes care of the job on one of these big boats should receive more money.

Under this bill the peak salary that a man may get is $5,000. I do not think that we ought to get into this sort of situation. We have already in the provisions that we have made for the benefit of these Coast Guard officers and warrant officers and the promotion that is given them and the pay provided as much as the Government could afford to provide at this time, and I do not think we should go any further, in justice to the Government and in justice to the responsibilities we owe to our citizens back home. I think we ought to show in the Congress here at least once an ability to put on the brakes and stop.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Does the gentleman think it requires more skill to serve on a battleship than it does to launch one of these surfboats in a storm along the coast?

Mr. TABER. I think it is an entirely different proposition. The technical training, ability, and responsibility is not at all comparable.

Mr. SUTPHIN. But the Coast Guard work is much more hazardous.

Mr. TABER. I think we have already provided a fair and adequate pay for our Coast Guard men, and I think we ought to stick to our present schedule. We have done very well by them. If we had not, we would be in a different situation and one from which we might expect some criticism. We have permitted the Coast Guard men to run up as high as $3,100. We have done pretty well by them, and I do not think that we should at this time go further, especially when it means, perhaps, $55,000 in another year and $84,000 in a few more years. I think the House should vote this proposition down and save money for the country. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, 8 minutes, to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wondered, when I listened to the gentleman from New York with his intimate knowledge of conditions in the Navy, why he had not introduced a bill to provide for a reduction of the warrant officers in the Navy or to change the provisions of the law in order that the parity that should obtain between these two services should be established. He speaks the language of the Navy, but not the language of the Coast Guard.

May I answer certain points that have been made? First, I agree with some of the gentlemen who have spoken and who have said that this is not and should not be a matter of dollars and cents. However, even the letter of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury contains mistakes, and I am not surprised that, following the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, the gentleman from New York should have fallen into the same error. In the letter, which is filed in the report, there is a statement:

> If the proposed bill were enacted into law, 309 present permanent warrant officers who have had 6 years or more service in that grade would be required to be advanced to the grade of chief warrant officer.

The testimony as it was presented before the committee showed what? Not 309, but 291; and Commander Chalker says that during 1934 there would be 291; in 1935 there would be 3; in 1936, 124; in 1937, 36; and in 1938 and 1939, 0. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury comments upon the fact that within a few years the Coast Guard would have about 572 chief warrant officers, as the warrant officers complete the 6 years of service, and the gentleman from New York has emphasized that fact in his address.

Let us glance at the evidence as it was presented to the committee—and I am quoting from the testimony of Capt. Philip Lauriat, of the Coast Guard:

> Mr. MERRITT. What I was trying to clear up in my mind, Captain, was simply this, what I suggested to the general, that we wanted to guard against the suggestion here, at least, that this bill will produce an undue proportion of warrant officers and chief warrant officers to the number in the service.
> Captain LAURIAT. The number will be the same. It will only mean that a warrant officer, at the end of 6 years' service, can be promoted to chief warrant officer. The total number of warrant officers and chief warrant officers would be the same as the number of warrant officers without this.
> Mr. MERRITT. It would not change that number?
> Captain LAURIAT. No, sir.
> Mr. MERRITT. What I mean is that you would not put somebody else in the place of the man who was promoted?
> Captain LAURIAT. No, sir.
> Mr. MERRITT. That is what I wanted to find out about.
> Mr. REECE. There are now, of course, a certain number of warrant officers and chief warrant officers in the Coast Guard?
> Captain LAURIAT. Yes, sir.
> Mr. REECE. It is assumed that this number is considered essential to efficient administration of the Coast Guard?
> Captain LAURIAT. Yes, sir.
> Mr. REECE. If this bill should be enacted, its chief object would be to give increased recognition for long and faithful service to those warrant officers, without increasing the number, the total number, of warrant officers and chief warrant officers?
> Captain LAURIAT. Exactly.
> Mr. REECE. And chief warrant officers?
> Captain LAURIAT. Exactly.

The evidence itself absolutely demonstrates beyond any question and beyond any peradventure of a doubt that this does not provide the increase stated by the gentleman from New York and by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not blame the Secretary of the Treasury. It just happens that he has probably not gone into the question as fully as the committee.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I do not know whether I have much time remaining, but I yield for a question.

Mr. McFARLANE. I should like to know the difference involved in this promotion in the matter of pay.

Mr. BLAND. The evidence is $190 per man as the total amount per man involved. I cannot tell the gentleman the details with respect to longevity.

Mr. McFARLANE. How much do they receive per month in the different grades?

Mr. BLAND. I have not that information.

This House wants to do justice far and above any question of dollars and cents that may be involved. Here are men who are rendering a service in their capacity which is just as great as the service rendered by the Navy or the Army. These warrant officers may not be upon a big battleship, but the warrant officer of the Coast Guard serves on the small surfboat that is going out in the storm. This officer is facing the wind and never has an opportunity to yield to overwhelming odds, as in the case of the Army or the Navy. He is the man who has to fight and keep on fighting to the death in order to win the battle in which he is engaged—the salvation of those he goes out to save.

Study the record of the Coast Guard. Study their service. See them fighting, as the gentleman from North Carolina has said, in the lone hours of the night along the lonely beach. When you are out upon the water you feel an element of salvation and of safety, because you know that wherever you go the eyes of the Coast Guard are upon you, and that these men are there ready to launch the surfboats and go to your rescue regardless of what the opposition may be, and regardless of the disaster. Theirs to face the death, theirs always to be prepared, theirs to fight and theirs to fight not alone for the saving of property, but for more than that, for the saving of human lives. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that in the opinion of the Chair two thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that 79, not voting 151, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the bills for suspension are now to be called, and if anyone objects the bills automatically are removed from consideration?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6550) to remove the limitation on the filling of the vacancy in the office of United States district judge for the district of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me say to the gentleman that this is not making a new judgeship, but there is to be a judge appointed where a judge has died, and when his term expires the judgeship is eliminated. So that the bill as it will be reported and acted upon will simply provide for an additional judge in lieu of the one already existing and when he dies the office goes out with him. I hope my friend will not object.

Mr. YOUNG. I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a district judge to fill the vacancy in the district of Massachusetts occasioned by the death of Hon. James A. Lowell. Vacancies occurring at any time in the office of district judge for the district of Massachusetts are authorized to be filled.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the period, strike out the remaining language of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROMOTION AND DISCHARGE OF COMMISSIONED OFFICERS, MARINE CORPS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 6803) to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROMOTION BY SELECTION IN LINE OF THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 9068) to provide for promotion by selection in the line of the Navy in the grades of lieutenant commander and lieuttenant; to authorize the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy all midshipmen who hereafter graduate from the Naval Academy, and for other purposes, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOLD MEDAL TO GEORGE M. COHAN

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 7290) authorizing the President to present a gold medal to George M. Cohan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. All this bill does is to authorize the President to give a medal to George M. Cohan for writing the song Over There, which did so much in the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GENERAL LA FAYETTE MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. CONDON. GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 36, authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1934, General Pulaski Memorial Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 36

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of West Virginia, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, Tennessee, Indiana, Wisconsin, New York, Nebraska, Texas, Minnesota, Delaware, Maryland, Arkansas, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Ohio, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, and October 11, 1931, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1934, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of a number of gentlemen who desire to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this resolution I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on Senate Joint Resolution 36.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my support of the resolution now before us, to authorize the President of the United States to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on October 11 next, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski, a Polish patriot who fought and died in the cause of American independence.

It is gratifying to realize that with each succeeding observance of October 11, as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, to commemorate the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, there is an increasing appreciation of the worth-while service performed by this brave and courageous soldier for liberty and freedom.

During the last few years much has been accomplished by the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to create an increased interest in the activities and services of our Revolutionary leaders. In this connection it is appropriate that due recognition should be given to those of foreign birth who assisted so materially in winning our independence.

Among such was Count Casimir Pulaski, born in Podolia, Poland, on March 4, 1748, who became interested in the American struggle for independence and joined the forces of General Washington in March 1777, subsequently receiving from the Congress a commission as brigadier general.

Pulaski had been interested in military affairs before he reached his majority and served in the guard of Duke Charles of Courland before he reached the age of 20. In 1768 he joined his father, Joseph Pulaski, in Poland as one of the eight original associates of the Confederation of Bar. He and his father pledged their time and fortunes and lives to the accomplishing of the redemption of Poland. He carried on a partisan warfare after his father's death and in 1769 raised a revolt in Lithuania. He finally forced the Russians to withdraw from the fortified monastery of Czestochowa and took an active part in forcing them across the Vistula.

Subsequent unfortunate events caused Pulaski to leave his native land. He went to Turkey; but when the Sultan refused to aid him, he removed to Paris in 1775. It was in the French capital that he made the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin. After his talks with Franklin he became interested in the American independence and came to this country in March 1777. He immediately joined General Washington's staff in Philadelphia. In the Battle of Brandywine, in company with Greene, Wayne, Sullivan, and La Fayette, he struck his first blow in behalf of the American cause. His great service in this engagement was to defeat the attempt of the enemy to cut off the line of retreat. He executed his task so successfully and promptly that, upon the recommendation of Washington, he was commissioned as brigadier general by Congress and assigned to command the cavalry. General Washington, in his letter to Congress recommending Pulaski for this place, said:

> This gentleman has been, like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country and has sacrificed his fortune to his zeal for these objects. He derives from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit.

Pulaski later saved the Army from a surprise at Warren Tavern, near Philadelphia, and took part in the Battle of Germantown. In the winter of 1777–78 he participated in the operations of Gen. Anthony Wayne and helped defeat a division of British troops in Haddonfield, N.J., and participated in an engagement with the enemy at a spot in the city of Camden, N.J., located today in the vicinity of Haddon Avenue and Federal Street. Subsequently he was assigned to special duty at Valley Forge.

Congress, upon General Pulaski's suggestion and upon the recommendation of General Washington, authorized the formation of a corps of lancers and light infantry to be commanded by Pulaski. This corps, which was recruited mostly in Baltimore, later became famous under the name of Pulaski's Legion.

When he was stationed at Minisink, N.J., during the following winter, under a petty command which he did not like, he expressed himself as wishing to return to Europe, but Washington persuaded him to remain. On May 8, 1779, he entered Charleston, S.C., and 3 days later, May 11, the city was invested by 900 British troops from General Provost's Army. Pulaski's assault was unsuccessful, but he held the city until the arrival of reinforcements on May 13.

In the siege of Savannah, which resulted in his death, he rendered distinguished service. In the assault of October 8 he commanded the entire cavalry, both French and American. During the battle he received a wound in his right thigh which proved fatal. He was taken from the battlefield after the conflict to the brig Wasp for transfer to Charleston. Winds delayed the ship for several days, and Pulaski died on October 11, 1779, as the ship was leaving the river. He was buried at sea, but funeral services were held afterwards in the city of Charleston.

Brigadier Casimir Pulaski contributed substantially to the winning of our independence and gave his life for the cause. His services have been appropriately commemorated by Congress in the form of an equestrian statue, which stands between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets on historic Pennsylvania Avenue in the city of Washington, D.C.

In conclusion, permit me to express the hope that this resolution, the purpose of which is to fittingly commemorate the valuable services of General Pulaski, shall receive the approval of this House and thereby express upon the part of the people of our Nation continued appreciation of his brave and heroic service.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I voted in favor of Senate Joint Resolution 36 because I know that the Polish citizens of my district will be very happy to join with all our citizens in observing General Pulaski Memorial Day. I desire to say further that one of the most patriotic and progressive organizations in this country is the National Grange, which is whole-heartedly supporting President Roosevelt and his constructive efforts to benefit agriculture.

The membership of this great organization realizes that after the 12 years during which the plight of the farmer has constantly become worse, the recent conditions cannot be remedied immediately but require the lapse of a reasonable length of time to overcome. However, the Grangers everywhere appreciate the fact that the rehabilitation of agriculture is being accelerated by the increased purchasing power of the urban population resulting from the employment being provided in the cities and towns by the Federal reemployment projects, in addition to the direct benefits accruing from the numerous measures being taken by the Federal Government which are designed to aid the farmers.

The full effect of this entire program is being felt throughout the Nation, and the farmers of America will soon be in a happier and more prosperous condition than they have been for many years. With the advent of a complete recovery in business, agriculture will be certain to share in the general improvement in the conditions of all the people, which conditions occurred during the former administrations of the National Government and are being remedied by President Roosevelt and the Members of this Congress as rapidly as is humanly possible.

The National Grange held its sixty-seventh annual convention at Boise, Idaho, and the keynote address was delivered by National Master Louis J. Taber. I will quote one excerpt from this address:

President Roosevelt, his Secretary of Agriculture, and Adjustment Administrator all have shown unusual interest in and knowledge of our general farm problems. * * * Thirteen years of continued depression and a clear realization of what has occurred in America and the world compels the development of a long-time program for agriculture that will enable us to achieve a planned life more tolerable than the haphazard existence behind us.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I wish to express to Speaker RAINEY the appreciation of the Polish-Americans of the Nation for recognizing me on suspension day last Monday to move the immediate consideration of the Senate joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to proclaim October 11 next as a day of celebration and remembrance of the life and services of General Pulaski. I am glad to say it passed the House without a dissenting vote.

In the previous Congress Speaker Garner honored my congressional district, which has one of the largest Polish-American constituencies in the Nation, by recognizing me to move a similar resolution.

I am particularly happy to have had this recognition at this time on account of the visit this week to my home city of South Bend, Ind., of the son of the President of the Republic of Poland, whose coming was the occasion of a notable welcome participated in by many Polish-Americans who have achieved distinction both in public and private life, as well as by many other of our citizens.

Two years ago—the year of the Washington Bicentennial—I was invited by my Polish-American friends to speak on October 11 of that year both at Chicago and over the radio at South Bend.

As a number of my friends have expressed the desire that my address on that occasion be preserved, I include it herewith. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON AND PULASKI

Ladies and gentlemen: When men pause to render tribute to a great man, long since dead, they know that they cannot add to his happiness, nor make more calm the quiet of his grave. They do it, not to add glory to the dead but to glorify themselves. The tribute they pay to him they pay, in reality, to the greatness hidden within their own breasts, to the better selves they wish to be. It is a saying of the Arabs that a "fig tree, looking upon a fig tree, becomes fruitful." When we light a candle at a great man's shrine, we do so because we hope its rays will light our own faces and illuminate our souls. This is the secret of all ceremonies such as this, of all hero worship. It is not so much the respect of a child for its father as it is the aspiration of the child to become the man his father was.

"A prince once gazed on a warrior dead;
'Taller he seems in death', he said."

It was noted of a great man by some friend, "Whenever I talk with him, I leave his presence feeling 2 inches taller than before." Our Nation's story opens at a time "when men grew tall." And as we turn back to talk with them for a little while, we face the future feeling that we have somehow borrowed of their greatness and grown in stature.

One hundred and fifty-three years ago were desperate days. It was not then known whether this Nation would survive the travail of its birth. Whether the Declaration of Independence would become an immortal state paper or the document of a defeated destiny then hung in the balance. All that this Nation has since become was then at the hazard of war. Those were "times that tried men's souls." But there were men in those times—as, thank God, there are today—who had souls that would stand trial, that would ring true and clear on the red anvil of blood and war.

One of these was Casimir Pulaski. Another was George Washington. We celebrate this year the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Washington, and we celebrate this week the one hundred and fifty-third anniversary of the death of Pulaski. These names, linked in life, will march together the long road of immortality. Born on different continents, of different blood, they were both Americans. Tonight all Americans, of whatever national origin, join in their honor. They will remember with pride our first captain of Cavalry, as they remember with love his great Commander in Chief. Washington faced every danger but lived to become our first President. Pulaski faced every danger but died in action. One was laid to rest in his native mother earth; the body of the other was deposited in a watery grave far from his native land. But the souls of both are enshrined in our Valhalla.

It is peculiarly fitting that the pressing emergencies of the present day have not crowded out an observance of both these men. Indeed, we need them now more than in prosperous years. Poland recognizes Washington and America honors Pulaski. In fact, it is worthy of record that Poland is the only country in the world that paid tribute to Washington this year by issuing a postage stamp with a likeness of our great leader. That courtesy is now reciprocated by the proclamation of the President, issued in pursuance of a resolution of Congress, setting aside this day in honor of him who died from battle wounds in defense of our flag at the siege of Savannah 153 years ago.

Born in Poland, Pulaski claimed a wider fatherland. It was wherever liberty might be won. This sentiment is beautifully expressed by an American poet, James Russell Lowell, in his poem:

"THE FATHERLAND

"Where is the true man's fatherland?
Is it where he by chance is born?
Doth not the yearning spirit scorn
In such scant borders to be spanned?
Ah, yes! his fatherland must be
As the blue heaven wide and free!

"Where'er a single slave doth pine,
Where'er one man may help another—
Thank God for such a birthright, brother—
That spot of earth is thine and mine!
There is the true man's birthplace grand,
His is a world-wide fatherland!"

Such a spirit was Pulaski's. And it is an interesting and lovable incident of history that in Poland's later struggles for liberty, a number of Washington's officers, who had served with Pulaski on American soil, went overseas to fight for Poland. I do not know of anything that could better illustrate the remarkable impression that Pulaski made on his contemporaries than this. One of these men, Capt. Abner Crump, of Virginia, stated that he was eager to repay a small part of what our new Nation owed to Polish assistance in that dark hour. So he and others went abroad and joined that other great figure, Kosciusko, in the Polish-Russian War of 1792. One of these men spent 9 months in a Russian prison. It took a great soul to awaken in other men such an exchange of sacrifice as this. If Pulaski had lived, and if these men had returned with him as brothers in arms to fight for his beloved Poland, it would have been indeed noteworthy. But that they went overseas, after Pulaski's death, purely on account of their love for a man then in his grave, is perhaps the most remarkable tribute ever paid to him, one that surpasses the power of eloquence or the lasting endurance of bronze.

At an early age the spirit of Count Pulaski was stirred by the wrongs committed against his native land. In 1769 he joined his father, Joseph Pulaski, in which was termed the "Confederation of Bar." This confederation was an organization of Polish noblemen gathered at the village of Bar, in Podolia, each of whom pledged his time, his fortune, and his life to the redemption of Poland. Casimir Pulaski and his brother, Francis, became the active leaders in the movement. The older leaders were soon dispersed. Some had gone abroad; others were confined in dungeons. The latter was the fate of Pulaski's father. But Casimir, with those left, carried on. At the head of a small force of cavalry, he performed heroic feats. With his brother he became a constant terror to the Russians, who were trying to capture him. Suffice it to say, for 4 years, under the most trying conditions and the greatest adversity, this patriotic organization under this great leader fought against overwhelming odds to oust the enemies of Poland from their country. But all their efforts proved fruitless. The aged Pulaski died in prison; one of General Pulaski's brothers was killed before his eyes by the enemy; the youngest brother was taken into captivity; and many of his countrymen were doomed to misery.

Gen. Casimir Pulaski was the leading spirit of his countrymen in this unequal struggle to preserve his nation intact. He fought bravely, tenaciously, and with the zeal of a young man then but 25 years old. Heedless of his foe, which was much more powerful than his poorly equipped army and much larger in size, he made repeated stands against the enemy. His fame as a cavalry leader spread throughout Europe.

"Never was there a warrior", says the historian Rulhiére, "who possessed greater dexterity in every kind of service. Endowed by a peculiar gift of nature, strengthened by exercise, he was always the first to charge in person with an intrepidity which inspired his followers to imitate his example."

Casimir Pulaski not only lost his father and brothers in this glorious attempt to save Poland from the first of her ignoble partitions, but his estates were confiscated and he was proscribed by King Stanislaus and had to flee to Turkey. Thereafter Russia, Prussia, and Austria agreed to help themselves to large portions of Poland's territory, and had the effrontery to convene the Polish Diet and under duress compel it to sanction the beginning of what Henry Wharton called "the most flagrant violation of national justice and international law which has occurred since Europe emerged from barbarism."

Soon thereafter, in 1772, Count Casimir Pulaski issued his memorable manifesto, in which he said in part:

"I am not astonished that the enemies of my country, resolved on her ruin, should direct their shafts against those who most firmly resist their impetuosity, and that they should regard as such the brave Poles whom they have sacrificed and who are still repelling their most cruel attacks. * * * My destiny was clear when, at the age of 21, far from yielding to the amusements of youth, I regarded every moment as lost which was not employed in repelling the enemies of my country. * * * I have endeavored to mark my course by an invincible fortitude. Neither the blood of one of my brothers, which was shed by the enemy before my eyes, nor the cruel servitude of another, nor the sad fate of so many of my relations and compatriots has shaken my patriotism * * *."

Perhaps no better insight into the sturdy character of the illustrious Pulaski, known and revered in both Europe and America, could be given than the above excerpt from his manifesto. We are not surprised to hear a man of his lofty type later on, in August 1779, state to the Continental Congress:

"I could not submit to stoop before the sovereigns of Europe, so I came to hazard all for the freedom of America, and am desirous of passing the rest of my life in a country truly free and of settling as a citizen to fight for liberty."

As was said at the laying of the cornerstone of the monument to his memory at Savannah on October 11, 1853, "There soon came to him tidings that the people of another hemisphere had bid defiance to oppression and were arming for the struggle. The sound stirred the heart of Pulaski like the voice of a battle trumpet. It was a struggle for liberty. It was his cause, whoever the people and wherever the scene of conflict. Fate forbade him to achieve the independence of his own country, and true to the noble impulses of his soul, he came to aid in establishing that of America." "He saw", says Jared Sparks in his American Biography, "a new field opened for vindicating with his sword the same principles, the same rights of mankind, the same unchangeable laws of justice, as those for which he had wielded it with so much courage and singleness of purpose in his own country."

Benjamin Franklin, writing from Paris to General Washington on May 29, 1777, says:

"Count Pulaski, of Poland, an officer famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in defense of the liberties of his country against the three great invading powers of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, will have the honor of delivering this into your excellency's hands."

Anthony F. Zaleski, writing of the life of this great hero, said:

"We can readily see and understand why men like General Pulaski and his famous countryman, General Kosciusko, who also covered himself with undying glory in the Revolutionary War, were not soldiers of fortune nor waifs thrown to the surface of troubled waters by the love of adventure and quest of money or emolument, no matter what the cause might be that they were fighting for. These men fought long and hard to establish the principles of liberty and justice on their own soil; they were imbued with this spirit in their own country, and it was only natural that when they had given their best for these sacred ideals without success against tyrants and intriguing despoilers of humanity, they should hear the shot fired at Lexington that was 'heard round the world' with an eager ear, and should be willing to come to a foreign strand, although they neither understood the language nor were familiar with the customs of this strange people on another continent. The principles of human liberty and justice are essentially the same in every clime, and they were eager to resist a mighty empire that was trying to wrest them from a struggling people, a people whose slogan was 'give me liberty or give me death.'

"Like his famous compatriot, General Kosciusko, who, when he appeared before Washington and was asked by him what he could do, answered in a quiet way, 'Try me and see.' Pulaski did not wait for any appointment from Congress, but on hearing that the enemy was attacking Washington's forces hastened to join them as a volunteer."

General Pulaski landed in America about the middle of July 1777, and after presenting his letters to Washington and Congress, waited for Congress to take action. In the meantime, Washington's army passed through the streets of Philadelphia, on its way to Wilmington, Del. Spurred by the sight of marching soldiers, Pulaski, restless and eager to aid our cause as he was, decided not to wait for his commission but to follow the army as a volunteer. Captain Bentalou, an able officer who fought under Pulaski until he died and was himself wounded in the same engagement where Pulaski received his death wound at Savannah, Ga., writes:

"The inherent ardor of his warlike spirit, his habits of activity, and the desire of efficiently serving the cause which he had so warmly embraced, did not permit him to wait for the decision of Congress on his application, but he immediately joined the Army."

In Europe a member of the nobility, an officer of distinguished prestige; in America a private in the ranks. Such was Pulaski. He was not a "swivel-chair patriot." Not self but service was his life's motto. But, as was said by the British poet laureate on the death of Wellington, England's Iron Duke—

"The path of duty was the way to glory.
He that walks it, only thirsting
For the right, and learns to deaden
Love of self, before his journey closes,
He shall find the stubborn thistle bursting
Into glossy purples, which outredden
All voluptuous garden roses."

So it was with him. His journey closed almost at the threshold of life; but before it ended, he found the blossoms which reward the man who walks the path of duty.

It is, in fact, remarkable that within 2 months after his arrival, on September 15, 1777, Congress elected Pulaski "commander of the horse with the rank of brigadier." He thus became our first Chief of Cavalry. He fought at Germantown within 3 weeks thereafter. That winter, when Washington was at Valley Forge, he quartered his men and horses at Trenton. In February, in the dead of winter, he engaged the British at Camden, and then at Haddonfield and Coopers Ferry.

In March 1778 he asked permission from General Washington and Congress to organize an independent corps, later to be known throughout the Colonies and throughout history as the "Polish Legion." In equipping it he is said to have spent $50,000 of his own funds. These horsemen, among other arms, bore the famous Polish lances, a new weapon on this continent. His banner was made by the Moravian nuns at Bethlehem, Pa. Rated as the most expert horseman in the American Army, his service in leading and inspiring the cavalry arm of Washington is indeed inestimable. The development of modern warfare may be making cavalry a minor arm of national defense, but in those days of open war, of rapid movement, and close contact, without long-range guns, with poor roads, with no motor transport, railroads, or airplanes to spy out enemy positions, the man on horseback was perhaps the most valuable soldier we had. From the time Pulaski took command of that arm, it became a notable weapon of offense and defense. It is entirely possible that without it the cause of independence could not have been won.

An evening could be spent in recounting that service. I must come to the end—the siege of Savannah, Ga., in the fall of 1779, 2 years and 3 months after his landing on our shores. Leading in person a desperate charge, Pulaski was struck in the groin by shrapnel, and died 2 days later on board the brig Wasp—aged 31 years. He died that this Nation might live, and because he did so, he was borne—

From life's battle on his spears
To the great Valhalla cloisters
Of the ever-living years.

Since his time others have come from his native land to mix their blood with the blood of other peoples to make one common country and to build a single destiny. They have come to this country; they have come to South Bend, Laporte, Michigan City, Chicago, and scores of other cities. Today there are at least 4,000,000 Polish-Americans in America. Of that number, Pulaski was not the only one to die for this country. Since his time the Polish-Americans have offered their bodies in defense of his adopted flag on many a scene of courage and carnage—in the war for the Union, in the struggle against Spain, and in the great World War. The blood of Pulaski still beats in the veins of his sons.

In these latter years of sloth and selfishness which have helped bring on this present hour, when greed was god and patriotism a word that caused a slight curling of the lip in many polite decadent circles, I am reminded of what another great Pole said on this subject. His name was Joseph Conrad Korzeniowski. In reply to the statement that patriotism is a relic of barbarism, he nobly said, "Neither the great Florentine painter who closed his eyes in death thinking of his city, nor St. Francis blessing with his last breath the town of Assisi, were barbarians. It requires", he said, "a certain greatness of soul to interpret patriotism worthily, or else a sincerity of feeling denied to the vulgar refinement of modern thought, which cannot understand the august simplicity of a sentiment proceeding from the very nature of man."

"Vulgar refinement." We are suffocated with it. We need Washington and Pulaski once more in American life.

Pulaski, like Washington, could have chosen the easy course. They were both men of large means. But they recognized what wealthy men of recent years so often have not recognized, the responsibilities of rank and the trusteeship of wealth. It is the failure to recognize this responsibility that has contributed so much to the difficulties of today. Men have used wealth only to accumulate more wealth; they have used the vantage places of position and power to exploit rather than to serve. Washington, the first or second wealthiest man of the Colonies, placed his fortune at the hazard of combat. He served without pay. Pulaski, another wealthy man, defeated in his native land, loved liberty wherever she was worshiped, and worshiped her wherever she was loved. He came to our shores and offered Washington his sword and his purse. General Washington, in a letter to Congress recommending Pulaski for a commission as brigadier general, wrote:

"This gentleman has been, like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of this country and has sacrificed his fortune to his zeal for these objects. He derives from thence a title to our respect."

What a lesson to us these words are after a decade of selfish pursuit of selfish ends; after 10 years when country was forgotten and only the dollar remembered. The men who in recent years have amassed their millions to the impoverishment of their fellows are already forgotten, or remember only to be despised, but Washington and Pulaski still live. It is the old parable of sacrifice, of the seed that is lost in the ground. Not he who makes a fortune, but on the authority of George Washington, only he who is willing to "sacrifice his fortune" * * * "derives from thence a title to our respect."

It is only men like Washington and Pulaski who can save us now.

Republics may be ungrateful, but God is just. He saves in his treasure chest all that great souls give away. He keeps what is lost. He preserves in human hearts a just account of every sacrifice upon the altar of freedom and country. And so in this anniversary year we read once more the time-worn truth that he who loseth his life shall find it.

And now permit me to close with some lines of verse written by me in honor of this occasion:

It is man's lot to die, for that's God's destiny,
And death is only sad which leaves no legacy;
But on this day we shall not grieve, we shall not mourn,
For when Pulaski died America was born.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I know the Polish-American residents of my district will appreciate the honor being paid the memory of Gen. Casimir Pulaski by the passage of this Pulaski memorial day resolution.

Pulaski was only 31 years of age when he fell at the head of his troops at Savannah, October 11, 1779, but he had lived an abundant life, and the 4,000,000 of his countrymen who have come to our land to perpetuate the principles and ideals he died for are not unmindful of this national tribute.

In New Jersey, where Pulaski performed heroically prior to his campaign in the South, his memory is especially venerated. In my district bronze and marble statues, public parks, and playgrounds have been given his name, and our people meet to bear him tribute every year.

While we will acknowledge the services this gallant young officer gave to our cause in the Revolution in passing the bill, we will at the same time compliment the Polish people who have contributed so much toward the advancement of our country, especially in the field of art, music, literature, and engineering.

Poles were among the first to respond to the colors during the World War. I was the mayor of my home city of Passaic, N.J., during those stirring days, and our city has many of these fine people. I found them to be intensely patriotic, and I recall it was a Polish boy who was Passaic's first to make the supreme sacrifice in Flanders Fields.

REGISTRY OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill S. 2692, relating to the record of registry of certain aliens and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SCHOOLS NEED FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, for the past 14 years I have many times, on the floor of the House and elsewhere, enunciated a policy which I believe is the highest form of practical patriotism and vital to the welfare of my country and of its citizens. This policy now demands immediate and ample emergency Federal aid for States and communities so that they may maintain their school standards at the highest level of efficiency.

The present depression, if it has done nothing else, has demonstrated to the world that the multiplying complexities of our social and economic system are going to demand better trained and better equipped men and women if our country is to continue to prosper and grow great.

I have pleaded and argued before that the Federal Government must render quick and sufficient assistance to localities whose educational facilities have suffered the terrible ravages of depleted State and municipal income, and the wholesale retrenchments in their school budgets.

I now hereby serve notice that I will press for immediate action by this House which will assure to American parents that their children will have proper schooling next year, and which will assure to American teachers and other school employees that they will be paid in money, and not in substitutes for money, for their loyal, efficient services. I pledge myself to use every legitimate means possible to secure this money for our great American school system for the academic year of 1934–35.

My own State, Mississippi, owes her teachers approximately one and one half million dollars of unpaid salaries. This debt exists in spite of the fact that although the teachers of my State are paid, they receive scarcely any real money at all. Incredible as it may seem, the actual average pay for the elementary teachers of my State is about $27 per month, and for high-school teachers with a college degree the average is about $31 per month.

But Mississippi is not alone in facing such trying conditions. It is a national problem. All sections of our country are experiencing conditions which if let alone will give us a new generation poorly trained for its duties, half-literate and wholly unable to accept the responsibilities our great democracy thrusts upon them. This new generation must not be handicapped at a time when common sense, humanity, and expediency demand that it be strengthened. The forces that are taking away their inalienable rights to an education for useful citizenship are far beyond the control of the children and the young men and women who are suffering the wrong, and the implications of such a situation, if left unanswered and unmet by this Congress will bring our great country to a plight which none can foresee.

The illiterate of one State today is the problem of another State tomorrow. Illiteracy, and all the antisocial evils it carries in its wake know no State line. The transportation systems are still operating. The child who is denied schooling and cultural training in your State today is a fertile breeding ground for habits that will make him an unsatisfactory citizen in my State tomorrow.

Education, with its training for citizenship and useful living, is the true heart of our democracy. It is the lifeblood of our social well-being. Without adequate educational facilities kept up to full standard throughout our country, our future may easily be visualized and it is not a bright picture that meets the eye.

I maintain that rendering aid to the States and municipalities in their fight to conduct their school systems unhandicapped is not only a right of the Federal Government but it is a duty of the Federal Government. It should ever be a privilege. In normal times the Federal Government does not feed hungry people; it does not clothe the naked; it does not furnish them with fuel and medical care. But we do not live in normal times today. These are times of great emergency, and our great Government which has justly assumed the responsibility in their emergency for the physical well-being of our people must similarly aid and help to maintain the spiritual and educational life of our people to the full.

To my mind, present conditions may well be described by paraphrasing that great writer, H. G. Wells—the situation is a race between education and catastrophe.

I might extend and amplify my philosophy of governmental responsibility in this time of emergency, but the figures on the plight of our American school systems bring out my contention far better. The figures I now quote were gathered and compiled by the National Committee for Federal Emergency Aid for Education. This committee is composed of 32 national civic organizations such as the American Federation of Labor, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the Young Women's Christian Association, the great farmers' organizations, the American Legion, and other groups thoroughly representative of our national life.

Not one of these groups is asking for a fundamental change in our educational system. They all stand four-square for a State control system of public education, but every one of these organizations realize that the efforts to alleviate our emergency conditions must start with the prime consideration for the welfare and education of our children. Indeed, no single object could be placed higher in our recognition than that the income of the wealth of our Nation, now too highly concentrated, should be more equitably distributed, and in this new deal the children ought to be first.

These 32 organizations state that our schools must be adequately maintained by the States, and that when the State can no longer carry their burdens the Federal Government should render the necessary aid. The reason for this sensible contention is clearly evident in the figures adduced by these 32 organizations. Their report gives 9 incontrovertible reasons for securing Federal aid: (1) School revenues in 1933–34 have been seriously reduced below former figures; (2) school opportunities in 1934 have been inadequate or lacking; (3) Federal aid granted this year has been the only means of keeping many schools open; (4) enrollments next year will show significant increases; (5) property taxes, the chief source of school revenue, will be inadequate in 1934–35; (6) State school funds for 1934–35 will not offer sufficient relief to deplete local resources; (7) further State and local borrowing for school support is impracticable; (8) reports from most of the States indicate falling school revenues for 1934–35; (9) reports from most of the States indicate urgent need for Federal emergency aid for next year.

Consider just a few of these vital reasons for the necessity of Federal emergency aid. School expenditures are half a billion dollars below those of 5 years ago. In the last 5 years school expenditures per child enrolled have declined from $90.22 per child in 1929 to $66.53 per child in 1934. Before the first of this year 2,600 schools were closed and 140,000 children turned into the streets or the fields for their education. Except for Federal aid, 20,000 schools, involving more than 1,000,000 children, would be closed this very minute. In helping to have secured this Federal aid I take great pride.

Let me give you some more figures. Federal aid to schools kept 5,000 teachers in their regular classrooms. Hundreds of schools in rural communities completed a normal term only because of the more liberal interpretation recently given to the act authorizing Federal relief. And I am proud of my part in helping to secure this interpretation.

Abolition of child labor under the N.R.A. codes will increase enrollments, it is estimated, by more than 100,000. Facilities for these children must be provided. The States cannot do it; the Federal Government must do it.

Assessed valuations in our States have declined rapidly in the past few years. Tax delinquencies have mounted in the past few years. Tax limitation laws in many States further complicate the problem for the support of our schools. The growing indebtedness of States and municipalities creates new aspects of the problem of supplying adequate education for our children.

Let me quote from a significant portion of this report on our school systems. The report says:

> Between February 6 and 20 communications were received from superintendents of public instruction in 44 States giving their best judgments as to the amount of emergency Federal aid that would be required in their respective States in order to maintain a school term of normal length in 1934–35.

Thirty-two of the reports say the Federal aid will be needed. Seven of the statements do not request Federal aid for next year specifically, but report emergency conditions in the States concerned.

These are just a portion of the facts. I hope this short résumé of them will give you a picture of the problem that confronts our educational system. Federal emergency aid is badly needed. Fair play, good business judgment, and the highest form of patriotism and public service demand immediate action in the interest of our schools. I intend to fight for this aid, as I have fought for our schools during the past 14 years, so that our educational system shall be maintained unimpaired. For if our schools fail, democracy fails, and our great form of government will perish from the earth. And this we are all pledged to prevent.

More than this, there is due to these children and these young men and young women an elemental justice. In building up the colossal machinery of our present civilization this generation has rightly or wrongly mortgaged their future with its own. We cannot in common humanity ask them to carry the burden and deny them the schooling that they need if they are to carry it successfully.

THE NECESSITY OF DEFENSE OF ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a magazine article by Senator ROBINSON of Indiana, in respect to the military defenses of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I addressed the House on Alaska's strategic position in a proper plan of national defense in which I called special attention to the proximity of the Territory of Alaska to the continental United States, the fact that the main body of Alaska, containing on its coast innumerable safe and well-protected harbors and in its interior vast level plains, lies much nearer to the continental United States than do the Hawaiian Islands. I further called attention to the fact that the great circle route to the Orient, the line from the northern part of the Pacific coast of the United States to the Orient, runs just south of the great Aleutian chain of islands which stretch out from the main body of Alaska southwestward toward the northern part of the Japanese archipelago. I further adverted to the probability that in the future our most serious controversies would be with the nations that lie across the Pacific Ocean rather than with those of Europe. Today I have introduced a bill to provide for defense of the Nation, by the stationing of a military force, principally an air force, in Alaska.

I have endeavored to show the futility of spending millions in defensive works on the Hawaiian Islands and leaving Alaska entirely unguarded. Alaska is valuable in herself, and it is of the utmost importance in any scheme of the defense of the west coast of the United States. For with Hawaii fortified any attack from across the Pacific is bound to come by way of Alaska. Since I addressed the House on this subject I have read with great interest a magazine article by Senator ARTHUR R. ROBINSON appearing in the issue of Liberty Magazine of March 24, 1934, entitled "Will Japan Seize Alaska?" Senator ROBINSON made an extensive trip through Alaska in the summer of 1933, and it is evident from this article that he has grasped the importance not only of the actual resources of the Territory but also the very vital position which Alaska, a Territory of the United States, occupies with respect to the plan of national defense. This article is so important in its statement of facts and in its implications that I believe the people of the Nation should read it. It is as follows:

WILL JAPAN SEIZE ALASKA?

America's last frontier, with its limitless treasures, lies but a stone's throw from Yokohama. Is it wise to ignore this threat to peace and security at home? Here is an arresting warning from the Nation's Capital.

Would Japan like to have Alaska? Such a question posed today, with the seething unrest prevalent in the Orient and with Japan occupying Manchuria, to say nothing of the economic dilemmas which confront her, would seem to be an absurdity.

The truth is that such a question is far from absurd. The very forces which are operating in the Orient comprise threats and potential dangers not only to Alaska and to the North American Continent, but to the safety and security and peace of the United States.

Only a few years ago it was the fashion among intellectuals and pseudo-historical observers to hurl the epithets "alarmist" and "jingo" at anyone broad enough to point out rising dangers of a new war in the Orient which might threaten the United States; but subsequent trends have completely justified the many warnings of the past.

Moreover, we find we are now dealing with a new power in the Pacific. The new Japan—the power which has been rising rapidly for many years, but which threw off all disguise and challenged the world after the fateful September of 1931, when Manchuria was seized—is the undisputed leader in the Far East and one of the outstanding nations of the earth.

Events in the East indicate an alarming trend toward armed conflict. Saying that America is drifting toward war with Japan is not idle tub-thumping or sounding of alarms. It is the statement of a simple fact. By pointing out elements of friction and the dangers to world peace in the enigma of the Orient, we may be able to show how this problem can be met; how peace can be preserved.

But why discuss Alaska in relation to it?

Alaska is America's last frontier. It is a vast storehouse of resources—minerals, petroleum, lumber, furs, fish, livestock, and wild game. Here is a treasure chest of wealth which Japan could well use.

Japan has assumed Far Eastern leadership in the movement to make Asia safe for the Asiatics. The "rising tide of color" in the Orient is ominous warning to the West, where the prestige of the Occident declines. The chain of events during the last 3 years leads clearly to this conclusion: The capture of Manchuria, the occupation of Chapei in January 1932, the demilitarization of Shanghai, the breaking of the Chinese boycott, the pact of May 5, 1932, the rout of volunteer leaders in north China, and the Tangku truce of 1933.

Let us look further into the potential threat to Alaska. This vast country, contrary to impressions gained from schoolbook maps, is a tremendous territory, a land of nearly 600,000 square miles. Nor is it a region of insufferable winters and unendurable rigors. Alaska lies three fourths within the North Temperate Zone and has three climatic provinces. The Pacific coastal region and the Aleutian Islands have a climate comparable to that of Scotland and the Scandinavian Peninsula, though somewhat warmer. The inland region assimilates the climate of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba in Canada, while arctic conditions prevail only at the northernmost points of the Territory.

This land of glaciers, mountains, forests, mines, lakes, and streams could be ideally adapted to Japanese occupation if destiny should take such a turn.

Capable of supporting a large population if properly developed, Alaska now has only 59,000 inhabitants, about half of whom are Eskimos, Aleuts, and Indians, leaving only about 29,000 Americans residing in the entire region.

Mineral resources of the Territory include gold, silver, copper, coal, and lead, while other deposits yield antimony, tungsten, palladium, platinum, zinc, quicksilver, iron, peat, graphite, asbestos, mica, molybdenite, surphur, and barite. Gold exports alone in 1932 totaled more than $10,000,000. Copper is there in abundance and much coal is produced. In spite of the depression there has been comparatively little decline in the value of Alaskan minerals, which indicates the fundamental soundness of the Territorial mining situation.

More than 100,000 square miles of territory are capable of being developed agriculturally. Winter wheat and rye, oats, barley, spring wheat, hay, radishes, mustard, turnips, kale, lettuce, carrots, parsnips, parsley, peas, cress, cabbage, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, onions, spinach, beets, potatoes, rhubarb, caraway, mint, catnip, sage, thyme, corn, cucumbers, beans, tomatoes, eggplant, and melons all thrive in Alaska.

Stock raising can be made very important. Cattle, sheep, and reindeer are even now raised quite successfully. In fact, the reindeer herd now numbers more than 700,000, and the first of these animals were imported from Siberia in 1892.

There is considerable timber in Alaska—white spruce, Alaska white birch, balsam, poplar, black spruce, and Alaska larch. In fact, all conditions are favorable to the establishment of a thriving pulpwood and paper industry.

In addition to coal, Alaska has numerous undeveloped waterpower sites, with potential generating facilities ranging from 5,000 to 25,000 horsepower.

The fishing industry was the first to be developed, and since the purchase of the Territory from Russia in 1867 it has yielded more than $950,000,000. It is well to mention in this connection that Japan even now operates in Alaskan waters a great floating cannery for the commercial handling of large sea crabs. In fact, she has a monopoly on this business.

Deserving of mention also is the great herd of fur-bearing seals which makes its headquarters on the Pribilof Islands in Bering Sea. The only other rookeries known are both small and unimportant. Last year 54,500 seals were killed for their skins, and it is estimated that without interfering with proper conservation 100,000 skins can be taken annually in the not distant future.

While the United States exercises sovereignty over the Pribilof Islands, supervises the killing, and manages conservation of the herd, an international agreement was consummated some years ago under the terms of which 15 percent of all the skins taken go to Japan and the same number to Canada; the rest belong to the United States. This pact was entered into in order to abolish pelagic sealing and to prevent extermination of the herd. The skins bring from $20 to $25 each in the world fur market at St. Louis.

The Alaska Railroad, costing more than $60,000,000, connects the coast with the golden heart of Alaska at Fairbanks, nearly 500 miles away. New roads are being constructed throughout the Territory, and other types of communication dot the landscape. Aviation has been a boon to the people there and now more than 60 landing fields are in use. New airports are being built, and within the next 10 years there should be a network of railway, highway, and skyway facilities which would make every part of the vast domain accessible.

Notwithstanding the development that has taken place, the surface has scarcely been scratched to date, and one can easily understand how much these vast resources would mean to Japan with her rapidly expanding population and growing need for commodities which are not produced in her homeland. And a glance at the map will disclose that the Territory is literally within a stone's throw of Japan. The distance from Yokohama, Tokyo's seaport, to the westernmost part of Alaska is approximately 1,800 miles. The distance from Attu Island, westernmost end of the Aleutian chain, to Seattle is more than 2,400 miles. These figures speak for themselves.

Bering Sea is warmed by Pacific currents, while no ice is ordinarily encountered there after June. The great-circle route traversing the northern Pacific is by navigators always considered dangerous, due to fog, bad weather, unmarked islands, and uncharted seas. Nevertheless, the Japanese have charted it extensively; they navigate it constantly. The truth is they are far more familiar with Alaskan waters than is our own Navy. Their splendidly appointed passenger ships plying between Seattle and Yokohama use this route regularly, and apprentice seamen and both senior and junior officers of their navy are thoroughly familiar with every mile of the course.

It is true that our Coast and Geodetic Survey has done some charting and the Navy has done some aerial map making in this northern area. The fact remains, however, that the United States Navy, which may be called upon at any time to defend Alaska, should make regular trips to those waters and spend far more time there than it has ever done in the past.

It is estimated that more than 65,000,000 people dwell on Honshu and the smaller islands of the Japanese Archipelago. The population is increasing at the estimated rate of 1,000,000 a year. Only 17 percent of the land is said to be capable of cultivation. With a shortage of foodstuffs and an unfavorable trade balance, Japan found her economic problem growing more difficult year by year. With a collapse of markets she had to expand.

Manchuria was just across the way; the result—military and economic penetration, bloodshed, and demolition of western prestige in the Far East. The advance on Manchuria was no mere flash in the pan. The Japanese thought it was necessary due to pressure at home; a pressure for which the Occident may well assume part of the blame. Japan's program of expansion may be said to have begun when the West, in 1853, under Commodore Perry, forced her into the family of "civilized" nations. The West sowed the wind and is now reaping the whirlwind.

In the philosophy of Japan aggression is something to be encouraged. She has seen it succeed elsewhere; and, in addition to the example of other nations so conveniently placed before her, there was the traditional function of the sword in her empire. As a close observer of oriental customs points out, the sword, as the Japanese understood it, was the weapon of the feudal retainer who used it to enforce a rigid moral code—a code based on "might rights wrong." Japan, inspired by this tradition, even before the turn of the century, embarked on a policy of enforcement of this code. She "saved" Korea from China; she "saved" China from Russia; she "saved" Shantung from Germany; and now her legions are in Manchuria to "save" that country from the bandits.

Several factors united to bring about Japan's invasion of the Continent of Asia. If she was to compete with modern nations, new lands and new resources were necessary. Manchuria, probably the richest Province in all Asia, seemed to be the logical objective. Japan had never been defeated and her ego knew no bounds. Her people boast that they represent the only unconquered race on the globe and that their destiny in its ultimate fulfillment calls for world dominion.

That the West has for many years been exploiting the East is patent; and this has given Japan an opportunity to exploit the fears of Asiatics and rationalize her own conquests into what amounts to a Pan Asiatic fervor; a fervor that is unquestionably growing throughout the continent.

Invading Manchuria Japan earned the opprobrium of the West by ruthlessly violating international agreements. Her answer was that she was faced with the alternative of obeying covenants and confronting economic suicide, or of following a policy learned from the West, which seemed to her to be sensible, economically considered, though it might violate conventions.

She ignored the new rules, invaded the continent, and took three provinces. In return she received verbal wrist-slappings from the League of Nations and some harsh words from other sources. But the island empire had the power and was not to be stopped by international diplomatic jargon. The Japanese are realists.

In her ruthless and relentless conquest of China, Japan has dealt a blow to Western prestige in the Orient from which it will probably not recover in the next century. She has debunked the military superiority of the West, at least in her own eyes; and sooner or later the West will have to debunk the Japanese myth of invincibility. At present, Western influence in the Orient has virtually collapsed.

With the conquest of Manchuria came the puppet state of Manchukuo, or Ta Manchu Tikuo. Western nations can either recognize it and thereby give it their sanction, or they can go to war to enforce treaties signed by Japan agreeing not to violate the integrity of China. The first alternative would virtually repudiate covenants entered into by all nations concerned.

The second alternative would probably involve the world in armed conflict. Indeed, if an economic boycott should be attempted against Japan, it would very likely result in war.

If Japan's conquest is recognized, she will have gained a great objective. It will mean utter defeat for the League of Nations and vindication and justification for Japan. Thus far Manchukuo remains unrecognized.

But what of China, whose great empire is being dismembered? There is no cohesion and little effective nationalism there. What China needs above all things is a strong central government and better means of communication. Meanwhile she is not only completely at the mercy of Japan but she accepts the situation philosophically. She feels that in her "spiritual strength" she will defeat Japan—that she may be temporarily conquered by superior military forces but that the Japanese will be taken in and assimilated and in a century or so lose their identity, while the great Chinese race goes on.

Moreover, China's fear of the island empire is not so great as her fear of the Reds. General Chiang Kai-shek has said, "Anyone who dares to advocate resistance to the Japanese until the Reds are defeated should be severely punished." And a little later, shortly after Sun Fo and Wang Ching-wei had endorsed this view, what is known as the Tangku truce of May 31, 1933, was signed.

Under the terms of this truce China is committed not to attack Manchukuo, while Japan agrees not to invade China proper south of the demilitarized area along the Great Wall. Thus Manchuria is conceded to Japan. Also the boycott, China's greatest weapon, is effectively ruled out. Immediately upon signing the truce, Japan started a campaign to win the friendship of the Chinese.

What are some of the results of these developments? First and foremost, Japan has been given the opportunity to launch a great Pan Asiatic crusade. Inflammatory posters in Japan read, "Asiatics, awake! Japan's army is the strongest in the world! Japan does not fight China but western domination of China and her present rulers! Asiatic comrades, unite! Overthrow white domination!"

In a recent speech Lieutenant General Kiokatsu Sato, Japanese Imperial Army, retired, is quoted as saying, "It is our duty to detest and loathe the people of the United States. There is no need to employ honey-coated words or high-sounding expressions. We must speak out frankly and without reserve. Our enemy is the United States of America. Arise! Exert yourself! Prepare for the coming Japanese-American war. We must chastise our enemy, the United States of America."

An American correspondent quotes a Tokyo newspaper as follows: "Whatever may be their [Americans'] object, their actions are more despicable than those of the Germans, whose atrocities they attacked as worthy of the Huns. At least these Americans are barbarians who are on a lower plane of civilization than the Japanese."

Countless illustrations of Japanese feeling could be given, but the quotations above indicate very accurately the sentiment of the military party. A great Asiatic league is now in process of development among the peoples of the Orient. An esprit de corps is growing which foreshadows a real era of "Asia for the Asiatics." The movement is led by able and brilliant men, and is a trend that may well be considered.

Japan is supporting her myth of invincibility by building up her national defense. Today she has built completely up to the naval treaty limit, while the United States is not within 200,000 tons of the strength allowed her by the pact. When the next conference convenes Japan will demand parity in naval strength and probably get it. In short, Japan is eminently capable of taking care of herself, while the United States, considering the area she has to protect, is thoroughly weak and undermanned.

America does not seek war with Japan or any other nation. The American people are sick of war. We covet nothing possessed by any other country. All we desire is to be left alone; but, unfortunately, we may be attacked, and in such emergency must defend ourselves and our institutions.

True, we have one outpost in the Pacific. Pearl Harbor could and should be made the strongest naval base in the world. Indeed, it should be made impregnable, for, situated in the Hawaiian Islands, 2,100 miles from San Francisco, it is our farthest western stronghold.

Alaska stands out as a tempting morsel and is within a stone's throw of Japan. We talk in terms of high-sounding idealism and we evade realities. We are in no condition to engage in war. Our Navy is not up to the strength that security demands. As for Japan, she expects to keep her grip on Manchuria, and this attitude is expected to provoke a clash with the United States.

Tokichi Tanaka, former Japanese ambassador to Moscow, says that three potential sources of danger exist between Japan and the United States. One is the Manchurian affair, the other two are naval limitations and immigration regulations. He advises the world to forget the past and look to the future. He insists that America should withdraw from China and terminate extraterritoriality. Otherwise America's efforts will be considered an effort to checkmate Japan.

What would be the effect of war with Japan? Well, no one can predict with certainty. That we could win eventually is probably a conservative statement, but the campaign would doubtless be longer than most of our optimists think. Let us suppose that Japan were to capture the Aleutians. Using these as a base, she might conceivably go on to the mainland, and she would then be on the North American Continent. There she would be at our back door with the untold resources of Alaska at her command. This is something worth thinking about. This, indeed, would present a problem not to be solved by polite though firm notes from the State Department.

That war clouds hang low over the earth today is a fact, and Mars continues to seek victims. Because of this fact we must be prepared for any emergency that may arise. We must have a strong navy, capable of really defending the country and its sovereignty—a navy second to none on earth—one that will command the respect of the world.

Our quest is for peace with all men, but in that quest we must be prepared not only to wish for it but to demand it.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KENNY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on Thursday morning next for one half hour, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

Mr. KENNY. On the subject of a national lottery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, wishes to address the House on Friday next for 40 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that that permission be granted.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Reserving the right to object, I am wondering if some other day would not suit as well. We have the public roads bill for that morning.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I did not know what the order of business would be. I spoke to the majority leader about it.

Mr. BYRNS. I had hoped to get the air mail bill and the good roads bill passed by Thursday.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But it is specified for Friday on the program sent to the Members.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know anything about the program, but I had hoped we could get through with the Johnson bill by Wednesday and take up both the air-mail and the good-roads bills on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ADMISSION OF THE STATE OF ARKANSAS INTO THE UNION

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill, S. 2901, which passed the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, Senate bill No. 2901 now before Congress is a bill to authorize the coinage of a 50-cent piece in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union.

Arkansas was admitted into the Union on June 15, 1836. The growth of this State within this 100 years has not been excelled by any State in the Union.

The State of Arkansas has more navigable streams than any State in the Union, and these water powers are just now being developed for the use and good of mankind. We hope in the next few years to have many other developments of water power in Arkansas.

This State has the most wonderful climate, taking into consideration the entire 12 months of the year, of any State. It has a variety of soils that will produce almost any crop that will grow in America. Our principal crop for many years has been the cotton crop, and in the production of cotton we now occupy the third place of all the States of the Union.

The bottom lands of this State cannot be excelled for the production of this crop. Corn is grown in such quantities as to meet the needs of the people of the State for feed for stock and for food purposes, but very little has been shipped out of the State.

The northern part of the State is especially adapted to the growing of apples, the Arkansas Black and many of the standard varieties are grown there in large quantities and shipped in train loads out of this State into other markets.

Arkansas is rich in coal, and much coal is mined in this State of as fine quality as can be found almost anywhere. For vegetables, strawberries, and grapes there is no State anywhere that can excel ours.

The State of Arkansas is one of the four States that produces the principal part of the rice crop for domestic consumption and for export. About 100,000 acres of prairie black land is used for the cultivation of rice, and no more beautiful scene could be looked upon than these mighty fields of growing rice.

Arkansas also has one of the largest producing oil fields in the United States, and the supply seems to be inexhaustible, and other new fields are awaiting development when the demand for it comes.

Mining in our State is in its infancy yet, but is being rapidly developed.

Arkansas has the only diamond field in the United States, and some of the finest diamonds have been found there within the past few years that can be found anywhere.

It is in this State that the great Hot Springs National Park is situated, where the health-giving waters flow out of the mountain side, that has been a panacea for the ills of the nations. Thousands of persons go there annually in pursuit of health and go away restored to full health.

In this State the great bauxite mines are located at Bauxite, Saline County, Ark., which is the finest supply of bauxite in the United States and is there in inexhaustible quantities.

The State of Arkansas in the past few years has been on an extensive program of building highways. The State is now connected with some of the finest highways in the United States.

Time will not permit me to discuss all of the developments of this great State.

The first section of the bill provides that in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Arkansas into the Union there shall be coined at the mints of the United States 500,000 silver 50-cent pieces of such design as the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may select; but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models or master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

The second section of the bill provides that all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage authorized by this act.

Section 3 of the bill reads as follows:

The coins authorized by this act shall be issued only to the Arkansas Honorary Centennial Celebration Commission, or its duly authorized agent, in such numbers, and at such times as they shall be requested by such commission or any such agent, and upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

This bill was introduced by the junior Senator from Arkansas, Hon. HATTIE W. CARAWAY, the first and only woman ever elected to the United States Senate.

These silver coins will be bought by the citizens of the State and kept as souvenirs, and will be sold at a price that will enable the Arkansas Honorary Centennial Celebration Commission to suitably prepare for the celebration of this great event.

We invite you ladies and gentlemen of Congress to visit our State on this occasion and let us demonstrate to you the things I have said about Arkansas are true.

RAILROAD PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and I be permitted to enter a joint bill on railroad-pension legislation in this body.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, that is rather unusual, is it not?

Mr. KELLER. I understand that it is unusual and that is the reason I am asking the unanimous consent for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the purpose of it?

Mr. KELLER. The purpose is simply this: There have been two schools putting forward railroad-pension laws. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] represents one school, and I represent another. We have got together on a bill and should like to introduce it jointly.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen can introduce the same bill, but not jointly. It is against the rules of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire, at the request of Mr. CONNERY, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. CELLER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GRAY, for the remainder of the week, on account of important business.

To Mrs. NORTON, indefinitely, on account of the serious illness of her husband.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the Consent Calendar for the purpose of taking up no. 262 on the calendar, H.R. 7922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, what is the bill to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MOTT. This bill is a bill conveying to the State of Oregon a part of some lighthouse property which is no longer wanted by the Government, and which the Government desires to convey to the State of Oregon for highway and park purposes. The highway department is undertaking that work now, and they have no authority without this bill. If we wait until the next Consent Calendar day, it will be a very great handicap.

Mr. TRUAX. Was the bill objected to today?

Mr. MOTT. No. It was not reached. It is no. 262.

Mr. TRUAX. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]?

There was no objection.

YAQUINA BAY LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7922) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of a portion of the Yaquina Bay Lighthouse Reservation, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to convey to the State of Oregon (State Highway Commission), for public-highway and park purposes, the unused portion of Yaquina Bay Lighthouse Reservation, Oreg., containing an area of approximately 22 acres, more or less, excepting that part of lot 1, section 17; part of lot 1, section 18; and part of lot 5, section 8, all in township 11 south, of range 11 west, bordering on Yaquina Bay which is required for jetty purposes by the War Department, and reserving to the Commerce, Treasury, and War Departments the rights of ingress and egress over the land so transferred and to maintain thereon such facilities as these Departments may at any time require. The deed of conveyance shall describe by metes and bounds the land so transferred to the State of Oregon and contain the express condition that the grantee assumes the obligation of carrying out the purposes of the grant; and provide that the Secretary of Commerce may at any time by letter addressed to the Oregon State Highway Commission notify the grantee in the event it has not begun to perform, or has ceased to perform, any such obligations that the property so conveyed will revert to the United States; and if the grantee does not begin or resume the performance of such obligations within a period of 6 months from date of such notice, such property shall upon the expiration of such period revert to the United States without further notice of demand or any suit or proceeding.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMANENT JUDGESHIP

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the creation of a permanent judgeship to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Justice Lowell.

The Judiciary Committee voted unanimously to favorably report this bill. The judgeship which this bill proposes to make permanent was created by an act of Congress in 1922 which did not provide for the survival of the judgeship after the death of the incumbent.

From 1922 to 1930, the population of Massachusetts increased by approximately 400,000—a 10-percent increase—and now the population of Massachusetts is, in round figures, 4,300,000, according to the 1930 census; and, according to the senior judge now sitting, the work of the court has been more than doubled since he was appointed in 1922, and this is borne out by the statistics found in the reports of the attorney general for this court.

Although three judges have extended the length of the sessions, they have been unable to handle the work of this court, and it has been necessary to frequently call in outside assistance, when it was available. But even with the three judges plus the outside assistance, the number of cases pending at the end of the year still remains large. There were pending at the close of the year 1933 some 1,942 cases, and at the close of the year 1932 there were 1,810 cases pending.

In addition to the civil, criminal, admiralty, and bankruptcy cases, the court has a large number of naturalization cases. In 1931 to 1932 there were 6,685 cases filed; and in 1932–33 there were 4,337 cases filed. Over 9,000 persons were admitted to citizenship in 1932–33. In 1932 there were 2,495 bankruptcy cases filed; and in 1933, 2,162 bankruptcy cases were filed.

There are 19 States with less population than Massachusetts, having as many district court judges (two) as Massachusetts, and there are 10 with less population having more judges than Massachusetts. There is no State with the same population having as few judges as Massachusetts.

The thickly settled area with highly industrialized commercial activities of the State, naturally involving diversity of citizenship, has a natural tendency to foster conflict of interests and consequent recourse to court litigation.

Because of the character of its industry and commerce, many cases filed in the court are complex and technical and require long and protracted hearings presenting difficult questions of law for determination.

On Saturday the House passed 10 crime bills which confer additional jurisdiction on the United States courts. These bills were passed to aid and assist the Attorney General in his war on crime and in a speedy administration of justice. Surely, then, we do not want to leave this court in its crippled and impaired condition. If this bill is not passed at this session, it is bound to result in a break-down in the functions of this court and a great impairment of the administration of justice. The dockets and calendars will become congested, and it will take many years to correct the situation.

The port of Boston is located in Massachusetts and also many other smaller ports. This gives rise to a great number of admiralty cases which are of a complex and difficult nature and take up a great deal of the time of the courts.

A study of the figures taken from the Attorney General's reports from year to year (1922–33, inclusive) shows that, even with three judges and lengthened sessions of the court, the court was still unable to keep the calendar cleared. The figures show that the ordinary civil jury trials, whether those between private individuals or those between the United States and a private individual, cannot be reached until more than 2 years after the case is introduced. Criminal cases, if the cases are tried in the order in which they are introduced, must wait from 4 to 6 months before they can be tried or disposed of. It is apparent, then, that even when three judges were sitting there was an excessive delay before justice could be properly set into operation.

I have briefly presented the situation which has existed in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, not with 2 judges but with 3. Struggling now with a task which was too great for 3 judges, this court with only 2 judges is facing a most critical situation.

The vacancy on this court caused by the death of Judge Lowell has created an emergency which makes imperative the passage of this legislation in order that the administration of justice may not be seriously impaired by the congestion of dockets. The court should be prepared to try and dispose of criminal cases with dispatch and guarantee to litigants before the court that their cases will be disposed of within a reasonable time. If this legislation is not passed by this session of Congress, the impairment and damage caused the court may be so serious that it will require many years to restore the court to its proper functioning and perhaps a greater expenditure of public funds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress, relative to the passage of the Frazier bill, providing for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness

Whereas it is the sense of the members of the Ohio General Assembly that the Government of the United States should perform its solemn promise and place American agriculture on the basis of equality with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit, and that adequate legislation to that end should be adopted at the earliest possible date; and

Whereas, unless immediate relief is given, hundreds of thousands of farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions; and

Whereas the price of agricultural products during recent years has in fact been far below the cost of production; and

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors throughout this State and Nation; and

Whereas Senate bill no. 457, introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, of North Dakota, provides for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness and provides for a reduced rate of interest for the same through the Federal farm-loan system and the Federal Reserve Bank System; and

Whereas the provisions of this bill will have a vital effect upon the agricultural industry of the State of Ohio; and

Whereas at the present time many loans relating to the agricultural industry should bear a reduced rate of interest; and

Whereas agriculture is the basic industry of this country and there can be no sound business prosperity until agriculture is put on an equality with other industries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of your memoralists, the members of the Ohio General Assembly, that the Congress of the United States should enact the provisions of the said Senate bill no. 457; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the clerk of the house of representatives tc the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Ohio in Congress, and to United States Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, the Senator who introduced the bill.

FRANK CAVE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES SAWYER,

Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: We take pleasure in quoting below a resolution adopted in the tenth annual meeting of the membership of the American Cotton Shippers Association, held in Memphis, Tenn., on April 27 and 28, and earnestly bespeak your consideration of same:

"Resolved by the American Cotton Shippers Association, That we approve the pending bill authorizing the President to negotiate reciprocal tariff agreements.

"That we commend the administration for its policy of promoting international trade.

"That we actively urge our Representatives in Congress from cotton-producing States to support the enactment of the bill in order:

"1. To permit the rapid disposal of our surplus cotton in foreign markets;

"2. To escape the necessity of severe restrictive crop and marketing control measures; and

"3. To restore the production of cotton for export and avoid the loss of important markets. And be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be conveyed immediately to the President of the United States, the Secretaries of State and Commerce, the Chairmen of the Senate Finance and Agriculture Committees, and all Members of Congress from cotton-producing States."

Yours very truly,

R. C. DICKERSON,
Vice President and Secretary.

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS—EDITORIAL BY WILLIAM HIRTH

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Missouri Farmer, written by William Hirth, president of the Missouri Farmers' Association. I may say in passing that the Missouri Farmers' Association is one of the largest farm cooperative associations in the United States and, incidentally, does the largest business in the State of Missouri in actual turn-over in dollars and cents. I ask to insert this editorial in the RECORD particularly because of the very illuminating reference made by Mr. Hirth to the effect of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act on American agriculture.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Last November, when a group of western governors went to Washington to petition President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace for fixed farm prices in our home markets, they predicated this petition upon the fact that under the hundreds of N.R.A. codes our various industries are being assured of a profit above actual production cost, and thus in substance they asked that the Government quit making fish of one and fowl of the other—that it treat the farmer as it is treating everybody else from the big steel mills to clothes cleaners and bootblacks. And in order that the various farm surpluses be prevented from demoralizing the home-market prices that might be agreed upon, they suggested that all farmers and the handlers and processors of farm products be licensed in order that in this way the various surpluses might be segregated in a fool-proof manner, and then be disposed of in the world markets, if and when these markets can absorb them, and without loss to the Government. I had a good deal to do with helping these western Governors to formulate the above demand, and not only were they tremendously in earnest, but also there are those who think that I myself am not exactly a novice on the farm question; for 8 long, weary years I submitted the chief defense of the various McNary-Haugen bills before the committees of Congress.

As the story goes, President Roosevelt listened to the governors with apparent interest, and thus they felt much encouraged until Secretary Wallace and Professor Tugwell were called in; not only did these two latter gentlemen listen to the governors impatiently, but on that occasion, and frequently since then, Secretary Wallace has talked gloomily of the regimentation which fixed home market farm prices would entail, and that this plan would make it necessary for the Department of Agriculture to "keep track of every plowed field", and that every farmer would have to carry a card which would have to be punched every time he sought to market a pig or a dozen eggs, etc., and thus deeply disappointed, if not disheartened, the Governors paid their hotel bills and left for home. Recently Governor Olsen, of Minnesota, Governor Schmedeman, of Wisconsin, and Governor Herring of Iowa repeated the foregoing demand, and in my opinion, we have by no means heard the last of it, for with Secretary Wallace's pink tea farm remedies on the one hand, and with the N.R.A. codes biting in deeper and deeper, the farmer's position is becoming increasingly precarious.

Just why Secretary Wallace should have such horror of what he calls "regimentation" of the farmer is no doubt puzzling to a good many close observers of public events; something like a year ago, when the new farm act was passed and the terms of which were largely dictated by Wallace, he referred to it as a "major social experiment", and this when the most of us thought that the farmer had already been experimented upon enough and then some; also, along with Professor Tugwell, Secretary Wallace is supposed to have a good deal of sympathy with the planned society we are hearing so much about, and, therefore, when he suddenly assumes the attitude of a conservative, is not the role rather new to him? Again, when during recent months thousands of Department of Agriculture employees have been telling some millions of cotton, wheat, and corn growers and hog producers to sign on the dotted line, and when at this very moment a new flock of employees are measuring wheat fields to see whether wheat growers are trying to put anything over, is not this "regimentation" in big doses; and likewise, "keeping track of the plowed fields"?

As I have already pointed out, in demanding fixed prices on farm products in our home markets, the western Governors and the farm leaders who are behind them are merely asking that the Government shall do for agriculture what it is doing for industry through the N.R.A.—nothing more and nothing less. And why, in addition, did the Governors ask that farmers and handlers and processors of farm commodities be licensed, and that the Government aid in so isolating the various farm surpluses (without loss to the Treasury) that the latter cannot be offered for sale in our home markets? Because unless this is done it would be impossible to maintain the home market prices agreed upon—for instance, a home market price of $1.50 per bushel on wheat could not be maintained if more wheat was offered than our home markets can consume, and the same is true of cotton, pork products, dairy products, etc.; and therefore the Governors requested this degree of regimentation, not because they are radicals or because they want to make the country over, but because this gigantic problem cannot be mastered in any other way.

And as I have suggested on previous occasions, there is nothing new nor strange about the principle that is involved in this proposal. When the steel mills obtain a higher protective tariff, what do they immediately proceed to do? They raise their prices in our home markets up even with the new tariff wall, and then they sell their surplus (which they can expand or reduce much easier than the farmer can expand or reduce his surpluses) for what they can get for it in the world markets; but while a few great steel mills can easily do teamwork of this kind, how can 2,000,000 wheat growers and 2,000,000 cotton growers and 2,000,000 hog producers, all of whom are unorganized, act with similar precision and certainty? It is utterly impossible for them to do so, and this is why the protective tariff has for years been a ghastly joke on any farm commodity of which we produce a surplus, and Secretary Wallace knows this, and thus when the western Governors made their demand they merely asked the Government to help our 6,500,000 farmers do what they cannot do by themselves.

And therefore when in the face of the existing tragic farm situation Secretary Wallace shouts "regimentation", he places himself in the position of a doctor who advises against an operation when a patient is desperately ill of appendicitis—to all intents and purposes he is saying to such a patient, "I know you are a mighty sick man. Your appendix may burst at any moment, and then there will be the added danger of peritonitis, but before we operate let's try a few more salves and liniments." And here is hoping that the President will soon take things into his own hands—and there isn't any time to lose—the American farmer is desperately sick, and he needs a doctor who knows what to do and who has the nerve to do it.

During the early part of the recent March, hogs sold at Buffalo, N.Y., for $5.25 per hundredweight, while at Toronto, Canada, the same grade of hogs sold for $10.40 per hundredweight, and, despite this tremendous disparity in price, pork chops sold for 26 cents per pound in Buffalo, and 16.6 cents per pound in Toronto, and thus would it not seem that our American packers have some tall explaining to do, and should not the Federal Trade Commission or Secretary Wallace compel them to do so? Certainly there is something wrong somewhere, and on the face of things both our farmers and consumers are getting the hot end of the poker. If our farmers could be assured of a price of $10.40 per hundredweight for the hogs that can be consumed in our home markets, they would gladly cut out their surplus pork production, and the price of pork chops in Canada shows that this would not necessarily mean hardship on our town and city consumers.

And talking of Canada, the passage of the Hawley-Smoot tariff during the Hoover administration was not only a gigantic blunder, but a crime, for it drove Canada to retaliatory tariffs against the products of our farms and factories, and thus our best and most friendly customer for many years was converted into an open enemy. One reason why our egg prices have been so low during the last several years is because the above act caused Canada to fix a prohibitive tariff against them, and this applies to many other American farm products. First and last I consider the Hawley-Smoot Act the most asinine political blunder since the Civil War, and it was dictated by the big tariff hogs of the country, and now we wonder why other nations have practically quit trading with us. Already it has cost us many hundred of millions of dollars in foreign trade, and the end is not yet in sight, for many of the bridges which have been burned will never be rebuilt. But coming back to hogs, if Secretary Wallace and Professor Tugwell are not too busy they ought to try to find out exactly why hogs bring $10.40 per hundredweight on the Canadian side and only $5.25 per hundredweight on this side.

To show what the various N.R.A. codes are doing to merchandise prices, recently, and just a few days before the lumber code went into effect, the Missouri Farmers' Association purchased 90 carloads of egg cases to supply its hundreds of elevators and exchanges, and if we had waited until after this code went into effect, these egg cases would have cost us approximately $15,000 more, and this is merely one of many similar advances. Because there are many towns in which harness is no longer for sale, in the winter of 1932 our association commenced its manufacture, and we were able to offer a chain harness made out of the best of leather for $17.50, while now we are compelled to ask $25 for a harness of similar quality. It is because of the low world price of farm commodities, and what the N.R.A. codes are doing to the farmer's production costs that certain western Governors and farm leaders have been demanding fixed farm prices on those farm commodities that are consumed in our home markets, meanwhile cutting down surplus production within reasonable limitations, and isolating these surpluses through Government aid, and letting them bring what they will in the world markets, and until this is done the future of agriculture will continue to remain perilous. Or to put it in the simplest way, when under the N.R.A. codes everything from steel to bootblacks is assured of a profit above production cost, how can the farmer continue to exist unless he is put on the same footing?

REXFORD G. TUGWELL—EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON HERALD

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting editorial from the Washington Herald relative to Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of May 8, 1934]

TOO MUCH TUGWELLISM

An interesting situation has arisen from the President's nomination of Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell to the newly created post of Under Secretary of Agriculture.

According to a Washington dispatch, there is opposition to his confirmation within the committee of the Senate to which the nomination was referred, and doubt as to whether the committee will report it favorably.

It is said that only pressure from the President will force the nomination out of the committee.

But even then the nomination may find vigorous opposition on the floor of the Senate.

The pent-up distrust of the Tugwellian theories and the suspicion that he is using his influence with the administration and the powers of his present office to propagate views that are radically in conflict with American principles have long been looking for expression.

But the administration apparently is as desirous of averting such a scrutiny of its socialistic and communistic aims. Its unwillingness to permit such an investigation was clearly shown in the fake hearing accorded Dr. Wirt.

The "revolution" apparently will not be dropped, but it must not be discussed.

It is a part, it would seem, of the revolution's technique to push its unavowed but nevertheless real designs as far as possible before suffering them to be unmasked.

From this standpoint it would seem politic for the administration to allow the nomination to slumber in the committee, but here, according to the same dispatch, a new difficulty arises.

Dr. Tugwell, it is stated, would regard such action as a reflection equivalent to a vote of no confidence, and there is an intimation that he would resign from the Government's service and return to the more congenial activities of the classroom and the pedagogue.

Well, this wouldn't be bad at all.

The country is fed up on Tugwell and all the other apostles of Bedlam.

It doesn't want to hear much more from or about any of them—Jerome Frank, the general counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, or David E. Lilenthal, of the Tennessee Valley Authority, or Nathan R. Margold, solicitor of the Interior Department, or Thomas Corcoran, counsel, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or Professor Landis, of the Federal Trade Commission, or Benjamin B. Cohen, counsel to the Public Works Housing Authority, or Paul Freund, attorney of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or Charles Edward Wyzanski, solicitor of the Labor Department.

And there are others.

The people are ready to rule the entire Frankfurter "stable" off the turf. They are heartily sick of the "brain trust." They perceive in its policies only folly and defect. The names of its members are vinegar to their eyes.

Not heroes, but quacks—the public says "away with them." And Tugwell may as well lead the procession.

"The scholar, when common sense is wanted", to quote Ralph Waldo Emerson, "is an encumbrance."

MUNICIPAL DEBT READJUSTMENTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in the course of last week's debate on the municipal debt refunding bill, many fears, which I believe to be idle, were expressed lest the measure should encourage municipal defaults. Much argument was submitted which I sincerely believed to have been unfounded and without color of justification. I insisted, the Senate will recall, that the bill would be of great advantage to bond owners and to the general municipal bond market, as well as to many of our distraught cities which are bravely trying to perfect honorable refunding arrangements rather than to be driven to continuing defaults.

It is with the greatest satisfaction that I read a contemporary editorial in the well-known and standard trade financial paper called "The Bond Buyer" in its issue of May 5, 1934, unreservedly endorsing the action of the Senate and pointing out that the Senate's approval of the bill already has substantially strengthened the municipal bond market. That is the logical result. It is the result I anticipated. It reflects the true purposes and advantages of the legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUMNERS-WILCOX BILL

With the passage by the United States Senate this week of the Sumners-Wilcox bill an effort which was initiated in February 1933, in the last weeks of the Hoover administration, finally reached a successful conclusion. This proposal, originally sponsored by Representative J. MARK WILCOX, of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Florida, has had an interesting career. Opposed throughout by such organizations as the United States Chamber of Commerce, the American Bar Association, and the American Bankers Association, it was supported consistently by the Investment Bankers Association, several of the most prominent life-insurance companies; and by the Roosevelt administration. The fraternal insurance companies originally gave it a hearty endorsement and later, led by the United Mutual Life Insurance Co., fought it bitterly.

There was from the start, and there is today, a wide-spread lack of understanding of the proposal. The debate on the bill in the Senate this week was nothing short of amazing as a disclosure of the confusion regarding it among those who have had the bill under consideration for months. The newspapers, generally speaking, have added greatly to the confusion.

The Sumners bill was originally sought by municipal bondholders, not municipal debtors. Its primary purpose was to provide legal machinery to put debt readjustment plans into effect notwithstanding the opposition of small minority creditor groups who for one reason or another would not accept the majority views.

Offered as an amendment to the Federal bankruptcy law, and therefore given the title "municipal bankruptcy bill", the bill made an unfavorable first impression upon almost everyone to whose notice it was brought. Failure to give it careful study usually meant continued opposition.

In its final form the Sumners bill is a temporary emergency measure which will cease to be a law at the expiration of 2 years unless Congress reenacts it. In the meantime its presence on the statute books will alter the fundamental legal status of municipal securities to just this extent: Whenever the holders of 51 percent in amount of the debts of a municipality agree that such municipality should have the benefit of some rearrangement of its outstanding debt obligations and if this group can work out a plan which proves acceptable to holders of 75 percent of the creditors, the municipality and a Federal district court, then the holders of the remaining 25 percent may be denied the remedies at law which have heretofore, in theory, at least, been available in enforcing payment of their claims strictly in accordance with the terms of the original contract.

That is the essence of the Sumners bill which has been attacked as a vicious measure on the ground that it invites wholesale repudiation of debts and, as Senator VAN NUYS said in opposing it in the Senate last Monday, "is the opening wedge in repudiation of State and Federal obligations."

Another popular objection to the bill was that it would ruin the credit of solvent municipalities, and yet the bill was endorsed by the mayors of more than 100 of the largest and most solvent cities and by thousands of smaller municipalities throughout the country. Furthermore, during the last few months when the bill was clearly on its way to a vote in the Senate and openly advocated by the White House and the majority leaders of the Senate, the municipal bond market has enjoyed the most sensational advance in its entire history. Within a day following Senate approval New York City 4¼s touched par for the first time in 3 years.

Immediately following its adoption by the Senate the Wall Street Journal said: "Municipal-bond experts generally were jubilant over passage by the Senate of the amendment to the Federal Bankruptcy Act providing for municipal-debt readjustment in necessary cases with approval of a substantial portion of creditors."

The following excerpt from the speech in support of the bill made by Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, briefly but effectively corrects the mistaken impression many people have of the proposal:

"If this bill could be labeled in reflection of its true purpose, and labeled in reflection of the net result which it is calculated to accomplish, instead of being labeled 'bankruptcy of municipalities', as is the phrase which appears upon the front page of the hearings, it would be labeled 'An act to restore municipal credit and protect municipal creditors.' I can see it in no other light. It is not a step toward the destruction of these important values. It is a long, vigorous, practical step toward the restoration of these values. It proposes, in respect to municipal debts, that orderly refunding is preferable to chaotic defaults.

"There is our choice, Mr. President; and that is the choice confronted not only by the municipalities and these other subordinate taxing units of the country, but also the choice confronted by the municipal bond owners of the country. It is a choice between orderly refunding upon the one hand and chaotic default upon the other; and I might add that chaotic default inevitably leads in the direction of repudiation and cancelation. I repeat that a truthful title for this bill would be, 'An act to restore municipal credit and protect municipal creditors.' Let it be viewed in that light."

And, it might be added, let every municipal-bond expert make it his business to see that municipal officials clearly understand that this legislation holds out no comfort nor relief for the community that is seeking to evade just debts within its ability to pay. The Federal court is not open to them under this bill until a majority of their creditors agree that they are entitled to a debt rearrangement and, even if creditors should prove overgenerous and agree to the filing of a petition, a Federal court must also be convinced of the equity of the plan, and, finally, the approval of creditors holding three quarters of the debts must be secured.

THE MELLON TAX CASE

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the attempt of Roosevelt the Second to persecute citizens of the United States for political reasons is in keeping with Communistic policies. I refer to the failure of Roosevelt the Second to indict Andrew W. Mellon. This also shows that the people of the United States do not intend to be fooled much longer. Twenty-six men on a grand jury at Pittsburgh, Pa., yesterday, after hearing a bunch of "framed up" stories about Mr. Mellon, voted a "no bill", and the case was dismissed.

This case had been tried in the newspapers, which of itself would prejudice an unthinking jury, but despite this and all the grapevine methods of the Government to railroad those hostile to their dictatorship, the grand jury refused to be fooled into an indictment.

This case should be almost as big a boomerang as the unconstitutional cancelation of air-mail contracts, and is the beginning of the end of the attempt to sovietize the United States.

I ask leave to print a newspaper article in connection with the case against Mr. Mellon.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MELLON VICTOR IN TAX CASE

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 8, 1934.—Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the United States Treasury under three Presidents, was given a clean slate in his income-tax payments by a Federal grand jury which failed to return an indictment against him here today.

The grand jury, which heard five witnesses during its investigation of Mr. Mellon's income-tax payments for 1931, did not return a true bill against the wealthy industrialist and former representative of the United States at the Court of St. James.

The jurors ignored the Government's claim by returning no true bill on a charge that the former Secretary of the Treasury, by claiming two losses, attempted evasion of income-tax payments for the year 1931.

The first was a loss on the sale of stock of the Pittsburgh Coal Co. (an ordinary loss of $5,766.30 and a capital loss of $5,672,189.75) and the second a loss on the sale of stock of the Western Public Service Co. (an ordinary loss of $49,500 and a capital loss of $352,500).

Capital losses are taken on stock held over 2 years and ordinary losses on stock held less than 2 years.

WHERE IS OUR MONEY—EDITORIAL BY E. P. CHASE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the editorial which was awarded the Pulitzer prize for distinguished editorial writing. That prize was granted yesterday for an editorial written by a good friend of mine, E. P. Chase, of Atlantic, Iowa. The editorial was entitled "Where Is Our Money?" It has a philosophy in it which I believe is applicable to today's condition.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, May 8, 1934]

PRIZE EDITORIAL TELLS "WHERE IS OUR MONEY"—SMALL-TOWN EDITOR FROM IOWA CORN BELT ANALYZES FINANCIAL "MORNING AFTER"—"WE SPENT IT", HE THINKS—DECRIES WASHINGTON PLAN TO SPEND OUR WAY BACK

WHERE IS OUR MONEY?

It is announced that at 10 o'clock tonight, Iowa time, William Randolph Hearst, well-known publisher, will broadcast an address on the subject which appears as the caption of this article.

The subject is a broad one and permits of many ramifications. Likewise the query is a live one and has been for several years with many people who formerly were in comparative affluence and have found themselves suddenly in a position where money is a scarce article. The whereabouts of the money of the individual is perhaps beside the point in this comment, if we stick to the text, as doubtless Mr. Hearst's broadcast will deal with the whereabouts of the money of the Nation as a whole rather than the financial plight of the individual citizen; but the subject intrigues one and suggests a line of thought relative to the part the individual has played in rendering himself particularly susceptible to the injuries inflicted by the period of economic stress.

Where is our money? Here in Iowa, if competent statistics are to be believed, during the ultra-prosperous years of the World War period, when money flowed like water into the coffers of the farmer and the business man and everyone else, some $200,000,000 of good Iowa money for stocks, shares in half-mythical concerns which were worth exactly their value as a piece of printed paper. During that period and shortly thereafter a good many hundreds of millions from the Middle West went into the first- and second-mortgage bonds of apartment hotels and the like, security issued on appraisals inflated to the *n*th degree. The most of these bonds are now worth just what the stocks we referred to are worth—the value of the paper and the printing contained therein. There is no way of estimating how many hundreds of millions of money the country over went up in smoke and vanished in thin air when it suddenly dawned on us that even the most productive land in a section like ours is not worth $300 or $400 an acre. It took only the simplest mathematics to arrive at that conclusion, for even at the prices brought by farm products at their peak the return on the land in this section would not pay interest on an investment of $300 or $400 an acre. It can easily be recalled that during that hectic period it was considered a mark of provincialism not to buy a new automobile every year. A lot of fur coats and a lot of diamonds and a lot of expensive clothes for both men and women were indulged by all classes. The wage earner suddenly awoke to the fact that by buying on the installment plan he could keep up with the Joneses, and he not only spent every cent he could get his hands on in many instances but he pledged the major portion of his wages or salary months ahead to pay for automobiles and other articles which were worn out by the time he had completed the payments.

These are but a few instances, cases in point. One might go on indefinitely telling of the wild orgy of spending and of contracting obligations without thought of the pay day and with little or no thought of the economic soundness of such spending. Then came deflation. We got down to cases. We danced and are still paying the fiddler. Like children, we have sought someone to blame for our plight and, also like children, we now seek some magic way to cure our ills and expect the Government to supply the cure. The man who contracted debts does not want to pay them just now, because in most instances he cannot pay them. In every way we have met the crisis which was thrust upon us as though we had nothing to do with producing it. As a matter of fact, we had all to do with producing it. In the proportion that the individual citizen went "haywire" with extravagance and reckless spending, governmental units went on with the same kind of an orgy and whooped our taxes 100 percent in 10 years.

Bond issues were pyramided by communities with the same disregard of the coming of the pay day which characterized the individual. We built great cathedrals of education, with motion pictures and swimming pools and all sorts of gewgaws and frills. We erected public buildings in many cases entirely beyond possible needs of communities for a hundred years. Just as private enterprise overbuilt in every direction, governmental building activities got out of bounds. The people have to pay the bill. The saturnalia of expenditure created fixed taxes, and taxes have a habit of certainty in good times and bad times alike. With our incomes and our business revenues depleted, our tax bill in the main has remained the same. All an echo of the period of extravagance and wild-eyed inflation which brought about our troubles. We were talking about "two cars in every garage and a chicken in every pot" and we made much about the so-called "American standard of living", whatever that meant. We insisted that all the various elements of our population should attain that standard, and we instilled into the minds of many people who could not afford it a desire for the things had by others more fortunate in life. Oodles of people who had no more business with an automobile than a wagon has with five wheels bought cars. Oodles of people learned to live beyond their means. It began to look as if it would not be long until there would be no one to do the work of the country, as all were seeking the same mythical standard to which we referred. And we still have the automobiles.

The bottom went out of things. Or it might be more appropriate to say that the top was blown off. Then the people of the United States commenced to take stock. Seeking someone to blame, they listened to the fulminations of the politicians who represented the "outs", and who told that the way to cure their ills was to convert the "outs" into the "ins" and the "ins" into the "outs." This they did with their usual disregard of essentials and fundamentals. It became a pleasing fiction to attribute our plight to the tariff, and later to our money standard. The people were told that all that was necessary was to reduce the tariff which protects American manufacture and agriculture, and all would be "Jake". Now they are being told that the way to put money into the hands of those who are penniless, and make it possible for the debtor to pay his obligations and start things moving on a normal basis, is to cheapen our money.

A lot of other experimental schemes are being worked out by an administration of which the people demand action. We are spending huge sums of money, borrowed for the purpose, in an endeavor to squander ourselves back to prosperity. In the face of the fact that debt is one of the basic causes of our troubles, we are following the theory that incurring more debt would cure us. And in the face of the fact that excessive taxation is another of the causes of our trouble, we are laying the groundwork for more of the same, under the delusion that the application of all of these methods will relieve us of the trouble which we brought on ourselves, aided and abetted by the world-wide economic upheaval.

We are a queer lot, we Americans. We expect whichever party happens to be in charge of the Government to so manipulate the handling of public affairs as to afford us a cure for the results of own folly. We seem to assume that it is possible for us to get well economically by the waving of some magic wand. We think we can force prosperity, and to the majority of the people of the country prosperity means a return to the hectic days preceding the stock-market crash of 1929. This theory disregards the fact that those hectic days were created by a false and inflated philosophy. In the creating of this inflation we disregard all natural laws of economics, so it is but natural for us to expect to cure the trouble by the same process. But it cannot be done.

The only way back to solid ground and to a degree of prosperity and well-being commensurate with common sense and economic soundness will be by the application of thrift and hard work and the balancing of the budget of every individual. The old "haywire" days are gone forever. But a large percentage of our population still believe in Santa Claus and in good fairies. The cause of the present economic condition of the country in large measure can be ascertained by every citizen by looking in the mirror. Each one of us contributed his share. There is nothing new about all of this. It has been the history of things in the world since the earliest dawn of civilization. Particularly has it characterized every post-war period. Humanity never learns. We have not progressed so far in our thinking after all.

Where is our money? The answer is not difficult. It can be told in one short sentence: We spent it.

ADDRESS BY MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Mr. LONG. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, our First Lady has distinguished herself as a philosopher far beyond the degree which we should ordinarily expect of one occupying that position. Recently she made a speech which is full of such sound logic and such good judgment and such potent facts that I ask the attention of the Senate to it.

I ask the clerk's careful and audible reading of the article which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the New York Times of Tuesday, May 8, 1934]

"BLIND VOTING" HIT BY MRS. ROOSEVELT—"FIRST LADY," SPEAKING TO 1,000 WOMEN IN RYE, ALSO SCORES "BLIND PARTISANSHIP"—CONCERNED OVER YOUTH—MUST MAKE THEM FEEL THEY ARE "NECESSARY", SHE SAYS—NOT YET OUT OF DEPRESSION

RYE, N.Y., May 7.—"Blind partisanship" in public affairs was assailed this afternoon in talks by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to two large groups of Westchester women at meetings in this village.

Mrs. Roosevelt gave her first talk at a luncheon of the Westchester League of Women Voters at the Westchester Country Club. Later in the afternoon she spoke to members of the Rye Woman's Club at a meeting in the high school. More than 1,000 women heard her discuss government at the two meetings.

Mrs. Daniel O'Day, national Democratic committeewoman, a resident of this village, was Mrs. Roosevelt's hostess. On arriving, the guest was driven through the flag-bedecked streets, where hundreds lined the walks.

Mrs. Roosevelt, introduced at the Country Club gathering as one of the organizers of the New York State League of Women Voters, warned her audience against blind voting and blind partisanship, declaring that a certain woman Member of Congress had caused the eyebrows of the older male Members to raise by reason of her failure to "always vote the way she should."

REFUSED TO GIVE ADVICE

"They asked me to tell her how to vote," said Mrs. Roosevelt, "but I could not do that. She will vote the way she thinks is right. She would be a much less valuable public servant if she did not. It was something entirely new to those old leaders. They just could not understand it. The thing we will really need in our public servants of the future is not to be blindly partisan, but to vote with the party only after analyzing the party's measures."

Mrs. Roosevelt said she counted on the women of the country to do a large part of the work which will make this Nation a better place in which to live. She said she did not mean the women of any particular party, but women workers as a whole. In giving their time and energy to public matters, she said, women should "learn what it is in government that enables it to make life better for human beings." This, she said, was the only excuse for government.

Mrs. Roosevelt showed deep concern over the young people of the country, particularly for those who have finished their education and are unable to get work. She ridiculed a recent public statement that "we have turned the corner out of the depression", pointing out that there are still about 10,000,000 unemployed in the country.

She said money for education should be spent for better teachers and variety of curricula rather than for elaborate buildings. The rehabilitation of the land, she said, has given rise to the need for a new type of education, and she added that the problem might as well be faced now. In Denmark, she added, farm youths between 18 and 25 years old are sent to school to learn "why their lives are worth while."

FEARS FOR THIS GENERATION

"I have moments of real terror," Mrs. Roosevelt declared, "when I think we may be losing this generation. We have got to bring these young people into the active life of the community and make them feel that they are necessary."

The First Lady referred to the recent "brain trust scandal" when she told of a dinner party at the White House at which one of the so-called "brain trusters" remarked about a certain relief proposal that it should be "tried out very slowly", to which Harry Hopkins, the Relief Administrator, replied: "Well, but I've got 10,000,000 unemployed to take care of."

The story showed, said Mrs. Roosevelt, that an experiment, or administrative proposal, takes on a different color when it affects some problem with which you as an individual are immediately concerned. In the same way, she added, a person would not let a child continue to starve once the starving infant was seen, but the same person might have a different attitude toward the matter if he "only heard of starving children."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in support of the claim that our First Lady understands the facts of the present situation, and has prescribed what I consider a practical philosophy, I send to the desk another short dispatch by the Associated Press, and ask that it may be read in connection with the statement just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

STARVING CHILD EATS POISONOUS HERBS AND DIES—FATHER, SOBBING, SAYS HE "DIDN'T KNOW HOW" TO GET RELIEF AID

SEATTLE, May 4.—Hunger drove 4-year-old Angeline D'Ambrose to eat poison weeds, causing her death, Mr. and Mrs. Angelo D'Ambrose, the parents, sobbingly told investigators today.

The parents said the baby had virtually nothing to eat for days and had been driven to eating plants and weeds in the yard.

Investigators found the D'Ambrose home a dismal place. There was only 4 cents in the house, and no food. The mother sat in a chair and stared at the wall. The father, heartbroken, said:

"The baby was the only thing we had in the world, and now she's gone.

"Oh, if it had only rained yesterday. Then our little girl wouldn't have been out in the grass."

Dr. W. H. Corson, chief deputy coroner, said one of the herbs in the stomach resembled bella-donna, also known as deadly nightshade, and another plant which the child had eaten was poison hemlock.

D'Ambrose was tramping the streets in search of work when the child was stricken suddenly. She died last night.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asked as to the time of Mr. Whitney's statement from which I quoted. I was not then able to give him the date. I have since examined the record and find that the statement was made on February 29, 1934. It is found in full at page 6584 of part 15 of the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the absence of the Senators mentioned by me on the previous roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, this bill summarizes the long effort of the Senate, and its Committee on Banking and Currency, to evolve legislation designed to prevent the abuses which have grown up in stock-market operations in this country.

I regard this proposed legislation as one of the most important measures that Congress has had before it for a very long time.

Senators know that we are not dealing merely with a few brokers. We are not dealing exclusively with a few members of stock exchanges, nor with the stock exchanges themselves, nor with dealers who engage in transactions in securities. We are dealing in a very vital way with enormously large interests. It is said that the corporate wealth represented in securities in this country is more than one third of all the wealth of the people of the Nation. We are dealing with the sources of credit, and with the machinery by which credit is used and enjoyed by the business institutions of the country. We are dealing with the forces which relate directly to recovery and to the maintenance of employment of the people. We are dealing with the hopes and aspirations of institutions to enlarge and to carry on their affairs and expand to meet the new conditions which we believe may come when the day of betterment shall have arrived in the business of the Nation.

In the consideration of legislation so important we are entitled to a correct understanding of the theory and philosophy and purpose of the bill.

As I address the Senate today I am obliged to express some dissent from statements heretofore made in the debate. I express that dissent with some little reluctance. I think the members of the committee probably more than the other Members of the Senate realize what a patient, constructive, able, and persistent effort has been made by the chairman of the committee and by others who have cooperated with him in trying to bring to a close the important enactments involved in this bill. I wish, therefore, that I could agree with the chairman entirely in the statement which he made to the Senate upon yesterday; and in the main I do agree with him.

With some little exception so far as the bill relates to brokers and to dealers, to members of exchanges, and to the exchanges themselves, I am in accord with the work which the committee has done; and yet, in spite of my deep interest in the subject and of the fact that I cooperated with the majority of the committee in most of the important issues that came up in the extended hearings during the last 2 years and supported the employees of the committee in the great effort which they made in order to develop the facts essential to this subject, in spite of my continuing interest when the bill was presented for final consideration before the Committee on Banking and Currency, I was one of the members of the committee who voted against reporting the bill out to the floor of the Senate.

I wish now that the bill could have been retained in the committee. I think a week or two weeks more spent in its consideration would have been of great help in arriving at a proper solution of the many problems involved, and that it would have resulted in a very constructive service to the country. In that my view did not prevail. I make no complaint about it now; and I refer to it merely because I want Senators to know that I am not approaching this subject at this time in a spirit of antagonism toward the legislation, but I do so in the hope that even yet some helpful amendments may be made.

I realize how difficult it is to invite and to command attention to amendments proposed upon the floor of the Senate after one of the great committees has given full and careful consideration to a measure; but I implore Senators to bear with us just a little longer, that we may reveal all the things that are hidden in the bill.

The bill is not alonge a stock exchange bill. It is not alone a bill to restrain and regulate brokers and dealers and to control over-the-counter transactions in securities. It is a bill which relates, in addition to the stock exchanges and to the brokers and the over-the-counter markets, to the corporations of the country, and to the internal management of the affairs of those corporations.

It has in it potentialities that may cause some of us to hesitate, regardless of our faith and hope that this kind of legislation will be helpful in protecting American investors against wrongdoing.

The bill has its relation, as I say, to corporations and to their internal management. It affects credit. It affects banking institutions. It provides for formulation of rules and regulations which finally will have their effect and bearing everywhere; not alone upon the stock exchanges, but upon corporations, the stockholders of corporations, upon the officers and directors of corporations, upon investors in corporate securities, upon those who may loan and possibly those who have extended loans to corporations.

Upon yesterday it was said by at least two Senators in the preliminary debate upon this measure that the provisions of the proposed law dealing with corporations were included in the bill merely to require corporations to make truthful disclosure of their business. That statement was reiterated; and even the chairman of the committee—who, I know, wants to be fair, and who has conducted this whole proceeding with a very remarkable showing of even temper and patience, and a very fine disposition to be just to all concerned—even the chairman of the committee yesterday said that the provisions of the bill relating to corporations were for the purpose of requiring them to tell the truth, and that seemingly they did not want to tell the truth, and that that was the reason why they were objecting to the bill. It was stated also that a great propaganda had gone forth, that the propaganda had been misdirected and misconceived, and that under it objections were being made to sections of the bill that had been deleted or changed by committee amendment. It was said that some 3 or 4 different editions of the bill had been printed, and that was true, and that the objections in many cases were laid to the first edition and not to the subsequent editions.

Mr. President, with these statements I am to a considerable extent in disagreement. It is true that some of the objections have been inspired by brokers who have circularized their customers, and it is true that those customers have sent in form letters, and they have sent in series of letters more or less alike, and sometimes identical in purport and meaning; and it is true that in some cases the objections have been made to provisions of the bill that were eliminated by the committee as long as a month ago. It is not true, however, that that character of objection is the only character of objection made by the business institutions of the country. Upon yesterday, or upon the evening before, a statement was made by Mr. Bell, of New York, representing a great group of most responsible business institutions. I have it here and shall read from it one or two very short statements.

Among other things, referring to the group with which he is identified, Mr. Bell said:

> It will endeavor to awaken every business man to the fact, apparently little realized, that while ostensibly this legislation is intended only to eliminate recognized speculative abuses from the securities exchanges, actually more than 450,000 firms through the land with no Wall Street connections would be brought under the strangling regulation of a Federal bureau.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. COUZENS. I think it would be enlightening to the Senate if the Senator would tell us just in what manner the 450,000 concerns not connected with Wall Street are affected by the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. I shall be glad to do that as I go along. I do not know that Mr. Bell is right in his theory that all of them are affected, but very vast numbers are affected; and I am quite certain that if Senators will remain open-minded, even in my humble way and with my poor talents I can convince practically all the Senators in the Chamber that a very vast amount of corporate business in this country is affected by this bill which the people think was written for the regulation and control of Wall Street and of the stock exchanges.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will agree that no one of the signers of that statement could possibly be called a small firm, and that up until this good date they have not heretofore shown any great interest in the 450,000 small firms.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not think Mr. Bell meant to say that he and the companies with which he is identified are small firms. Of course they are not. Nevertheless, the fact remains that we have in the country tens of thousands of corporations, and in various ways and in various degrees most of them will be affected by this bill. I make that statement on my own responsibility, even assuming that Mr. Bell is not fully informed in the premises.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I received in the mail this morning a communication bearing on this subject. I do not know that I ought to mention it. It is not signed, except as "an ex-New York Stock Exchange Member." Referring to an article headed "Industry Asks Modification in 'Strangling' Exchange Bill", the writer says:

> This is the worst "bunk" I ever saw. At least 15 of those signing the letter are, or were, heavy stock gamblers. They often had accounts in fictitious or dummy names and numerals. I know whereof I speak, and you can confirm it easily.
> Pass the bill with a full set of teeth!
> (Signed) EX-NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE MEMBER.

I do not know the gentleman at all, but it may be worth while for the Senator to look into the matter.

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no; it is not worth while for the Senator from Florida or for me to examine the integrity of the statements made in an anonymous letter, nor to determine whether this broker is sore because he was ejected from some exchange, or whether he is disturbed for some other reason.

I do not care anything about the nature of the business of those who signed the statement to which I have referred. The essentially important thing about it is that the statement is true; and it is with the truth of the statement that I desire to deal.

Let me refer to the bill, and, if Senators will be patient, let me call attention to some of the things which I feel justify the criticism I am making. I will omit a discussion of the provisions section by section and line by line, because presentation of such a discussion would be a very wearying and irksome task.

Section 12 of the bill is the section which provides for the registration of securities upon the national securities exchanges. It is termed in phrase of penalty, as are many other sections of the bill. That is to say, it makes transactions unlawful unless they are done in a certain way.

The particular thing that is made unlawful here is dealing on a national securities exchange by a member or a broker or a dealer in any security which is not exempted, unless the registration of that security has been effected in accordance with the provisions of the act and with rules and regulations made thereunder.

The bill proceeds to outline the steps which are necessary on the part of the corporation in order to make the registration effective. The conditions prescribed by the rules and regulations of the commission must be met or the registration cannot be effected and the corporation may find no lawful market for its securities in the stock exchanges of this country.

The first of the conditions to which I invite attention is paragraph 1 of subsection (b) of section 12. It provides, in effect, that the issuer must furnish to the commission and to the exchange an agreement to comply with the provisions of this measure. I want to interrupt myself there to say that there can be no possible objection to that, and I make none.

It must furnish an agreement to comply with the provisions of this measure and any amendment thereto "and with the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will not the Senator state the page from which he is reading?

Mr. STEIWER. Page 28.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator, in that connection, to read the language beginning on line 11 of that page, which considerably modifies the assertion the Senator is making, in my opinion?

Mr. STEIWER. I am reading from line 11. That is where I started to read.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator skipped some of it.

Mr. STEIWER. Does the Senator refer to the language in parentheses, which provides, "which shall not be construed as a waiver of any constitutional right"?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. I did not read that because I regard it as wholly ineffective and believe it would be of no value to the corporation at all, unless the rule or regulation made at a subsequent time should deprive it of some right, for instance, should deprive it of its property without just compensation, or deprive it of property without due process of law. Unless the rule or regulation effected a deprivation of that kind, there would be no practical protection given to the issuer by the language contained in the parentheses. I assure the Senator that I have given the language very critical and careful attention. I hope Senators will believe me when I say that I would not be making the criticism which I make of this bill unless I were acting quite advisedly. My interest in the measure is such that I should like very much to correct it and make it the kind of a bill I had hoped originally it might be, namely, a bill to regulate effectually the stock exchanges of this country, and dealings in securities, without at the same time imposing blue-sky restrictions upon the corporations, which, in a practical sense, they are going to find great difficulty in meeting.

Mr. President, I am told that some corporations have already indicated that they cannot meet the conditions imposed by the bill. Either their directors will not do it, and will restrain the executive officers, or the stockholders will not do it, and will restrain both the executive officers and the directors. Many corporations will be disinclined to permit their officers to sign a contract to meet some condition, which may in the long run be extremely oppressive and extremely costly, without knowing what that condition is to be.

I am asked by a Senator sitting near me if I am referring to the rules and regulations. I am referring, of course, to the provision that corporations are obliged to sign an agreement to comply with provisions of the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder. I am not particularly concerned about the exaction of an agreement to comply with regulations already made. A corporation can determine, if it is intelligently handled, whether or not it wants to meet conditions which are already known, but this bill creates in the commission an absolute and practically unlimited right to make regulations whenever it may desire to make them, and to change them, or by amendment to extend them, to make them without notice, and to make changes without notice, and to put them into effect forthwith, or to provide that they shall be put into effect at a subsequent time. The executives of corporations can have no way to measure the practical effect of the exaction of an agreement to abide by regulations which are not known and which, in their very nature, cannot be known.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I understood the Senator to make the statement that they would have to agree to abide by any regulation which might be made, whatever it might be, whether it was good or bad, whether it was legal or illegal. I do not so read the provision.

Mr. STEIWER. If the regulation operates to invade their constitutional rights, they are not bound by it.

Mr. BLACK. Or they have a right to contest the validity of any rule or regulation.

The Senator is a lawyer, and let me ask him a question. All that is to be required is an agreement on the part of the corporations to abide by any regulation which does not invade their constitutional rights, and they reserve the right to contest the validity of any rule or regulation. Let us suppose they did not enter into such an agreement. Would we not have the same right to enact a law, and would they not have to obey it? Would they be surrendering anything by signing an agreement? In other words, all they agree to is that they will abide by those regulations which they cannot strike down for their invalidity. They would have to abide by the regulations anyway.

Mr. STEIWER. They would have to abide by a change in law if Congress enacted a valid piece of legislation, of course, but that is the risk every business man takes, whether he lists his securities or not, and whether he registers securities upon a stock exchange or not. Business in the United States, I am happy to say, has at least some degree of confidence in Congress, and I do not believe that, generally speaking, business is restrained by fear of oppressive legislation. But we are dealing now with a new instrumentality. We are asked to clothe a commission with enormous powers, and we are told on every hand that business objects to those powers, that they are afraid of what may be done by the commission.

May I say to the Senator that I do not suppose it makes any difference, as a practical matter, whether a corporation is actually hurt or whether it merely thinks it is going to be hurt. A state of mind can produce a depression. A state of mind can produce timidity and prevent corporations from taking aggressive steps toward the carrying out of their business enterprises, and their disinclination to go forward from either cause is equally hurtful to the American people.

Mr. BLACK. The point I was asking the Senator about was this: I cannot see that it is material whether they make the agreement to abide by the regulation or not. That part of it is immaterial, because they would have to abide by it, anyway, if it were legally and validly enacted. If the Senator is taking the position that we should not vest the commission with the power of issuing regulations, that is quite a different matter. But, as I have read the bill—and this is the reason why I have interrupted the Senator—I cannot see that it is material at all that they agree in advance, either to accept or not to accept the regulations. Is the Senator opposing giving the commission the right to issue regulations, and is he favoring the idea of putting in the statute itself all regulations instead of entrusting any of those powers to the commission?

Mr. STEIWER. No, I am not, Mr. President. In the very nature of things the commission must have the authority and the right to issue some rules and regulations. But both civil and criminal penalties will be exacted under the provisions of the bill for violation of the contract which is required as a condition precedent for the registration of a security. Both civil and criminal penalties are exacted, which therefore brings about a most unusual situation, with unusual penalties, and because they are so unusual in both their civil and criminal aspects, prudent people may not be willing to assume liabilities which they can avoid.

Mr. BLACK. Then, if I understand the Senator, he favors giving the Commission the right to issue valid regulations?

Mr. STEIWER. I think it is inevitably necessary.

Mr. BLACK. Very well. The bill provides that the commission shall have the right to issue valid regulations, and it also requires—why, I confess I cannot see, because I think it is wholly surplusage—the company which puts out its securities to agree to abide by those regulations. Whether the company agrees to abide by those regulations or not is immaterial, if we concede that which the Senator concedes, that we should vest in the commission the prerogative of issuing valid regulations. When those regulations are issued, and they are valid, the company issuing securities must abide by such regulations, whether it desires to do so or not; whether it is agreed in advance to do so or not, because it would be the exercise of a legal privilege vested in the commission by the bill. I cannot see—and that is the reason I am interrogating the Senator in detail on that point—if he agrees that the commission should have the power to issue valid regulations, what difference it makes whether we ask the corporations to agree to abide by them or not, because whether they agree to abide by them or not, if they are valid regulations they must abide by them.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I am not entirely in disagreement with what the Senator is saying, and as proof of that I propose at the proper time to offer an amendment striking from the bill this requirement for agreement, because I can see that every proper authority which the commission needs may be exercised through regulations, and that every proper penalty which should be exacted in order to bring about compliance with this law can be had in the event of violation of the regulations.

This required agreement is entirely unnecessary and is another oppressive provision from which business shrinks.

My argument in this respect, and in others that I shall mention in just a moment, is entirely for the purpose, if I have not made that clear already, of seeking to have the Senate join with me in amending the bill by taking out some of the requirements which are causing responsible business men to worry and to hesitate, and things which will make them reluctant to resort to the facilities provided under the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Then if I understand the Senator, he desires to give to the commission the right to issue regulations, and he concedes that if the regulations are valid, the issuing company must abide by them, whether they agree or not. Then what injury can any company suffer from agreeing to do something which it will be obliged to do anyhow?

Mr. STEIWER. Because, Mr. President, the contract submits the issuing corporation to penalties, civil and criminal, which would not otherwise exist, and, therefore, will restrain it from attempting to register its securities upon the exchange, and it is important from every standpoint that we make it possible for the corporation to list its securities.

What I am saying goes to the wisdom of this provision. To me it seems most unwise to exact additional penalties, civil and criminal, when it is not necessary to do so, in order to bring about the proper administration of the law.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President I cannot see that any additional penalty is imposed. The Senator from Oregon takes the position that he favors giving the commission the right to issue valid regulations. The agreement is not a penalty. The agreement is simply a statement made by the company that "we will do that which we will have to do anyhow"—which is to abide by valid regulations. Is there any provision of the bill which adds any penalties which are not imposed by the regulations themselves?

Mr. STEIWER. I think so, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. Where?

Mr. STEIWER. I should like to come to that in due time. I think that is true.

Mr. HASTINGS and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield and, if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator from Delaware first asked me to yield, and I now yield to him.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether my understanding of this situation is correct, in view of the questions asked by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. My understanding is that there is no pretense in the bill of compelling corporations to come under the authority of the commission, except as they desire to dispose of their securities on the national exchanges. If we leave this provision in the bill as it is, compelling a corporation, in order to get its stock listed on the exchange at all, to enter into an agreement that it will abide by all the rules and regulations, we put the corporation in a position where it cannot possibly get off the exchange, except by some rule or regulation adopted by the commission. All the corporation ought to be compelled to do is to comply with the rules and regulations of the commission and the provisions of this bill, so long as it proposes that its stock shall remain on the stock exchange and be dealt in by the public. That is a very great difference.

When the corporation wants to withdraw and take away the right to deal in its stock from the stock exchange and the people who want to deal in it, then it ought to have somewhere in this bill a provision giving it the opportunity to withdraw.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I direct the attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] to paragraph (d) on page 31, which provides ways and means of getting off the exchange.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I reply to that? Section 19, paragraph (b), of the bill distinctly gives the commission the authority to make such rules and regulations to govern the exchange as will absolutely prevent that corporation from retiring.

Mr. COUZENS. Is that, then, in conflict with the paragraph on page 31? If I can read English, page 31, paragraph (d) provides a means of delisting the stock, and if the Senator refers to another paragraph, perhaps it is in conflict therewith.

Mr. HASTINGS. I shall be glad to answer that.

Mr. STEIWER. Perhaps the Senators had better argue that question a little later. It is not one which I intended to discuss. I think I know to some extent the answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan. A listed security may be delisted under the rules and regulations of the commission. Inasmuch as those rules and regulations are not yet made, inasmuch as they will not be made until subsequently, and inasmuch as the corporation intending to list may not know what they are going to be, that corporation may feel very insecure in the premises. I am told that many corporations will refrain from listing for fear there will be no practical means, under the rules, to delist. Beyond that I shall not discuss this subject at this time.

In section 12, now under discussion, there is a long category of requirements which all relate in one way or the other to the submission of information to the commission concerning the corporation. It is impossible upon even a careful reading of the requirements of this section, to know exactly what information will be required of the corporation. Most of these provisions are more or less permissive. The power vested in the commission is to make rules and regulations which the commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest, or for the protection of investors in respect to a certain listed category of proposals.

The objection was raised before the committee that the commission could require the divulging of trade secrets. The committee provided against that by appropriate language. But there is still in this section an absolutely unrestrained power in the commission to require of corporations information which, although not falling within the definition of trade secrets, is nevertheless very confidential in its character. There is still in this section the complete and full possibility that the commission may at any time require of any corporation disclosure of facts which will be very beneficial to the competitor of that corporation. There is still here the possibility that irreparable damage will be done, and because the corporation never can know what the requirements are going to be, and never can know what the effect of the rules and regulations may be on its particular business, the corporation, in the very nature of the situation, is going to be reluctant to assume this obligation.

Then, Mr. President, there is a third provision that to me is just as important as the other two, and that is the provision pertaining to periodic reports. I refer now to section 13 of the bill, commencing on page 33. For illustration of the kind of information that may be exacted, let me read from the bill. Commencing at line 17, we find this statement as to the information and reports to be furnished:

(1) Such information and documents as the Commission may require to keep reasonably current the information and documents filed pursuant to section 12.

Just what documents, however, are to be filed pursuant to section 12 we do not know; the corporations do not know. They may not know until long after they make their registration. So just what is required of them in order to keep that information current surpasses human imagination and ingenuity. There is no way to know.

So, too, in the next section there is a requirement as to reports. I read now from line 20, on the same page:

(2) Such annual reports as the Commission may prescribe, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants—

I have no particular objection to that, but listen to what follows:

Such quarterly reports as the Commission may prescribe; and such other reports as the Commission may deem essential in special circumstances.

So, Mr. President, with respect to the question of submitting reports, one may say, just as has been said with respect to the question of information required upon the registration of securities, there is no boundary; there is no little definition; there is no restraint upon the commission; and, what is vastly more hurtful to business, there is no way for a corporation to know in advance what kind of reports are going to be exacted of it. If the corporation is prudently managed, if its officers are conservative and capable, even though the corporation may desire to abide with every law in the land and to conduct the most legitimate and most honorable business possible it may, for competitive reasons or for other reasons, hesitate to attempt to meet the requirements of this section.

The provisions of sections 12 and 13 lay their heavy effect upon the corporation and upon the stockholders of the corporation, but not upon the stock exchanges, nor upon the members of the exchanges, nor upon brokers and dealers upon those exchanges.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do I understand the Senator from Oregon to object to any except annual reports as provided in the first clause of the provision?

Mr. STEIWER. I have not said that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, as I understood, objected to the requirements as to quarterly reports and such other reports.

Mr. STEIWER. I have not said that. What I object to is the unlimited uncertainty in the bill and not the requirements as to reports that are clearly and unmistakably defined by its terms.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that it is impossible for Congress to know in advance just what information ought to be required of any corporation that lists its securities on the stock exchange and holds them out to the general public of this country as being worthy of their investment. The Senator also knows that within the period of a year, and frequently within a period of a few months, the financial and economic and responsible conditions of any corporation may change; so that it is in the interest of the investing public that some agency of the Government should have the power to gather such information or require such reports as may keep the investing public advised as to the wisdom of an investment in an offered security; and as between the interest of the whole public, 125,000,000 people, on the one side, and the interest of the corporation that holds its securities out to those 125,000,000 on the other, for fear that some information might leak out that would be of benefit to a competitor, certainly we must not lose sight of the interest of the entire people who would be invited by the mere listing of a stock on an exchange to invest their money in it.

Mr. STEIWER. The statement just made by the Senator, in my opinion, is a very excellent argument for leaving the "blue sky" provisions out of this bill in their entirety. If Congress cannot act intelligently with respect to it——

Mr. BARKLEY. If what I said is any argument for any such contention as that, then, I was beside my own purpose very widely in making the suggestion.

Mr. STEIWER. I will permit the Senator to withdraw his argument, if he wants to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will withdraw the Senator's interpretation of it.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Congress cannot know what the requirements ought to be, how are we to assume that a commission will know better than we know, and how are we going to assume, even though the information is required, that it will protect the foolhardy or improvident investor? In nearly every State in the Union we have "blue sky" laws and nearly every corporation that has worked a fraud in recent years in this country was organized somewhere under the "blue sky" laws of some State. It has been shown, and demonstrated beyond any question of doubt, that laws of that kind, although intended for the finest purpose in the world, often lull the investor to his injury, to a false sense of security rather than give him the protection the Senator and I would like to give him if we could have our way.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, though, it ought to be kept in mind that all the "blue sky" laws, including the national "blue sky" law, apply almost exclusively to the issue of securities initially. They do not require that they shall be followed up from year to year and month to month in order to advise the public of the condition of the company or the stock and the advisability of it as an investment after the issue in the first instance has been approved by the authority of the State. That is why it seems to me to be necessary in any law proposing to regulate a national stock exchange that not only shall the condition of the security and the responsibility of the company, when it issues the security, be supervised, but there shall be some supervision in the way of gathering information from time to time in order that those who may want to buy the security after it has been issued or buy other securities which are not controlled by the Security Act of 1933 may have a medium of obtaining information as to the wisdom of the investment.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator states an ideal, and with his ideal I am thoroughly in agreement, but if in the application of laws intended to effectuate that ideal we drive people from the stock exchange, if we make it impossible to list securities, if we make it essential, in the judgment of the responsible heads of honest institutions, to take their securities elsewhere for sale, what possible gain will there be to the great American public for whom the Senator now speaks? Does not the Senator know that already, under the Securities Act of 1933, there has been a flight from the money centers of this country; that Montreal and other exchanges are offering inducements for Americans to bring their securities there, and already they have gone there in large number? They go to the place where we have no authority at all; the financing is done outside our own country, possibly with American money, but, at the same time, we have a flight of the business in the sale of securities; we have a flight of American money; we lose the whole transaction; we lose the whole control; and we render no service to our people, because when we lay down restrictions that are so stringent that business men will not meet them, then we defeat the object we seek to attain.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have heard a good deal about money taking flight from American securities because of the act of 1933, but I have yet to be shown by any proof that would pass in any ordinary court that any corporation has refused to issue securities because of any requirement of the act of 1933.

Mr. STEIWER. I think that proof can be had.

Mr. BARKLEY. One of the things we required in that act was that dummy directors should not hold their names out to the public to induce men, women, and children to invest their money in securities because they happened to be in the board of directors. There has been a propaganda ever since that law was enacted to repeal or revise that section so that men still might hold themselves out as a window dressing and invite investment without any responsibility on their part for the conduct of the business.

I appreciate that that law, in all probability, is not perfect, and that there ought to be some amendment to it, but I have not very much patience with the idea that men who, in the name of corporations, issue stock or securities and invite the public to invest in them, ought not to let the public know the truth about those stocks and those securities before they invest their money in them. That is all we have done. If the truth is going to make a security unsalable, then the truth ought to be known and the people protected from the investment of their money in unsound securities.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. Let me answer my friend from Kentucky in all sincerity by saying that, in my humble judgment, the requirement of truth has never hurt any corporation; I agree with the Senator as to that; it is not the requirement of telling the truth that has prevented the sale of securities under the act of 1933. That act has operated restrictively, however, and it is not because of the requirement of telling the truth nor is it because it excludes the dummy director from the boards, but it has operated restrictively because we have placed liabilities upon the underwriters and upon the directors and other signers of the registration statements that need not have been as severe as they were. We made one man responsible in that act for another man's error, and prudent men would not assume that kind of a liability.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, we have made the principal responsible for the acts of his agent?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no; the principal was already responsible for the act of his agent; we have made one agent responsible for another agent's conduct, for they are all agents of the corporation. I had not intended to get into a discussion of the Securities Act of 1933 at this time. I was for that act; I voted for it; I helped to prepare it; and I was just as much interested in that act as I am in this one; but I think it ought to be held up as a horrible example."

Under the guise of writing a perfectly good law for a perfectly fine purpose, we wrote into the law some provisions that were hurtful; and in this bill, under the guise of writing a perfectly good law for a perfectly fine purpose, if we do not watch our step, we are going to permit the enactment of some provisions that will operate against recovery from the depression. I very earnestly suggest this, and urge it upon the Senate, because I think it is perfectly simple to remedy these restrictive provisions and leave the bill to apply to stock exchanges, with possibly some temperate and safe regulation of corporations, so that a great good may be done without injury. Then, as time goes by, if we learn from our experience that we can add further requirement to the law, we may all unite in bringing about proper amendments. I submit that it is better to go not quite far enough and be safe than it is to go too far, as we did with respect to the Securities Act, and then be obliged to retreat after we find that we have worked injury upon our country.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Would the Senator eliminate from the bill authority to require periodical reports?

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; I think if that provision were restricted it would be very proper. To answer that question leads us to the penalties, which I will come to a little later.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to have the Senator comment in this connection, if he will, on the statement, with which I know he is familiar, made by the publishers of Moody's Standard Statistics, by Mr. Whitney, president of the stock exchange, and others who have been in position to know the evil which has ensued from the failure to disclose to the public facts in connection with the affairs of corporations, that the one thing which should be done is that which the bill seeks to do, namely, to require corporations listed upon the exchange to disclose the information of a material nature to the people to whom they hope and to whom they try to sell their securities.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the stock exchange has less concern about that than the rest of us.

Mr. BYRNES. It is admitted that Mr. Whitney did make the statement that he thought it could be done, and that they should have the power to do it, and further that there was some agreement signed by members of the exchange, under which agreement corporations whose stocks were listed claimed that they were not required to comply with certain requirements of the exchange. The bill would do what these responsible officials of the exchange really want to have done.

Mr. STEIWER. I am quite convinced if the Senate leaves section 15 in the bill, by which the Commission can drive unlisted securities back on the stock exchange again, that the stock exchanges would be entirely content with the bill, because they would have the corporations of America where they could not get away. I shall come to that section a little later.

Under the bill the whole proceeding is related. There is no way, in my judgment, to arrive at a proper conclusion with respect to the effect of any of the provisions unless we know how the related provisions of some other part of the bill may contribute their part toward bringing about the final result. Undoubtedly it is going to be difficult for any listed security to escape from the operation of the bill or to escape from the Commission. The bill provides the means to penalize them in such way that if they attempt to get off the exchange they will be driven back again. I shall discuss that in a little while.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Coming back to the suggestion made a while ago that the Senator is in favor of a bill regulating the practices of the exchange, but that he doubts the wisdom of going any further than that in the way of regulating the corporations whose stocks might be on the exchange, am I to understand the Senator to mean that he favors simply the enactment of a law regulating the practices and methods of the stock exchange by which stocks are bought and sold, and that he would not require any showing as to the condition of a company whose stocks were bought and sold, or its financial methods or reliability or responsibility?

Mr. STEIWER. No; that is not my ultimate object. I think initially we could very well confine ourselves to the control of the exchanges and to the regulation of the procedure and practices upon the exchange and in the over-the-counter markets, with such requirements as to corporations as they can readily meet, At future sessions of the Congress we may supplement these requirements with others. Initially, I would favor a start with a bill that would do good and not do evil.

To answer further the Senator's question, I think we are all at fault. I think the whole Congress of the United States is at fault in that we did not some years ago make a more serious effort to deal with the manipulative and other wrongful practices upon the stock exchange. I think long ago Congress should have dealt with the question of margin requirements and short sales, of wash sales and pools, and all the other abuses that accompanied especially the great boom of 1929. I think we are all subject to some criticism in that we did not recognize our responsibility and make a more vigorous effort to deal with those abuses.

But now, because the whole country is aroused to the nature and extent of those abuses and knows how disastrous was the speculative orgy of 1929 and what injury it did to the country, there is a clamor everywhere for the legislation. In that feeling, of course, we all share. However, the danger of the situation is that while we are endeavoring to deal with the evils, we write a "blue sky" law that goes too far; and because it goes too far it will be hurtful, and instead of bringing to the country unmitigated good it will bring both good and evil at the same time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I have been very much interested in the Senator's discussion. I know the usual care he gives to the consideration of these questions. I have listened carefully to ascertain, if I could, what it is he fears about the report that is to be required. I gather that he would not strike this section from the bill, which requires reports to be made of certain facts. I listened carefully to learn what it is the Senator fears a company might be asked for that would do it injury, because, if there is such a thing, I am frank to say I think it should be excluded.

I have read the itemized statement of things which are to be called for in the reports. I think I am sufficiently familiar with the Senator's political philosophy to believe he will not object to a single one of those items as they are to be called for in the report. May I ask the Senator if he does object to either of paragraphs A, B, C, D, E, or F?

Mr. STEIWER. On what page?

Mr. BLACK. On page 29. That is the section which the Senator said is too uncertain.

Mr. STEIWER. I was discussing section 13.

Mr. BLACK. I understand, but the Senator first discussed section 12, and then section 13, which states the documents or details required in a general way under section 12. The Senator in the first place agrees with me and others that the Commission must have authority to prescribe rules and regulations. Therefore he does not intend to have the bill set out specifically every requirement that ought to be imposed. Section 12 sets out certain information which the public ought to have. The first requirement is with reference to the organization, financial structure, nature, operation of business and so forth. I cannot believe the Senator would object to that.

Mr. STEIWER. Let us see if the Senator likes that as well as he believes he does. What is the meaning of the requirement of information concerning the "operations of business"?

Mr. BLACK. If there is any particular part of the operations the Senator believes ought to be eliminated, I think an amendment should be offered to that effect. I looked at an income-tax report a few days ago. I shall not give any name because I have no right to do so. The man who made the report had sold $1,000,000 worth of the stock of the corporation. He was supposed to put on one side the amount he received for the stock and on the other side the amount he paid for it. The amount stated as paid for it was a "goose egg". The amount he received was $1,000,000. I think that is a part of the operations of the business.

That stock was sold on the stock exchange. The people who paid 100 cents on the dollar for the stock did not know that that man received $1,000,000 worth of stock for nothing. I think, and I believe the Senator agrees with me, that information ought to be reported. That is one of the things that would be included.

Mr. STEIWER. I am sorry I am unable to follow the Senator. It seems to me if that stock was worth $1,000,000, it would not make any difference what the trader paid for it when he got it. He set forth the information in his income-tax return. Of course, if he got the stock for nothing and sold it for $1,000,000, he made $1,000,000 profit.

In the consideration of an income-tax return honestly made, I do not see where the public should be interested in the amount paid for the stock.

Mr. BLACK. Let us suppose the Senator is one of the untold millions who want to buy some stock. He concludes that he wants to buy some stock in this particular company to which I have been referring. He assumes, when he buys the stock which is sold on the stock exchange, that every other stockholder who had stock issued to him paid hard, honest dollars for it, just as he did. It develops with reference to that particular company that the stock has been issued to the insiders without the payment of a dime by them. The Senator would have no way to find that out unless the parties involved were required to make a report.

I am sure if the Senator were paying money out of his pocket for stock in that company, he would feel that he had the right to know if there had been $20,000,000 worth of that stock out of a total of $55,000,000 issued for nothing—and there was more than that—and which represented no investment.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator pays me too great a compliment when he assumes I might buy $1,000,000 worth of stock.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no; I do not. The Senator could easily buy $1,000,000 worth of stock if he paid nothing for it, like the man did to whom I have referred.

Mr. STEIWER. Let us discuss the bill. The language to which the Senator calls attention would not cover the case the Senator has in mind. This language provides that information shall be furnished about the organization, financial structure, nature, and operations of the business; it does not deal with stock manipulation.

Mr. BLACK. That is right.

Mr. STEIWER. If the issuer corporation were filing its return under section 12 it would file a return of its own operations. The Senator has not disclosed to us how this gentleman got the million dollars' worth of stock.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to do so, and to show the Senator that it does affect the interests of the company, and the public ought to have known about it—not only that case, but numerous others. This man came in just as the company did that, put in $1,000, and 2 years later the insiders had stock in the company issued to them at a value that day of $75,000,000. This man came in by the manipulation of certain property at more than its value, and, as a matter of fact, so much more that it did not cost him a nickel.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there to the suggestion that the issue of that much stock for nothing, which brings not a dollar into the treasury of the company, materially affects the value of all the stock for which people have paid their money.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is entirely right.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are interested in whether or not a company has given away a million dollars' worth of stock for which it received nothing in return.

Mr. BLACK. Not only that, but let me call the Senator's attention to the scheme which was adopted in that company and numerous others. I would not refer to one only. They would buy property which had practically no value, and then sell it to the company for a hundred thousand times its then value. If they had been required to report to the public, through the exchange, the organization and financial structure of the company, the prospective stockholder would have known that he was asked to pay a dollar for a dollar's worth of stock, while another man received a million dollars' worth of the same stock for nothing, thereby decreasing the value of the prospective purchaser's holdings.

I think I know enough about the Senator from Oregon to know that he does not want to fail to require any kind of report that would protect the public. I listened carefully to see if the Senator objected to any part of the report that is required. If he did object to any particular clause of it, I fail to hear it; and what I desire to know is which part of the report that is required to be made does the Senator object to? If none, is there something the Senator thinks might be exacted that should be protected? If so, let the Senator offer an amendment to strike that out; but let us not strike down the whole thing on the mere vague statement that it requires an uncertainty.

That is my point. If the Senator has any suggestions, I should be glad to vote for the exceptions that he thinks ought to be made, if I agree with him in his viewpoint; but I do think it is rather a general indictment to say that the measure is uncertain without pointing out which one of these things he objects to.

Mr. STEIWER. Evidently I failed to make myself understood by the Senator from Alabama.

I referred first in that section to the subsection commencing upon line 11 of page 28. I objected there because of the necessity of complying with future unknown regulations, and with respect to these others, I made the same objection that they introduce an element of uncertainty that will deter corporations from listing their stock.

I direct the Senator's attention to the fact that on page 29 we find a provision that such information shall be furnished by the issuer—

> As the Commission may, by rules and regulations, require as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors—

In regard to certain things. There is no limitation upon the commission in this bill. They may make rules today. They may change them tomorrow. They may make them at 12 o'clock, and make them effective forthwith, or make them effective at 1 o'clock, as the case may be. Except on the part of the great stock exchanges, who can keep themselves advised currently and up to the moment, there is no way for the ordinary business man to know what the regulations may be today, and there is less opportunity for him to know what they may be next week.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; of course.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that what the Senator says is true, that the commission can change those regulations from hour to hour, or from week to week, or from month to month; but the Senator has explicitly stated he favors giving to the commission the power to issue regulations. That is the reason why I asked him the question in the beginning.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the Senator has not paid very close attention to my statements.

Mr. BLACK. I thought I did.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know that I objected to a single provision upon page 29 to which the Senator now is attaching importance. I did discuss the language on page 28, and then I proceeded to discuss the requirements in the matter of disclosures on page 33; and now, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to go further and discuss the requirements on page 41.

Mr. BLACK. Before the Senator gets away from the matter of uncertainty, would he object to pointing out any particular thing that he anticipates might be called for under the bill that would be injurious to the company, and that an amendment should take away from the commission the power to require the company to disclose?

Mr. STEIWER. I shall be glad to do so.

Under the guise of getting information concerning the operations of the business the commission may conceivably ask for information which, if published, would absolutely destroy the company, not because the company had done anything wrongful, not because it was a company of the kind to which the Senator referred a little while ago, but because the disclosure would tell a competing company the exact nature of the company's business.

Mr. BLACK. What information?

Mr. STEIWER. Information concerning its credit status, we will say; information concerning its inventories, concerning its contracts, concerning the people with whom it proposed to do business, or those with whom it had been doing business; every manner of information by which one great institution may profit at the expense of another. Corporations may be wrong in being fearful of the provisions contained in this bill granting wide discretionary powers to the commission. I am not arguing too hard on that particular point. I said a while ago that they might be wrong; but if the effect of the measure is to restrain them, the evil to the country is just as great as if they were right in their judgment with respect to requirements that might be made.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator, first, another question?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. The first thing the Senator anticipated the company might be compelled to divulge is their credit, something they owed somebody. Is not a stockholder entitled to know that?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, the stockholder already knows. This does not affect stockholders.

Mr. BLACK. I am talking about prospective purchasers of the company's stock. Suppose, for instance, they had outstanding half a million dollars worth of stock, and owed somebody a million dollars: It might be that their competitor would be glad to know that; but, because their competitor might be glad to know that, should a man be permitted to go ahead and buy stocks blindly, without having that revealed through the exchange which acted as the agent in the sale?

Mr. STEIWER. It will be revealed to the exchange, Mr. President. I think those things are usually revealed to the exchange now, without any statute.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Will not the Senator agree that as to the instances referred to by him, section 23 would safeguard the corporation? In that language it is provided that there can be no disclosure of such information unless it is in the public interest, or for the protection of investors, and does not reveal trade secrets. Then it is further provided that if the corporation filing the statement shall make written objections to the disclosure of the information, there must be a private hearing and order, from which order there is provision for an appeal to the courts.

Mr. STEIWER. Cannot the Senator see how insecure that kind of a provision is when the statement has just been made by a man having so good a mind as the Senator from Alabama that practically all this information ought to be disclosed for the good of the stockholders and investors? The commission may take the same view that the Senator from Alabama takes; and if the commission takes the same view that the Senator takes in just one instance, there will be no more corporations in America desirous of listing their stock upon any exchange.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, even if it be assumed that the Senator from Alabama, serving upon the commission, held that view, the language of section 23 is that if the Senator from Oregon, for example, held the opposite view, and he were president of the corporation, he could object to the disclosure of the information, demand a hearing, the hearing must be private, an order must be issued, and he has the right of appeal from that order. So if we assume that upon the Commission there might be some member who believed that it would be in the interest of the public to disclose all that information, a remedy is provided under section 23.

Mr. STEIWER. I wish I could conclude with the Senator that business institutions would be satisfied and calmed by an assurance of that kind. We are told on every hand that they are not satisfied. We are told in every quarter that they are afraid to place themselves in a position of that kind; and the very fear is going to prevent them from going forward as we should like to see them proceed under this measure.

Mr. President, I desire now to call attention to two paragraphs of section 19 in order to indicate further reasons why corporations will not want to avail themselves of the facilities of this measure.

This section is the one that defines the disciplinary powers over exchanges. One would think, if he did not examine it carefully, that it is a section creating authority in the commission to require of the exchanges a compliance with the provisions of the law. It does that, but it does much more. The first paragraph authorizes the commission—

> After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, by order to suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months or to withdraw the registration of a national securities exchange if the Commission finds that such exchange has violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations thereunder or has failed to enforce, so far as is within its power, compliance therewith by a member or by an issuer of a security registered thereon.

At first thought it would seem that if a stock exchange violated the law or violated the rules and regulations of the Commission it would be very proper to suspend for 12 months, or any other appropriate period, trading upon the exchange. So far as the exchange is concerned, I am entirely in accord with the proposition. In my opinion, the exchange that violates the rule and the regulation is entitled to very little consideration; but let me call attention to a fact which cannot be denied, namely, that when the commission requires the withdrawal of the registration of a national securities exchange and suspends trading upon it, the exchange is not the only sufferer. Primarily the blow falls upon the stock exchange; but ultimately every corporation having its securities listed on the exchange, and every stockholder in every corporation, and every creditor of every corporation, every person having a contractual relationship with the corporation, will feel the force of the blow. So it is that we provide in this bill, under the guise of furnishing a means of disciplining stock exchanges, a provision which would discipline the guilty and then in addition discipline the innocent along with the guilty.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator oppose, then, the granting of disciplinary power with reference to the exchange which violates the rules?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no. The Senator undoubtedly expected me to answer that question in the negative.

Mr. BARKLEY. How can an exchange be closed for a gross violation of the rules and regulations without affecting the stock listed on the exchange? If the Senator can point out how stock can continue to be sold on an exchange after it has been closed, I should like to have him do so. I do not know just how it can be done.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, if I had my way, I would not use this theorist method of disciplining exchanges. I would discipline the exchanges by disciplining the officers of the exchanges. I would penalize those who do the wrong. I would penalize them by the severest penalty I could design. I would try to afford an incentive for the officials and officers of the stock exchange to comply with the law and with the rules and regulations. I do not want to make it easy for them. But it does seem to me that, under the guise of punishing them, it is a weak and an indefensible proposition at the same time to punish the innocent man as we would punish the guilty.

Under the same section of the bill, subsection 2, we find this kind of a proposal:

> (2) After appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, by order to suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months or to withdraw the registration of a security if the Commission finds that the issuer of such security has failed to comply with any provision of this act or the rules and regulations thereunder.

Mr. President, I may say, on this subject, much as I did just a moment ago, that if the issuer is guilty of an offense, the issuer should be called to account and penalized for the offense; but the difficulty about a remedy of this kind is that it affects so many persons who are not in any way connected with the offense.

Let us assume the case of a corporation which sold a million shares of its stock, and let us say that after the sale had been effected, the issuer was guilty of some violation of the law, or of the rules and regulations promulgated pursuant to the law. The penalty for the violation is to suspend for a period of not exceeding 12 months, or to withdraw the registration of the security.

The effect of that kind of a penalty is, of course, to punish the issuer, but, in addition to that, the greatest effect of the penalty is to punish every man, woman, and child—every person in the world, who, for one reason or another, has acquired shares of the stock.

It is not necessary in this legislation to punish the innocent with the guilty. I suggest that these two sections be stricken from the bill. I think we can devise a means of punishing those who do wrong by penalizing the wrongdoer in plain and unmistakable language. I think undoubtedly there is a perfectly simple way to provide that those who violate the law or violate the rules and regulations may be indicted and punished as for a crime, and those kinds of penalties will be effective, and they will be effective not only as to the man who transgresses the law, but they will be effective in safeguarding the interests of all innocent persons who may have some relation to the transaction.

The suspension of a stock exchange, or the suspension of a security listed on a stock exchange, or the withdrawal of that security, merely for the purpose of penalizing the person who violated a rule or regulation which may have been made after a registration was effected, and made without the knowledge of the issuer, the penalizing of investors for the offense of another person who possibly did not even have knowledge of the rule or regulation, is a monstrous thing, and, in my judgment, it ought to be avoided.

If we suspend trading upon an exchange in order to punish the issuer of stock, everybody knows the stock is going to be depreciated in the market, and there will be a financial loss to every person who has acquired the stock. If there were no other way of punishing wrongdoing, we might find a justification for legislation of this kind, but, because there are other ways and because we can make the penalty rest upon the man who transgresses the law, let us refrain from punishing the innocent with the guilty.

Mr. President, responsible heads of institutions, knowing of these provisions in the law, and knowing what the consequence may be to their stockholders if they become embroiled in the meshes of these two paragraphs of section 19, may very well hesitate before they permit their securities to be listed upon any stock exchange, and if they are listed, they may very well be justified in seeking to delist the stock in order to protect their stockholders, a great army of innocent people, from the infliction of penalties which are absolutely undeserved under any theory of moral or legal responsibility.

Mr. President, I stated a little while ago that the bill is so constructed that it is intended to prevent any corporation escaping from the commission. I now desire to point out why I made that statement.

Section 15 deals with over-the-counter markets. Some corporations may think that if they cannot meet the oppressive and restrictive provisions of sections 12, 13, and 19, and other sections of the bill which affect corporations and the stockholders of corporations, they will immediately leave the stock exchange, and that upon leaving it, they will be freed from the oppressive requirements of this measure, and will be enabled to sell their securities over the counter. If any such view is entertained, the corporations are seriously in error.

Section 15 provides for regulation of over-the-counter markets, and provides for the making of rules and regulations applying to transactions on such markets, and for the registration with the commission of the dealers and brokers making or creating such markets.

With respect to those various provisions I have no complaint at all. I think operations in the over-the-counter markets should, of course, be regulated, and I see no objection to imposing rules and regulations and requirements of law upon dealers and brokers and others who are professional traders in stock, and who can have knowledge of the rules and regulations and of the law, and who, in good conscience, ought to comply with the law.

Let us see what else the section provides. I read now from line 20. We find there that the rules and regulations to which I have just referred, for the registration with the commission of dealers, of brokers, and others, is extended in this way, "and for the registration of the securities for which they make or create a market."

In other words, Mr. President, the issuers must register upon the stock exchange, if they are to do business there, and if they desire to retreat from the stock exchange and to do business over the counter, they will find that they are required under the rules and regulations of the commission to register there.

But that is not all. Following the language which I have just read, is this statement:

> For the purposes of this section the Commission may make special rules and regulations in respect of securities or specified classes thereof listed, or entitled to unlisted trading privileges, upon any exchange on the date of the enactment of this act, which securities are not registered under the provisions of section 12 of this act.

I wonder whether Senators catch the full force and significance of that language. In effect, it means this, that if a security is listed upon a stock exchange at the time of the enactment of this measure, and does not register on a national securities exchange as provided in section 12, and the managers of the corporation attempt to sell its securities over the counter, not only rules and regulations will be made with respect to transactions over the counter, but in addition to that, special rules and regulations may be made by the commission to fit the particular case of the corporation which delisted its securities and took them off the stock exchanges in order to be freed from the oppressive requirements of the sections which deal with those exchanges.

Can it be assumed that the commission will let anybody get away? Does anyone assume for a moment that, with the powers conferred by section 15, the commission will permit anybody to unlist or remain unlisted?

Let us bear in mind that section 4 of the bill provides that the commission may assess stock exchanges for the money necessary to carry on the administration of the act. If the stock exchanges break down, there will be no money. The commission will have killed the goose which laid the golden egg; and I am told unofficially it is the purpose of some of the gentlemen who have been sponsoring this legislation, and of others who are said to be prospective appointees upon the commission, that steps will be taken to drive back to the stock exchanges those corporations which were unwilling to remain there and which attempt to resort to the over-the-counter markets of this country for the sale of their securities.

What justification, I ask, is there for the enactment of legislation which places the business of the United States in a strait-jacket of this kind? Remember that we are not dealing all the time with crooks and with thieves and with outlaws. We are not dealing all the time with institutions which are seeking to defraud somebody. We are dealing with those classes, it is true, but, in addition to them, we are dealing with the great number of institutions in this country which control the industries of the United States and provide labor for the laboring people of the United States. We are dealing with honest enterprise; we are dealing with legitimate investment; and the good with the bad are going to be brought within the strictest requirements of this measure, held down by sections 12, 13, and 19, if they attempt to operate upon the stock exchanges, and then driven back to the stock exchanges by section 15 if they attempt to sell their securities in the markets over the counter.

Mr. President, I do not want to delay longer upon this phase of the bill. There is much to be said about the section requiring proxies. If I had my way, I would either change that section or eliminate it from the bill. The committee was told by men who are experts upon this subject, men like Mr. Untermyer, who, through busy lifetimes, have been engaged in endeavoring to protect the interest of stockholders in great corporations, that this proxy requirement will not help the minority groups; that it will not aid the weak or defenseless; but that probably it will aid those in power, those who control the corporation; that it will operate differently than was contemplated by the committee.

We are told that the administration of this provision will be expensive to the corporations, and there is a very grave feeling in the business world that the requirements made in this section for proxies will be hurtful and not helpful. I am not, however, sufficiently advised concerning the technical workings of the great institutions with respect to the acquisition of proxies to propose a better section. I shall, therefore, pass it by.

Before I conclude I desire to take up a matter which I think is more important than any matter I have discussed until now in this debate. I refer to the penalties provided under the provisions of this bill. I have already said, and Senators fully realize, that the bill is unusual in that it not only clothes the commission with the right to make rules and regulations but it continues the power of the commission to change and alter and amend those rules and regulations. I have said two or three times that there is no provision in the bill requiring the rules and regulations to become effective at some future date. They may, in the judgment of the commission, become effective forthwith. There is no requirement in this bill that the rules and regulations shall be published at any particular time, or that any other effort shall be made to confer notice upon those who might be affected by the rules and regulations.

Throughout the bill there is a rather unusual structure in that acts which are condemned as unlawful in the main are not condemned in every event. There are very few acts in this bill which are condemned outright as unlawful and penalized under the provisions of the bill.

In almost every case the nature of the denunciation, that is, the statement of the crime, is in terms of rules and regulations. One can turn to almost any provision of the bill and find that is true. I have before me section 29 (a) which begins with the words—

> It shall be unlawful for any broker or dealer—
> And so forth, to do certain acts—
> in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest—

And so forth. That kind of structure, Mr. President, is typical of the entire make-up of the bill. Therefore the crimes which are created by this bill are crimes which we do not know today. We could not define them if we wanted to. They are crimes which are yet to be defined by the commission. The nature and extent of those crimes, the conditions and definitions of those crimes, the very elements of the offenses, are unknown to the Congress which is to pass the legislation. These crimes are to be defined by people the identity of whom we do not yet know. They are to be established at different times, and changed and amended at different times in ways which we cannot even imagine in advance, and yet, Mr. President, we are called upon to give our approval to section 30, including section 30 (b), which penalizes violation of rules and regulations.

Permit me to read it so it may appear in this place in my remarks:

> (b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of any rule or regulation under this act, or of any agreement made with the Commission and filed under this act, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000, except that if such person is an exchange, a fine not exceeding $100,000 may be imposed.

Mr. President, in order to understand the philosophy of this bill and the theory and purpose of those who prepared and sponsored the bill in the first place, I desire to state to the Senate that when this language came to the committee the penalties in subsection (b) were identical with the penalties in subsection (a), except that there was no jail sentence imposed.

In other words, the fine might be not more than $25,000, and, in case of an exchange, a fine of not more than $500,000. Inasmuch as some of these offenses which might conceivably be committed in violation of the rules and regulations are continuing offenses, and may very well recur day after day, the extent of the penalty may become fairly evident to those who give consideration to this feature of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I am quite in sympathy with the view which the Senator from Oregon expresses with reference to making the violation of these regulations a criminal offense, but we have put that provision in every statute we have passed concerning the relief of agriculture for some time. I think it is an indefensible principle to make the people of the country punishable for the violation of a regulation which may be a regulation tonight and not a regulation tomorrow, but it is in all these laws which we have passed. It is in the sugar bill which we passed a few days ago.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the sugar bill specifically differentiated in precisely the way which the Senator recommends. In the sugar bill, violations of the rules and regulations are punishable only by a nominal fine of $100.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, but what is $100 to a farmer? It may mean more to him than $25,000 means to a large corporation. The thing I am objecting to is the principle of subjecting the citizens of the country to punishment by fine or by imprisonment for the violation of a regulation instead of the violation of a law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The only point I was making was that in the sugar bill there was a discrimination between the two types of offenses.

Mr. BORAH. The sugar bill in the first instance provided for imprisonment also, and that provision was stricken out. The principle, however, is the same. We are subjecting the citizens of the country to punishment for the violation not of law but the violation of a regulation. What are we going to do about it? Are we going to leave such a penalty in all the provisions of the laws? If things continue, not only will the citizen be tied by a thousand rules issued by some bureau, but if he slips a cog he goes to jail.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I would not undertake to answer a question of that kind, because I do not think all of us combined have wisdom enough to know what we are going to do. I voted against the sugar bill and the conference report upon that bill. I disapproved the proposition then; I disapprove it now. And although I can bring myself to a sort of reluctant approval of some penalty for violations of rules and regulations in this bill, I can do that only because it is so essential that the commission have some power to bring about effectual administration of the law. But it seems to me that the vice of this particular provision is that it confuses that which is done with evil purpose from that which is done innocently. It is much like the section I was discussing a while ago in which I pointed out that the innocent investor or stockholder is punished for another man's crime. This is not the case, of course, of the citizen being punished for another man's crime, but there is here the commingling of offenses and the fixing of a penalty for an act done with wrongful purpose and an act done innocently and possibly without knowledge of the rule.

It seems to me that the most insidious thing about this is that the commission may make these rules at will. They may make them without notice. The person charged with the violation may not know there is a rule. He may not know he is violating a rule. It is true that the bill says "willfully", but that may be construed merely to mean "intentionally" as distinguished from "unintentionally" or "voluntarily" as distinguished from "involuntarily."

I have made some little inquiry as to the meaning of the phrase, and I left the subject considerably bewildered, although it may well be that the courts will limit the construction of the provision, because the other construction will be almost monstrous in its nature.

We have no assurance how the court will act with respect to it, and it seems to me that whatever else we do, when dealing with subsection (b) of section 30, we ought to insert after the word "person", the words "with intent to injure and defraud another", so that it would read:

Any person who with intent to injure or defraud another shall willfully—do the prohibited act, the penalty would follow.

In that way we would be penalizing the purposeful wrongdoer, who, of course, is entitled to no sympathy and no defense. The man who seeks to defraud his neighbor might well be penalized, even though his offense consists of the violation of a rule or regulation. I have no quarrel with that proposal. But when we say that for violation of any provision—I invite attention to that, whether important or unimportant—for violation of any provision, whether known or unknown, or whether with a bad purpose or innocently, a man is to be penalized in the judgment of a court up to a $10,000 fine, I cannot give my consent to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to mention the fact that it was the purpose, and I think that purpose is carried out in the provisions of the bill under section 30, particularly in paragraph (b), to separate penalties for violations of regulations from those for violations of the bill itself. In other words, the bill does not subject to imprisonment a person who violates regulations. He is only subjected to the penalty of a fine in that case. If he violates a rule or regulation willfully and knowingly he is liable to punishment by fine, or if he violates the law itself willfully and knowingly, then he may be subjected to both fine and imprisonment. That distinction is intended in the bill, and I think it is made.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is a merciful distinction, but it does not affect the principle which is involved, as I see it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield if the Senator from Idaho has concluded.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Ohio wish to ask a question?

Mr. FESS. I will wait until after the Senator from Idaho shall have concluded.

Mr. BORAH. I want to call attention to some things which we are putting into these measures. I read from the sugar bill which we passed a few days ago:

(c) Whoever in connection with any settlement, under a contract to buy any commodity, and/or to sell such commodity, or any product or by-product thereof, subject to any tax under this title, makes any statement, written or oral, (1) intended or calculated to lead any person to believe that any amount deducted from the gross sales price, in arriving at the basis of settlement under the contract, consists of a tax under this title.

Does the Senator get the full import of that provision?

Mr. STEIWER. I am not sure that I do.

Mr. BORAH. I will read a portion of it again:

Intended or calculated to lead any person to believe that any amount deducted from the gross sales price, in arriving at the basis of settlement under the contract, consists of a tax under this title.

Mr. STEIWER. I assume that that was placed there in order to prevent a test of the validity of the act.

Mr. BORAH. No; it was placed there, I presume, in order to prevent some people from attacking the processing tax.

Mr. STEIWER. By litigation in court?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I want now to conclude. I have covered the ground which I intended to cover.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I will yield in just a moment. I wish to announce that at a later time I will offer some amendments in keeping with the suggestions I have made during my remarks. I shall not attempt now to do so, but at a later time, when we are discussing more in detail the question of the penalties in section 30 (b), I will, if I have the opportunity, go through the bill again to point out the full extent of the power to make rules and regulations, and the full application of those rules and regulations to different people who are variously affected by them, and then to urge upon the Senate again, more forcefully, I hope, after the illustrations shall have been presented, the absolute necessity for the amendment of section 30 (b) so that the penalty shall not be so un-American as to shock the conscience.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho called attention to the fact that in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as well as in the so-called "Sugar Act", the same principle is adopted. I call the attention of the Senate to the N.R.A., the National Recovery Act, which contains exactly the same thing.

The agreements are made operative in the administration of the law, but are not effective until the President approves them. It gives the President the power to change any regulation that he may see fit to change, and when a regulation is changed the fair practice prescribed is regarded as the law and has the force of law, with a penalty attached for its violation. As the Senator will recall, when we discussed it we talked about the revolutionary procedure of substituting what might be called the rule of men for a government of law.

Mr. STEIWER. Let me see if I cannot indicate to the Senator that the proposal here is more far-reaching in its effect and more un-American in principle than anything written in the N.R.A. Act, because when the President approves, he does so by Executive order or proclamation, and all who run may read. So there is a fair chance for people to have some knowledge of what is done and published by the President of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Until he undoes it.

Mr. STEIWER. Yes, possibly, but I think we will all concede that the President would not act in a whimsical way about a matter of that kind. Under this bill, however, a commission is to be created which does not even need to act by proclamation. It can meet in private, if it wants to, and it is not required to publish anything by proclamation, Executive order, or in any other way. This, in my judgment, is the most unheard-of thing that has yet been presented, and to me, because it is so far beyond the traditional belief of our people, it seems that we ought not to resort to it, because we are not obliged to resort to it. We can provide all the penalties reasonably necessary for the enforcement of this proposed act without putting this unusual, un-American penal requirement upon our people. I think it far exceeds even the drastic provisions of the National Recovery Act.

Mr. FESS. It is not different in the direction of the step which is taken; but the second step is just a little longer than the first one, and the third step will be longer than the second.

Mr. STEIWER. That is true. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to make a brief statement. In the beginning of the Senator's remarks he referred to an alleged number of 450,000 corporations which are about to be strangled by some of these regulations. I do not quite understand what these corporations may be. Moody's Manual, which is considered something of an authority, and which attempts to give statistical data about all companies in which the public is interested, lists only 34,000 corporations. It seems to be absurd to suppose that this bill affects a great multitude of more than 450,000 corporations throughout the land not connected with Wall Street. This manual lists only 34,000 corporations.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not attempt to say that the statement from which I read earlier in the debate is exactly correct as to numbers, but there is information before the committee that there are vastly more than 34,000 corporations in the country. I do not remember the exact figures, but it is vastly more than that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the Senator made some criticism of the provisions as to the requirement of reports from corporations. The Senator will remember that the president of the New York Stock Exchange has frequently emphasized the necessity for more complete and accurate reports by listed corporations. The members of the stock exchange themselves have complained of that situation, and the president of the New York Stock Exchange last year, in a speech at Cleveland, said:

> It is now generally recognized that the lack of complete disclosure of the result of business operations contributed to the inflation of security values which preceded the panic of 1929.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the stock exchange is very happy to have some excuse for its own part in the speculative orgy of 1929. It was within its power, in my judgment, at that time to obtain from the issuers of securities all the information that was needed. The fact is it did not get the information. If that be an argument to justify the requirement for further reports, we still have the responsibility of seeing to it that we do not go too far.

Let me call attention, in that regard, to the language on page 34 of the bill, which I did not refer to in my earlier remarks. It is there provided as follows:

> (b) The Commission may prescribe, in regard to reports made pursuant to this act, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and the earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of separate and/or consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer.

Before the committee the question was raised whether it was advisable for the Congress to supervise the internal affairs of corporations to the extent of controlling their methods of accountancy. It was believed, I think, by a majority of the committee that we should not do that.

In line 6 on page 34 we changed the word "accounts" to "reports", so as to make certain the proposed commission would be requiring reports and not a new and expensive method of accountancy. Yet it seems to me, Mr. President—and I do not want to take a dogmatic position in respect to it, and I confess my interpretation of the language might not be correct—that the committee failed to go far enough in making the corrections necessary in this bill, and that in the language which I just read the committee has left in the measure ample authority on the part of the commission not only to control the kind of reports which are to be made by corporations, but also to control the basic accountancy of corporations. It may be, for one reason or another, that a corporation is compelled to continue its present system of accountancy; and if this be true, as I think it is true, the Commission may require a system of its own; then we will have the spectacle of a Federal agency exacting of business institutions two methods of accountancy, with very great expense to the corporations concerned. In the end the expense will be paid by the stockholders. There is nothing we can provide by the terms of the bill in the way of excessive requirements, the expense of which is to be met exclusively by millionaires. It will in the last analysis be distributed among the American people.

I think the Senator from Florida selected an unfortunate illustration when he referred to the requirement for reports as indicating that the restrictive influences upon corporations will not be great and severe. On the contrary, I think the reporting requirements will be almost devastating, and because of fear that conditions may be even worse than they are, corporations will find it difficult to comply with these provisions of the act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield the floor, unless the Senator wants to ask a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the Senator a question. The section on page 34 of the bill, to which the Senator has just referred, describes somewhat in detail the power of the commission to exact reports of companies. It does not seem to me it gives the commission any power to impose on a corporation any particular method of bookkeeping. Where questions of depreciation, depletion, and valuation enter into the financial statement, which have a great bearing upon the financial condition of the company, does not the Senator think the commission ought to have the power to learn by what method it arrived at the figures which it reports as bearing upon its financial standing? It seems to me that is all the bill does in that regard.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not believe the end to be attained justifies the procedure. I think if it involves the requirement of a new system of accountancy, we are not justified in requiring institutions to set up books to satisfy us as a condition precedent to the listing of their stocks upon the stock exchange.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not require them to adopt a set of books to suit us or the commission. It authorizes the commission to require the company to advise it by what bookkeeping method of its own it has arrived at those conclusions.

Mr. STEIWER. With that statement I cannot agree. If the company does not have the information it will have to keep its books in a way to acquire it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Any company that does not have the information under its own method of bookkeeping certainly does not deserve very much consideration in the listing of its stock on the exchange.

Mr. STEIWER. All honest effort to maintain business and provide employment deserves consideration. The proof of the pudding will be the eating thereof. I am wondering what some of my good friends will be saying 12 months from now if Congress enacts the bill in this form and then finds it is injurious to the business of America and that it causes further unemployment among the laboring people of the United States and retards the recovery for which we are all praying. What excuse can they offer for their action when it is just as easy to make the bill a little more moderate with respect to industry, and start with steps we know are sound, and then add as the necessities may require and in a way that will do injury to no one but will protect the public and American investors against the evil practices which have been permitted in security transactions?

Mr. WALCOTT obtained the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I wish to address myself chiefly to those features of the Federal securities exchange bill, Senate bill 3420, now being considered, which have to do primarily with the regulation and control of corporate financing as found in sections 12 and 13.

When the term "stock exchange" is used, the New York Stock Exchange enters the mind, whereas the New York Stock Exchange, although by far the largest, is only 1 of 47 in the United States.

Twenty years ago relatively few people were interested in or traded on the stock exchanges. The enormous impetus to business created by the war, the excessive war profits in the pockets of a few, led to a period of reckless extravagance and the wildest speculation. Encouraged by too liberal loans from the Federal Reserve banks to brokers which reached the dizzy peak of eight and a half billion dollars in 1929, stimulated by the capital-gains tax, which kept security holders from realizing profits as they went along, thereby creating a relative shortage in all the leading issues, the whirlpool kept sucking in its victims until nearly everyone from the "bellhop" to the boss was gambling. The ticker was the timepiece, the tape the measure of success. The high-powered salesman had an easy time of it, for no one counted the cost or the need.

While in sympathy with any legitimate movement designed to prevent a recurrence of the speculative abuses which were revealed by the so-called "Wall Street probe" conducted by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, in which activity I participated, I desire to warn against carrying the preventive features of the pending legislation so far as to continue and to aggravate conditions created under the Securities Act of 1933 that we now are being called upon to correct.

There can be little doubt of the need for Federal legislation to supplement the rules and regulations of the stock exchanges. To some extent in this bill we give the effect of law to the police powers exerted by the officials of the exchanges. In other words, we make mandatory compliance with those rules and regulations, while augmenting them by outlawing certain practices with which perhaps the exchanges themselves have either been unwilling or unable to cope.

But in the endeavor forever to close the door to those manipulative and speculative practices which all of us condemn, we appear about to lose sight of the very vital and necessary economic function of the stock exchange.

The record of some of the matters developed during the probe of the Banking and Currency Committee, in truth, does not present a very attractive picture. It emphasizes a need for safeguarding the flow of the capital of the country from being diverted into speculative channels, particularly at a time when there is need for industrial financing and financial assistance to agriculture.

This situation of itself demands the utmost caution lest we so legislate as to hamper the flow of capital into its proper channel. As a result of the revelations of the committee and the attendant publicity, too many people have come to think of the stock exchanges as institutions through which merely to speculate in securities. The spectacular naturally has caught the public fancy. The "rooking" of investors in some of the better-known corporations, revealed through the activities of our committee, stands out in bold relief, and overshadows the corporate enterprises which the securities represent, and which combine to form the foundation of the greater part of our commercial life. The primary purpose of the exchanges in providing a more extensive market for these corporate securities, which otherwise would reach the attention of a comparatively few investors, is being ignored.

The Government has had sufficient experience with the operation of the Securities Act of 1933 to learn of its defects, although in some quarters there appears something of dogged resistance to remedial action. It may be something of pride of authorship or of administration. Nevertheless, our committee chairman has seen fit to offer as an amendment to this bill a complete new title designed to modify the law so to make it more workable.

With due deference to the distinguished chairman of our committee, his sponsorship of these proposed changes in the Securities Act of 1933 may be taken as an admission of their need. I think this a fair statement, because all of us realize that a different significance attaches to the presentation of such a matter by the chairman than would occur were the changes sought by a mere member. Furthermore, the press has labeled these the administration amendments.

Let me add at this point that in my 6 years' service here I have never seen greater patience, greater forbearance, and more persuasive methods than those used by our distinguished chairman, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], in working out this bill. It has been a tedious process. We have been at it for weeks, patiently trying to hew out a bill which would accomplish the desired results without injuring legitimate business. I think in a very large measure we have accomplished that task. From all sections of the country have come complaints that the Securities Act of 1933 has had the effect of retarding business recovery to a considerable extent. So insistent has become the demand for remedial action that it could no longer be overlooked by the administration. We are grudgingly giving a degree of relief which, in effect, we may destroy in the bill now before us unless amended. That, to my mind, is a very important point. These are companion bills and must go hand in hand, neither conflicting with the other.

Much of the Fletcher-Rayburn bill is devoted to conferring upon the Government regulatory powers quite beyond the scope of its underlying purpose. In that respect it threatens a curtailment of commercial and industrial initiative. To the extent that this strangulation occurs will the stifling effect of the securities act be paralleled.

Even if confined to its original purpose, the bill gives to the projected Federal Securities Exchange Commission—the regulatory body which it would create—a degree of detailed supervisory control over exchanges and markets which is wholly unnecessary to the satisfactory accomplishment of the basic principles with which I am in hearty accord. This will result in imposing undue burdens and expense upon American industry.

So serious has become the credit situation in the United States that President Roosevelt has been led to give his approval to legislation providing industrial loans through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that we are told are likely to total $650,000,000. In addition, through the Glass bill, we are talking about making available through the Federal Reserve banks an additional $250,000,000 for loans for pay-roll and raw-material costs increased through adherence to N.R.A. codes.

If it be the settled policy of the administration that the Government shall finance all industry, supervising the purposes for which the money is to be used, ultimately to control all business through representation on the directorates of the borrowers, and become the intermediary through which all funds into industry shall pass, we might safely leave this bill untouched in the particulars to which I am addressing myself.

It is inconceivable, however, that the administration should become so utopian as to desire that the State shall run the everyday affairs of our people. But if that be too radical, then we must give heed to the advice of business as to its needs and not characterize as propaganda, fomented by Wall Street interests, the presentation of facts based on experience as differentiated from theory.

Theories expounded in the original legislation from which was developed the pending bill would have thrown business into a strait-jacket from which no Houdini could have escaped. Through patient and toilsome consideration the committee has ironed out most of the differences of opinion, but has failed to harmonize the divergent views on what I term the "business features" of the bill, particularly sections 12 and 13.

As reported from the committee, the measure purports to have as its purpose the regulation of securities exchanges and the over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent inequitable and unfair practices. Particular emphasis is put upon the curbing of manipulative practices and excess speculative activities on such exchanges and markets which are detrimental to the orderly and safe conduct of the financing of commerce and industry and to the interests of investors.

Since we are virtually in agreement as to the desirability of curbing those practices which we all condemn, I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to those provisions of the bill and the recommendations of the Banking and Currency Committee majority that some of us aver will hamstring business, tend to send us into another tailspin, and bring down upon the Congress when it meets again in January the criticism of the people that will cause us again to retreat, just as we are about to do in the case of the Securities Act enacted last year.

Section 12 of the bill, relating to registration of securities on a national-securities exchange, contains requirements for the submission of agreements and various miscellaneous documents and information concerning the issuer of the security desired to be registered. These are to be made in such detail as to disclose to the commission, and very probably to the public, matters which are quite unnecessary in order to assure the commission of fair dealing in the security on the exchange. Furthermore, they will undoubtedly disclose methods of conducting the issuer's business which are perfectly reputable, but which, because of their confidential character, it may be highly desirable in the interests of competition not to disclose. If the issuer desires to have his securities traded in on a registered exchange, he must submit to the commission information in such detail as the commission may prescribe with respect to an astounding number of items. The list of these enumerated in the section would seem to cover almost every conceivable detail of internal management. After listing and registration has been authorized by the commission, an issuer may not withdraw the listed security from listing except upon 30 days' notice to the exchange and the commission; and the commission is granted power to require that such withdrawal be first submitted for ratification by the holders of a majority of the issuer's voting stock. Very strict requirements are also made for the registration of unissued securities.

The requirements of section 13 of the bill, with respect to the filing with the commission by issuers of registered securities of periodical and other reports, are so drastic as to result in hopeless confusion and vast expense on the part of commercial and industrial corporations throughout the country in keeping their accounts. The commission is empowered to require annual reports and their certification by independent public accountants, quarterly reports, and such other reports as it may deem essential in special circumstances. Untold difficulties may be encountered on the part of such corporations in meeting not only the periodic but the sporadic demands of the commission in this respect. Further, with respect to the preparation of these reports, the commission is given power to prescribe the form in which they shall be made, the amount of detail which they shall contain, and other requirements of such a nature as to enable the commission to dictate, in practical effect, the methods of accounting to be followed. No exceptions are made to these requirements, other than in the case of issuers whose accounting is subject to the provisions of any law of the United States; and, as to them, it is merely provided that the requirements made by the commission shall not be inconsistent with those imposed by such law. No exception is made as to those corporations whose accounting is governed by the rigorous laws of States.

In this connection it should be noted that common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act are required under that act to establish most adequate systems of accounting and to make voluminous reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission. These reports are probably more elaborate than any reports which may reasonably be required by the Federal Securities Exchange Commission. Moreover, the books of these common carriers are subject to the audit of agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and there is no possible gain in placing them under the supervision of another governmental agency. On the contrary, it would result in duplication of reports and duplication of supervision by two different Federal agencies, with consequent additional cost to the carriers and to the United States. These carriers should be relieved from the application of this act, and an amendment should be added to the bill exempting them from its provisions.

The sum total of the requirements of sections 12 and 13 of the bill makes it clear that the effect, if not the purpose, of incorporating them in the bill in their present detailed form is a regimentation of commerce and industry in the United States on a national scale. The burden which these provisions will impose upon the normal operation of American business and industry is so substantial, and the danger that the powers of the commission might be used to influence the conduct of corporations is so real, that many issuers of securities which are today dealt in on exchanges will undoubtedly hesitate to comply with the act.

Far from having any relation to the financing of operations of commercial and industrial corporations, and the protection of investors in their securities on exchanges and over-the-counter markets, the application of the provisions of these sections will undoubtedly result in bringing about an extreme deflation of corporate securities throughout the country. The mere fact that the commission is given power under section 23 of the bill to make disclosure of the information contained in the documents filed with it, with but a minimum of restriction upon its discretion to do so, will undoubtedly result in the withdrawal of many securities from the exchanges by corporate issuers. The inevitable result of such a course of action will be the destruction of a liquid market in such securities to the detriment of the holders of the same and the general investing public. The inability to finance readily will, it will be recognized, have the effect of stagnating corporate, commercial, and industrial activity.

In this connection it is well to note that from the all-time peak of $9,400,000,000 in 1929, the total of new capital and refunding issues for domestic corporations floated in the American investment market dropped to $380,000,000 in 1933. Of this $380,000,000, only $161,000,000 went into capital issues, the balance being absorbed by refundings. New capital invested in a single month in any one of the years from 1924 to 1929 was in excess of the value of new issues floated during the entire 12 months of 1933.

In view of the fact that there has already been such a considerable decrease in corporate financing, the imposition of additional burdens of a restrictive character as contemplated by these sections would undoubtedly have the effect of retarding business recovery, and would to that extent prolong the depression.

Furthermore, the bill makes no provision, except in the discretion of the commission, for exempting from registration sound listed securities which for technical reasons cannot or will not be registered. Some of our soundest investment securities were issued many years ago by companies which have since been legally dissolved. For instance, a mortgage bond of a railroad company, which had sold its assets to another railroad, might still be listed on an exchange in spite of the fact that the corporation which issued the bond had voluntarily dissolved. These securities cannot be registered under the bill because the issuers have ceased to exist and, therefore, cannot comply with the registration requirements. In addition, there are many billion dollars' worth of foreign government obligations or foreign corporate securities which are now owned by Americans and currently listed and dealt in on exchanges. These issues have in most instances been completely distributed, and the issuers, particularly if they are foreign governments or corporations, will not, except in the rare instance where they are contemplating a further issue in this country, have any reason to comply with the burdensome provisions of the bill. If these securities are removed from our stock exchanges, due to the failure of the commission to provide for exempting them from the provisions of the act, the effect will be to deprive the persons who own them of a public market for their investments with consequent loss to the holders by reason of the depreciation in value of the securities resulting from having no open market. It has been estimated that the market value of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange which would fall into these categories approximate $8,000,000,000.

Regulation of securities exchanges is highly desirable for the protection both of issuers and investors. This fact, however, does not justify the exercise by the Government of such broad police powers over the operations and internal affairs of the exchanges as is granted by section 19 of the bill, and which must necessarily have an indirect and restrictive effect upon corporate financing. For example, under subsection (a) the Commission is granted authority summarily to suspend trading in securities on national-securities exchanges for a period not exceeding 10 days or, with the approval of the President, summarily to suspend all trading upon any such exchange for a period not exceeding 90 days. Obviously, the possibility of the exercise of this power cannot help but intensify the fear of corporations whose securities are registered on the exchanges that the market for such securities may be practically withdrawn overnight, which will undoubtedly tend to hinder the restoration of confidence in business recovery.

In addition, the provisions of subsection (b), which give the Commission power to alter or supplement the rules of exchanges in respect of every detail of the conduct of business thereon, make it very difficult for members of exchanges to predict just what rules of practice they will be operating under from week to week or from month to month.

Furthermore, in addition to the broad regulatory powers given to the Commission, which are to a certain extent necessary in order to provide effective regulation, the Commission is authorized, without restraint of any kind, to appoint and fix the compensation of its employees and to assess the expense incurred in the administration of the act against the exchanges which are made subject to its regulation. This authority enables the Commission to appoint and expend without limit, and to assess expenses without limit. Its budgeted expenses need not be reviewed by the Bureau of the Budget. The disbursements when made are not subject to the scrutiny of the Comptroller General. It need not justify its expenditures to any committee of either branch of Congress. In short, the Commission is wholly without restraint except that implied by the fact that its members are appointed by the President of the United States.

It is earnestly contended that this commission should be dealt with as substantially all other Federal agencies are treated. Proper governmental safeguards may be readily obtained. Nothing further will be required to provide such safeguards except to authorize the necessary appropriations to enable the commission to administer the act and to provide that the commission, within proper limitations, may assess equitable fees against the stock exchanges, such fees to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. These proposals, if agreed to, will subject the commission to the supervision of the Bureau of the Budget and will require the commission to justify its expenditures before the House Committee on Appropriations. It will result also in the auditing of its disbursements by the Comptroller General and will make the commission a normal, conventional, and controlled agency of the Government. Departure from this usual course would be dangerous.

Finally, although the bill purports to allow persons affected by the acts of the administrative commission to have such acts reviewed by the courts, the provision is so narrowly restricted that only those persons who are aggrieved by an order entered in a proceeding to which they have been made a party by the commission are entitled to have recourse to the courts for justice. As there is no requirement that the commission must initiate a proceeding and give notice to the persons who will be affected by its action, it is possible for the commission to evade entirely the provisions of the bill giving citizens the right to review its actions in the courts.

Of greatest importance, in terms of restrictions upon business and industry, are the penalties provided for violation of the rules and regulations prescribed by the commission. Authority to make rules and regulations is written throughout the bill. The application of these rules is not limited to stock exchanges, brokers, or dealers. In their several effects they reach creditors, bankers, investors, corporations, and all others having any relation, direct or remote, with the transaction of corporate business and the sale and purchase of securities. Under section 30 (b) willful violation of the rules and regulations by any person may result in indictment, conviction, and a fine not to exceed $10,000. This subsection does not require publication by the commission of such rules or regulations and does not require that the effective date thereof shall be postponed until all concerned may be familiar with their effect. On the contrary, it permits the forthwith application of the rules and regulations to innumerable persons who, in the very nature of the situation, can have no knowledge that the rules and regulations are applicable to them or to their dealings. The application of the penalties is not limited to those who are guilty of a violation made for the purpose of injuring or defrauding, but they apply likewise to those who proceed in good faith for legitimate purposes, with the result that they reach those innocent of willful wrongdoing as well as the guilty. Inevitably, the threat of the penalties referred to will interfere with normal operations in legitimate business and will prevent the lawful and proper activity necessary for recovery.

The bill as drawn is burdensome to industry and commerce and should be amended to remove the provisions most seriously restrictive in order to permit the business of the country to recover from the depression. With the adoption of a few amendments to cure the deflationary effect of sections 12 and 13, this bill should aid materially in the restoration of confidence and serve a useful purpose, and without unnecessary and wholly destructive effects upon legitimate business and the impairment of the financing operations of the private undertakings which are necessary in order to provide employment for those who are idle.

Mr. President, of this fact we can be certain, unemployment is the millstone which is now about our necks; it threatens this country from every angle, and it must be reduced rapidly and radically if we are to survive as a nation. There is but one permanent way out, and that lies through business recovery, which means the encouragement of business in every legitimate way. But normal business has its recurring capital requirements, which must be met or business stagnates.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In the course of his remarks the Senator called attention to the fact that the proposed commission is not subject to various laws such, for instance, as that of the Budget, and, therefore, is not properly regulated. I should like to ask the Senator if the bill were amended so as to provide that the Federal Trade Commission should have charge instead of the proposed commission, would not that objection and all the Senator has said about it necessarily disappear?

Mr. WALCOTT. I think the law governing the financing of the Federal Trade Commission brings that commission under the Budget, and, therefore, my objection would be answered, except, Mr. President, I think we should be better off if we had a new commission set up and still under the same regulations for budgeting its expenses than to put it in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission, but I am not prepared to argue strenuously either for or against that change. I am not sure how it will work.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not arguing that, of course, in my question, but it occurred to me as the Senator proceeded and cited quite a long list of requirements which would not apply to the commission to be created, of which I only mentioned as an illustration the Budget provision, that that objection would be obviated and that defect cured if the Federal Trade Commission had charge of it instead of having an independent commission set up.

Mr. WALCOTT. That is true; but, of course, we might cure it by amending the bill by providing that the regulations which now apply to the Federal Trade Commission shall also apply to the proposed new commission. We would have the advantage of the new commission as against a group set aside from the Federal Trade Commission to take charge of the administration of the two companion bills. I think it very important that the two bills come under the jurisdiction of the same body.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, if a new commission shall have jurisdiction of this bill, we ought to take away from the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction over the Securities Act?

Mr. WALCOTT. We should take away its jurisdiction over the Securities Act.

Mr. NORRIS. And give it to this proposed new commission?

Mr. WALCOTT. Yes; that is what I recommend; and I think it is very important that we have the two measures administered by the same commission.

Mr. NORRIS. A strong argument, I think, can be made in favor of having the two bills under the supervision of one body, but that argument would apply both ways. I think if the Federal Trade Commission were made the agency to administer this proposed act instead of a new commission, we should then leave the authority to administer the provisions of the Securities Act which it now is—with the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. WALCOTT. And place the administration of this proposed law, the Securities Exchange Act, under the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. It ought to be borne in mind that the Federal Trade Commission was not picked by the President—for it is composed of a membership appointed by various Presidents—nor confirmed by the Senate with the idea of its being charged with the extremely complex and important duties which will devolve upon the special commission provided for by the pending bill. I doubt whether the members of the Federal Trade Commission know anything in the world about stock-exchange transactions, unless some one or more of them may have been stock speculators or brokers on the stock exchange.

While I am on my feet, if it will not interfere too much with the course of the Senator's remarks, I will say that it was suggested yesterday that an independent commission would involve an additional expenditure, it has been estimated, of a half a million dollars. Under this bill it would not involve the expenditure of a dollar by the Federal Government. We provide that the funds for the payment of the commission and all its expenditures must be assessed against the stock exchanges, just as all the expenses of the Federal Reserve Banking System, from the janitors in the respective banks to the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, are exacted from the member banks, and just as all the expenditures of the Comptroller's office for the examination of banks have for 60 years been exacted from the banks themselves. The Government will not be put to the expense of a dollar on account of the proposed independent commission.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I may inform the Senator from Virginia that the provision in the House bill to charge a fee of one five-hundredths of 1 percent on the money value of the securities issued, if we take all the securities as of a normal average year, would result in raising approximately $5,000,000. Whether that is a desirable provision, whether too high or too low, or whether we ought to have a charge which would come under the Budget Director, and have the fund raised by assessing the exchanges, is a matter for argument. I do not know. I feel very strongly as the Senator from Virginia does, that, inasmuch as this is a highly technical business, it should be administered by men who are doing nothing else but using the powers granted by the Securities Act and by this act.

Mr. GLASS. That will take all their time, all their ingenuity, and all their energy.

Mr. WALCOTT. Absolutely. It is a power carrying enormous responsibility, and, personally, as the result of our weeks of deliberation in the committee hearings, I favor an independent commission as provided in the Senate bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have always been very proud of the Federal Trade Commission. I happened to be a member of the committee in the other body of Congress which framed the law that created the Commission, and I have always felt that it had abundantly justified its creation by the service it has rendered to the American people and to American business. I know it has always had its hands full in performing the duties originally assigned to it of attempting to keep the channels of commerce unchoked, so that the small business man might obtain a remedy against evils without having to suffer the long delays of a lawsuit in the Federal courts.

I desire to say, as I said yesterday, that I think up to date the Federal Trade Commission has done a constructive piece of work in the administration of the Securities Act. It has accumulated a force of men who were undoubtedly qualified to deal with that matter.

When this bill, however, was first introduced, in order to assure that the Commission might have time to take on these additional duties, it was provided that three additional members should be appointed to the Federal Trade Commission, with the understanding that a group of the members of that Commission, a sort of segment not only of the Commission, but of the personnel, should be set off to themselves for the purpose of administering the Securities Exchange Act.

Inasmuch as this bill is to be passed, and inasmuch as the issuance of securities and their listing and their supervision on the stock exchanges are necessarily related subjects—as I see it, there is no way to separate the functions of these two acts—and in view of the necessity of appointing at least three additional members of the Federal Trade Commission to handle this new legislation, it seems to me that it would be wiser to have a separate commission composed of five or three members—three would probably be sufficient, but the bill provides for five, and to that I have no objection, and it might be more efficient to have the larger number, though five would be the maximum, so far as I am concerned—whose only duty it shall be to regulate not only the stock exchanges but the issues of securities which ultimately may go on the exchanges. It is a sort of endless process.

In addition to that, instead of having a group or a segment in the form of a subcommittee of the Federal Trade Commission, set off to one side to handle the securities situation, it would be infinitely better, it seems to me, to have one body, a commission, whose sole duty it would be to do that, so that the public eye will always be fixed upon that commission, and its actions will after a while receive a public attention which it would be impossible for a subcommittee of any existing commission to receive. For that reason I believe, as does the Senator from Connecticut, that an independent commission is better for the purpose of administering this proposed law, as it is also better for the purpose of administering both acts.

Mr. WALCOTT. I thank the Senator. I may remind the other Senators, and I think the Senator from Kentucky will bear me out, that in all our deliberations there was no dissenting opinion in the Committee on Banking and Currency as to the advisability of a separate commission, as set up in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. That sentiment was, of course, utterly free from any reflection upon either the ability or the work of the present Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. WALCOTT. Absolutely.

Mr. BARKLEY. The mere fact that we first provided for the appointment of three additional members was evidence of the fact that we realized that the present Commission, as now set up, could not take on this additional work and do justice to the great work it had been doing for the last 15 years.

Mr. WALCOTT. Yes.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think there is another Senator who desires to speak, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

ADMINISTRATION OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made reference a little while ago to a certain provision in the sugar bill. I do not believe that any number of Senators knew that there was a provision in the sugar bill such as is included in section 15. That section provides that if a man who is dealing in a basic commodity, or if a processor of basic commodities, or if a purchaser of basic commodities, or if a commissioner dealing in basic commodities makes any statement with reference to the processing tax that turns out to be false, and which he knows or has reason to believe is false, he may be imprisoned for not exceeding 6 months or fined a thousand dollars. If a small commission man or a grocer or a butcher selling pork chops wants some excuse to give his customer as to why pork chops happen to be high, and says, "Well, it is the processing tax", he may be taken into court, charged with a misdemeanor, and if found guilty he may be imprisoned for 6 months and fined a thousand dollars. I do not believe that the Senate had any conception that there was such a provision in the sugar bill when it was passed. It seems to me that that is regimentation in the extreme. It is carrying the measure entirely too far.

Mr. GORE. It is processing the other fellow.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is processing the other fellow, as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests. As a matter of fact, I do not believe the Senate had any conception that that general provision to the Agricultural Adjustment Act was embodied as an amendment in the sugar bill. It was slipped in the sugar bill and put through both Houses.

On the other hand, I am told that the Senate committee in its generosity cut the fine down from $5,000 to $1,000 and cut the period of imprisonment likewise from the one originally suggested by those who are interested in the legislation. It seems to me that we are providing for regimentation in the extreme and that sooner or later we are going to find that there will be a reaction that few of us now realize against regimentation of that kind.

Mr. President, I also wish to discuss for a little while the question of the processing tax. It is beside the measure which is now being considered, but it is in the fiscal policy of the Government. Sometime ago I made a statement with reference to the processing tax and the amount of the probable overdraft at the end of June. My estimate was that collections under the processing tax up to June 30 would amount to $348,091,274.19.

Mr. GORE. Is that on all commodities?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is on all commodities on which a processing tax is now levied. I find that there was a statement put into the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] which estimates that the processing tax for the fiscal year 1934 will amount to $409,019,450. I find that the collections up to May 1, 1934, amount to $270,014,046.09. I find that the entire processing tax for the entire month of April was $32,008,137.52. I leave it to any fair-minded man as to whether or not we are going to collect enough processing taxes between the first of May, with only 2 months to run, to amount to $409,000,000, when, as a matter of fact, the highest monthly collection has not been over $40,000,000. My theory is that the benefits to agriculture in the end can be no greater than the amount of the processing tax that can be collected.

I find another amusing thing, and that is that the estimated expenditures, according to the statement put in the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee, and according to the Department's revised estimates, as found in the RECORD under date of April 20, at page 6979, are $542,910,441. I find that, according to the statement which I put into the RECORD, the Budget estimate, which was made up, of course, in September and submitted to Congress when it convened, of the expense for the fiscal year 1934 was $855,739,811.

The explanation given for that is, according to the statement signed by Mr. J. C. Howell, as follows:

> In the first place, these estimates are estimates of obligations and not of expenditures.

In other words, if the Government gets into debt and does not have to pay it by the 30th of June, it is merely an obligation and not an expenditure. It can just go on obligating as long as pay day does not come.

> Obligations incurred, or to be incurred, in the fiscal year 1934 will far exceed expenditures during the same year, for when contracts involving rental and benefit payments are signed by the Secretary all payments to be made under those contracts then become obligations, whereas the actual expenditure of funds in payment of those rentals or benefits may occur a year later.

In other words, never try to balance your books by seeing how much you owe; just try to balance your books by seeing how much you have already spent.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. Can the Senator tell us just how much the Government has received from processing taxes up to a given date and how much has been paid out by the Government on account of processing taxes? Perhaps the Senator did intend to give that figure, but it was not so stated.

Mr. DICKINSON. The processing taxes up to March 31, 1934, had amounted to $270,014,046.09.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator is now going to give us what the Government has collected?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; that figure represents the collections under the processing tax. Collections under the processing tax up to May 5 have amount to $299,220,478.62. According to the statement of Mr. J. C. Howell, the amount actually paid out for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration amounts to $242,512,090.91. That does not take into account the obligations which are current but which will not mature until after June 30.

Mr. HEBERT. If I may interrupt the Senator further, is there any estimate of the obligations which have been assumed and to which the Senator refers?

Mr. DICKINSON. The only estimate of which I am aware is the one given here, which is $855,379,911.

Mr. HEBERT. The Government estimates it is going to collect that amount sometime?

Mr. DICKINSON. Sometime. But the inconsistency in the figures is what I want to show. If we turn to page 6979 of the RECORD, Senators will see the difference between the expenditures as now listed and as formerly listed when made by the Budget. According to the statement in the RECORD under date of April 20, I find the estimated expenditure for the year 1934 to be $542,910,441. The estimate according to the Budget was $855,379,911. According to the revised estimate, the expenditures for the fiscal year 1935 should be $336,629,383. The expenditures according to the Budget for the fiscal year 1935 were to be $831,022,428.

Mr. FESS. How will the $500,000,000 be made up?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know how it will be made up. Perhaps it will be made up by the general taxpayer, who is always the goat in the case of all these socialistic theories which are tried out.

Mr. FESS. Will additional action on the part of the Congress be required?

Mr. DICKINSON. I should think so, because we have worked half of the session passing a revenue bill which will bring in only about $400,000,000.

Mr. FESS. Is it the opinion of the Senator that there is to be no money paid to the farmer under the act other than that which is collected through the processing tax?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio that under the Agricultural Adjustment Act the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture may jointly estimate how much money will be needed to carry out the provisions of the act. The Treasury can advance that money to the Secretary of Agriculture. If it is never paid back through the processing tax, the Treasury is just out the money.

Mr. FESS. That is the answer I expected to have. That is the way it is being done.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is the way the act is being administered right now. The theory that there is any hope of this project paying its way is erroneous. In other words, I take the two estimates of the Budget for 1934 and 1935. They amount to $1,007,722,850. It is said that with what has been spent and what is obligated that amount of money will be required for 1934.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. Certainly.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator refers to the Budget. May I ask him to explain a little more fully what he means by the budget he is mentioning? Is that the budget of the A.A.A. for taking care of the processing tax?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no. When I refer to the Budget I mean the official Budget required by law, which is made up by the Budget Director every year and which is his estimate of the expenditures to carry on the Government and its various activities for the following fiscal year. It is sent to Congress by the President. It is an estimate under his authority, wherein are set forth the expenses to be incurred and the sums necessary to meet them for the fiscal year starting on the following July 1 and ending on July 31 of the year following that.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course, in that Budget it was never intended that there would be included the outlay for the processing tax which the Government seems to have anticipated will be paid back at some time. That was not included in the Budget figures which the Senator has just quoted.

Mr. DICKINSON. The only provision for meeting the Budget figures I am quoting is by the collection of the processing tax. There is no other way to pay it unless it is paid out of the general taxes which are collected. The processing tax will not come anywhere near meeting the obligations which are gradually being incurred under the A.A.A.

The conflicting amounts which have been sent to the Congress are amusing to me. In the first place, it is said the Budget for 1934–35 will amount to $1,686,000,000, and then, under date of April 20, another statement is sent in which it is estimated that the total expenditures under the A.A.A. for 3 years, 1934, 1935, and 1936, are going to be only $1,003,602,714. In other words, according to the Budget figures and according to the estimate of the amount which it is now believed will be collected, there is a discrepancy of more than $686,000,000.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. While opposed to the processing tax in the beginning, I did suppose the scheme would work. I supposed it was automatic, self-acting, self-limiting; that the Government would take with one hand out of the processing tax required to be paid, and with the other hand put it in the farmer's pocket and balance the Budget. Can the Senator explain how the discrepancy or deficiency arises?

Mr. DICKINSON. It arises in two ways. In the first place, when we started operations under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration every possible form of publicity was adopted to show how much money was going to be paid out to the farmer. In other words, it seemed to be the idea to tickle the farmer by giving him a lot of money. The farmer did not know where it was to come from or who was paying it, but he got it and was going to ask no questions. Then, without thinking there was going to be any reaction, it was said, "We are going to levy a processing tax on all farmers' commodities." A processing tax was levied on hogs. What happened? Regardless of the fact that the Emergency Relief Administration has been spending thousands of dollars to purchase hogs——

Mr. HEBERT. Millions of dollars.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; it did run that high. Regardless of that expenditure, the price of hogs is going down. Let me read from the Chicago Tribune of yesterday:

> Every penny of the bill will be paid either by farmers or consumers.

That means the processing tax. As a matter of fact the farmer, according to the best data we can get with reference to the processing tax on hogs, is standing about 75 percent of the processing tax and the consumer is paying the other 25 percent. I want to read a little further to show the effect of the processing tax:

> The farmers who may still have some confidence in Mr. Wallace's connivings can compare the prices they are getting for hogs with the going market for cattle.

Remember, we put cattle in the bill a little while ago, but no processing tax has been levied up to date:

> Hogs are paying Mr. Wallace's processing tax and are selling near the all-time low despite the Government's immense purchases for poor relief. Cattle are still outside Mr. Wallace's beneficent scheme and are selling at the best price in 3 years despite the fact that the number of cattle marketed has been abnormally large.

That shows the effect of the processing tax; and yet it is contended here that we are going to put more agricultural commodities under a processing tax.

In my judgment, the processing tax deadlocks itself. Why? By the time a tax is levied to collect money for the Department to play with, it takes quite a little while to find out whether it is going to be charged to the producer or to the consumer. In the meantime, when the farmer is selling his product, the officials just take the tax out of him, and run the risk of whether or not they will get any of it back; and the theory that it is going to be redistributed is erroneous. Why? Because nowhere near the number of men are receiving benefit payments under the hog contracts that pay the processing tax when they sell their produce. Therefore the tax punishes the majority of the producers, and benefits only a minority of the producers of any given commodity.

We are going a good deal farther, however.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. On that point, the Government has virtually pegged the price of corn at 45 cents a bushel.

Mr. DICKINSON. It has not pegged the price of corn. What the Government has done is to loan the farmer 45 cents a bushel on stored corn.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. We have out in Iowa over 130,000,000 bushels stored.

Mr. GORE. That is virtually setting a minimum price below which corn will not sell, because the farmer will borrow from the Government instead of selling in the ordinary course of trade if he is obliged to take less than 45 cents. What I desire to ask the Senator is whether farmers can feed 45-cent corn to hogs, and realize on the investment when they sell their hogs at current prices.

Mr. DICKINSON. They cannot. As a matter of fact, it would be necessary to buy corn at 25 cents a bushel in order to feed it to hogs and sell them at the present prevailing price for hogs.

Mr. GORE. A few months ago was not that condition driving an abnormal number of hogs to market?

Mr. DICKINSON. It drove them to market by the thousands; but there is a further phase of the matter. What will the Government do with the millions of bushels of corn it has stored? Of course the farmer has received his money; he has spent most of it, and he is wondering what will happen next. Now the Government says to him, "Reduce your crop 25 percent." If the good Lord, in His wisdom, should reduce the production 75 or 50 percent, I wonder what would happen to the farmer.

Of course it may be said, "The Government will have to give him back this corn." Perhaps the taxpayer can afford to do that. I do not know; but I desire to say that the present course is simply leading from one complication to another, so that nobody knows where the program will lead us; and the farther in we get, the greater the complications are.

I remember that we had a commodity hanging over the market under the Farm Board, and yet we have even a worse condition now. Why? Because this corn is stored out in the country. When the time comes, later on, when crops mature, the farmer must have his cribs empty. What will the Government do with the corn? Wheat can be stored, but corn cannot be stored for more than a limited time. Therefore, I find that we are heading right into another complication of regimentation.

I desire now to refer to another provision that is being suggested. We shall need the cribs in Iowa by October 1. The Government has agreed to accept the corn on August 1. Naturally, we expect that the Government will say to the man who owes the money, "You do not need to pay it on August 1. We will extend the time for 30 or 60 days"; but the time will come when the farmer will say, "Tell me where you want this corn delivered, because I am going to deliver it. I want my crib room."

I next desire to call attention to Senate bill 3326, which is now being considered by the Agricultural Committee. It provides that every commodity which is a food product is to be licensed and regimented, and it does not make any difference whether or not it is a basic commodity.

It extends all the existing powers over basic agricultural commodities to every other food product; and it not only does that, but it extends, if you please, to the point where every person who is engaged in handling food products is to be licensed.

I read again from the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. GORE. Is it not required that it shall be a surplus product?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; under Senate bill 3326, it is not required that it shall be a surplus product. The first section reads as follows:

> That subsection (1) of section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end of the first sentence thereof the following: "Agreements authorized by this subsection may include, among others, provisions requiring the producers who are parties to such agreements to reduce or limit acreage and/or production for market of agricultural commodities other than basic agricultural commodities, as well as of one or more basic agricultural commodities."

Then it goes on with a general licensing provision.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand that the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act are to be extended by this bill over all articles, including those that are basic and also those that are not?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, indeed. That is what is proposed to be done under this new bill, which is an amendment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. FESS. Will the articles which are added, and which are not basic, have assessed upon them a processing tax?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; there is no provision in the bill for a processing tax.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the effort is to get the benefits of a subsidy on all articles without the payment of a processing tax?

Mr. DICKINSON. That is exactly correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator says that the bill is now under consideration by the Senate Agricultural Committee.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I remind him that it is being given this consideration only because it was sent back for this purpose after first being reported without adequate explanation. Some of this information, fortunately, filtered out to the country, and raised a storm of protest which now produces this belated consideration. Otherwise, the country might not have known of these new hobbles until it was harnessed beyond relief.

Mr. DICKINSON. I think that is a correct statement of the facts.

According to the Chicago Tribune of May 5, from which I now quote, referring to Senate bill 3326:

> The bill as the "brain trust" drafted it permits the Secretary of Agriculture to license every dealer in every agricultural product, and in every product that competes with an agricultural product, without exception.

Every agricultural product, and every product that competes with an agricultural product! It does not even have to be an agricultural product.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Is the Senator certain that the bill applies to crops of which we do not produce a surplus?

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. GORE. I thought this scheme of scientific treatment was to be a solution of the surplus problem.

Mr. DICKINSON. It has gotten away from that to the point where it is now a regimentation of agriculture and of all production of foodstuffs under the supervision of the "brain trust."

Further quoting:

> The license, which will state the terms on which business can be conducted, can be revoked by the Secretary with a minimum of legal formality.

In other words, it is almost an optional licensing. The Secretary can either license or not, as he desires.

Further quoting:

> Doing business without a license is punished by a fine the amount of which is to be determined by the Secretary. In eight general classifications of produce, including milk, fruit, and vegetables, the Secretary can even instruct the dealer or processor how much he may buy and from whom.

That is an editorial from the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. GORE. Of what date?

Mr. DICKINSON. Of May 5.

In order that Senators may understand more fully just what is contemplated, I have here a release which embodies a statement by Secretary Henry A. Wallace before the Agricultural Committee today. It is released to the press, so it is public information.

The committee is no longer holding secret hearings on this bill. I do not know why; but it found that it was necessary to get into the open. I read a statement appearing on page 3 of this release, at the bottom of the page.

The amendments—

Referring to Senate bill 3326, which amends the Agricultural Adjustment Act. What does the bill require? This is the statement of Secretary Wallace before the Agricultural Committee this morning:

The amendments reflect the determination of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to extend its facilities as rapidly as possible to producers of commodities, principally nonbasic, grown in widely scattered States and regions, through marketing agreements and licenses.

Mr. President, "scattered States" would include Oklahoma. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. And Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. And Iowa. It might reach up also into Vermont.

Further quoting:

These commodities include all the fruits and vegetables.

The Department officials are going out there to regiment John Crockett's radish patch in his back yard, or anybody else's garden. Where are we going? Nobody knows.

These commodities include all the fruits and vegetables, all the canning crops, rice, some kinds of tobacco, nuts, olives, and many special crops.

Mr. GORE. All kinds of nuts? [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. I think we ought to have a supplementary note there as to the kind of nuts that are to be included. [Laughter.]

They also include milk, which, though a basic commodity, has so far been dealt with entirely through the instrumentality of marketing agreements and licenses.

So where are we going? Oh, but this is not all! I read from page 4:

The amendments are designed to aid the Adjustment Administration in extending assistance to farmers who would not be aided directly by any of the major production-control programs, or who can be assisted more effectively through marketing agreements and licenses and without a processing tax.

That bears out the very statement made by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that all these commodities are to be brought in, and they are not to be subjected to the processing tax.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do.

Mr. HEBERT. Does the Secretary indicate how the money is to be raised to take care of this new activity of government?

Mr. DICKINSON. So far as I have been able to learn, there is no suggestion as to how the money is to be obtained to pay these accounts. The only provision is the processing tax. I have been trying to show that the processing tax is running so far behind that there is no hope of its catching up; and, on top of that, it is now proposed to bring in and license all these other commodities and give benefits to them, and provide no processing tax by which the bill can be paid.

Mr. HEBERT. That is as I understand the statement, that no processing tax is to be provided for the new commodities which are included within the program.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is absolutely true. I quote from page 4:

The amendments give explicit approval of the use of quota systems of marketing, with which farmers' cooperatives long have been accustomed but which, to be effective, need to be supplemented by Federal enforcing powers.

A quota provision! A quota system! A snooper! We are going to have the farmer saying to some Government snooper, "I am raising half an acre more of corn than I am entitled to. Therefore I ought to be prosecuted under the act." There may be a man who sells pork chops and happens to say, "Well, the processing tax makes the price a little high", and he may happen to make it higher than it should be and it is false, and he knows it to be false, and they are going to say, "You are going to be arrested by a Government snooper and taken into a Federal court and fined a thousand dollars." The Agricultural Adjustment Act is wonderfully made!

In this connection I would specifically direct the committee's attention to the fact that the proposed amendment with reference to quotas provides that two thirds of the producers or two thirds of those producers interested in the production or acreage of the commodity affected must clearly indicate their desire to put such an agreement into effect before we could lawfully proceed.

That brings up another question. If two thirds of the farmers say, "We want some of the 'brain trust' to come out and run our business for us", and one third of them, loyal Americans, say, "We are entitled to run our business and our farms the way we want to", then the two thirds, in cooperation with the Federal authorities, can coerce the other third and say, "If you do not come in and do as we tell you to, you are a violator of the law." That has done more to upset completely governmental functions than anything on earth. The third are entitled to their own views, regardless of what the two thirds say, and it has always been so in our country.

I think we are afforded some very interesting information in an editorial in this morning's Washington Post, entitled "Regimentation in Disguise." I read:

A new step toward regimentation of the farmer will be considered today by the Senate Committee on Agriculture. About 10 days ago that body heard Secretary Wallace and officials of the A.A.A. explain changes they desire in the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The Smith bill, embodying those changes, was reported to the Senate. But a vehement protest against the attempt to railroad this important measure through the Senate without public hearings caused the committee to reconsider. Today spokesmen for agriculture and other interested industries will be given a chance to present their views.

Because of the strange manner in which it was handled by the A.A.A. and the Senate committee, very little attention has been given to the Smith bill. It was represented as a measure of "clarification."

Do Senators think it is clarification only when it is sought not only, say, to bring in all these other commodities, but to bring in competing commodities or substitute commodities?

I find on pages 6, 7, and 8 of the Secretary's statement such commodities listed as potatoes, apples, dry edible beans, peaches, asparagus, citrus fruits, peanuts.

I thought peanuts were made a basic commodity in the bill we passed a short time ago.

Mr. FESS. They were.

Mr. DICKINSON. I was sure they were. There are also listed ripe olives, strawberries, grapes, wood turpentine and wood rosin, walnuts, cherries, corn for canning, peas for canning, tomatoes for canning, watermelons, fresh vegetables, pecans, pecan seedlings, rice, tobacco, and milk.

The concluding sentence of the Secretary is as follows:

I have confined my remarks thus far to amendments relating to marketing agreements and licenses. The bill, however, contains some other amendments. I shall now ask the clerk to read an explanatory statement of the provisions of the bill in the order in which they appear.

I have not had the privilege of seeing a copy of that explanatory statement, and therefore I cannot comment on it.

I quote further from the editorial in the Post:

Secretary Wallace is quoted as saying that it involves "no change in the policies of the A.A.A." Yet this measure redefines the objectives of the Adjustment Administration and would grant sweeping new powers to the Secretary of Agriculture.

In the first place, the bill would permit limitation or reduction of all agricultural products whether or not they have been listed by Congress as basic commodities. Curtailment of wheat, cotton, corn, and other basic crops seems to have resulted in more extensive cultivation of tomatoes, cabbage, etc.

When a man is asked to leave 20 acres of good land out of corn, if he is a good American he looks around to see if there is not something else he can raise on that 20 acres. There seems to be an effort to make it possible for the Department to say "We will not let you plant the acreage in corn, and we will not let you plant it in any of these other commodities, unless you have authority to do so from the 'brain trust' in Washington, D.C."

Since when does a man want to come to Washington to find out whether he can plant potatoes, or soybeans, or millet, or any of a hundred and one other commodities on the 20 acres which he is compelled to take out of cultivation? I continue to quote:

Such a trend was inevitable from the beginning. In fact, the tendency of artificial crop reduction to draw all agriculture under the domination of bureaucracy was pointed out as one of the fundamental weaknesses in the adjustment plan at the time of its adoption. When once the Government undertakes a task of this kind it is almost impossible for it to stop short of dictatorship.

I think that is about where we all will land when we start in with a program of this kind. I recall that when Diocletian, in Rome, tried to divide up the provinces, he got into the same difficulty the Secretary of Agriculture has met in trying to divide up the crop production in this country.

I continue to quote from the Post editorial:

Licensing provisions of the present act would be strengthened. The Secretary of Agriculture would be given power to prohibit unlicensed processors and distributors from handling any agricultural commodity or product thereof in the current of, or in competition with, interstate commerce.

Think of that! In order to handle the fruits from the farms of Delaware, one would have to go and get a license, would have to be a licensee, would have to have a permit from the Secretary of Agriculture.

What is there in the protection of public health making necessary such policing? It seems to me that we have reached the point where emergency has become a daily matter. An emergency is presumed to be for only a short duration, if I understand an economic emergency. But we have had one going on for a number of years. The word has almost come to be a regular order. Therefore the thing for us to do is to adjust ourselves to the new order, rather than to try to figure out some method by which we can escape the effect of the depression.

I continue to quote from the editorial:

Licenses providing for quotas or allotments could be issued on the request of two thirds of the producers.

We would have two thirds of the milk producers, located in New York and the New England States, telling us that we could not milk any cows out in Iowa and Oklahoma. They would tell us we could not sell any of our dairy products. The principal raw-milk production is in certain areas in the United States. Oh, we hear it said, there is no danger of the law being abused in its enforcement. Since when have we gotten to the point where we can put dictatorial authority in the hands of one man with the expectation that he is not going to abuse it? It becomes a government of men instead of a government of law.

I continue to quote from the editorial:

Apparently this provision is designed to extend to various crops the compulsory principle behind the Bankhead Act, which applies only to cotton.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator has made a very significant observation on the effect of the general inclusion of most agricultural products. I live in a section of the country where we observe the policy of rotation of crops. If we pass through the State today, in a section where winter wheat grows, and observe the operation of the plan of reduction of wheat acreage, we will find certain fields in wheat and other fields in oats. Ask the question, "How is this? It is not two fields; it is the same field." The reply is, "We rented this to the Government, and the Government permitted us to sow it in oats."

If the plan is broadened to take in most of the articles enumerated, limiting their production, the result will be to prevent the use of certain portions of the farm.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is absolutely correct. Let me give an illustration with reference to that. In the South, where the farmers reduced their cotton acreage, there was a tremendous increase in the planting of corn. Out in Iowa we are paying out Government money to keep the farmers from planting too much corn, while at the same time the farmers in many Southern areas are increasing the planting of corn.

As it happens, in Iowa we are selling oats as cheaply as we are selling corn; and yet in Ohio, where the farmer is paid not to produce so much wheat, he is permitted to raise oats, which takes the place of so much oats raised in Iowa. In other words, that simply shows the complication of this whole thing all along the line, where one interest conflicts with another. As a matter of fact, it is not the Government's business, and the quicker the Government gets out of it, the better off the Government will be.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit an interruption for the purpose of citing a concrete example of the operation of the code?

Mr. DICKINSON. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. FESS. The Senator spoke of control of grain production. I will cite a case which occurred in the evaporated-milk industry.

There are 44 companies in the United States dealing in evaporated milk. Thirty-nine of them went into an agreement under the code. Five stayed out. One of the five was operating in Ohio, and 1 of the 39 companies which are under the code also was operating there under certain regulations. The one outside the code, while not violating the code, because it is not operating under the code, was doing business in such manner as to take away the business of the man who was under the code. The man in Ohio who was under the code violated the code in order to meet the competition of the man who was operating outside the code. He was thereupon summoned to Washington by the authorities. He came and had a hearing before the division in Washington.

Afterward he came to my office in company with two other men and told me that he had told the Administrator that the authorities would have to control the one of the five not under the code who was taking his business, and he was told they could not control him because he was not under the code. "Then", he said, "the only thing left for me to do is to withdraw from the code." They informed him that he could not withdraw from the code unless 75 percent of those under the code would approve his withdrawal. Upon investigating to ascertain where the 75 percent was, he found that it was in 4 great companies, 3 in the West, and none in Ohio.

Then he asked whether the ruling of the Administrator meant that there was no relief for him; that he would have to go out of business. The officials said to him that they hoped he would not have to, but they did not give him any indication of what would happen.

When he came to my office I called the head of this division and asked him, because I knew he had not heard the case, to hear these men, because it appeared that the authorities could not control his competitor, they would not permit him to withdraw, they would not permit him to meet the competition of his competitor, and therefore he would have to go out of business. I have since heard that he was not fined or imprisoned for the violation of the code, but it was simply too bad that he could not live within the code.

What is to be the outcome of such a situation as that?

Mr. DICKINSON. That, Mr. President, is what is happening time and again all over the United States right now. The only outcome is to admit that the experiment is not a success, and abandon it.

Mr. FESS. The illustration applies to one particular industry. If we are going to cover all commodities with such regulations, I am wondering what is to be the outcome.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will give the Senate another illustration along the same line.

The other day a man representing the millinery-manufacturing trades of the country, whose clients were all in the Middle West, appeared in my office. He showed me the personnel of the millinery trade code authority. Out of 26 people on that code authority, 22 lived in New York. They were imposing labor conditions and rates of wages which were simply driving out of business all the millinery producers of the Mississippi Valley. This man asked what could be done, and was told, "Go to your code authority." When he went to the code authority they said to him, "We are sorry. These are the wages that the majority interests fixed in this industry, and if you cannot comply with them it is just too bad." He went home to advise his clients to close out their business.

I read further from this editorial:

In seeking to redefine farm "parity" the A.A.A. would bring labor costs, interest payments, and taxes into the picture. The original bill was designed merely to restore the 1909–14 price relationship between products the farmer sells and articles he must buy.

I remember that on the 13th of June I said that the two remedial programs, the A.A.A. and the N.R.A., would work adversely to the interests of agriculture. Why? Because the products the farmers are compelled to buy would be advanced in price, and the products they had for sale would not be advanced in price in like proportion, and, therefore, the difference in parity would be greater than it was before. I find that that prediction has exactly come true.

I continue to quote:

But an additional margin is now sought to offset higher current taxes, etc. If this doesn't involve a change of policy, that word must have acquired a strange new meaning under the new deal.

Congress is again confronted with the question as to whether it shall call a halt to the steady advance of bureaucratic regimentation for agriculture.

Mr. President, regimentation of agriculture never has succeeded. There has been no time in the history of the world when it ever has succeeded. It has been tried in practically every socialistic experiment which has ever been made by any government; and anyone who thinks that bureaucratic control of the social order will bring order out of the present chaos is entirely mistaken.

I continue to quote:

The fact that these proposed changes were brought forth under disguise and were first submitted to the Senate after hasty approval in executive session accentuates the suspicion with which they ought to be regarded.

Mr. President, in order not to take too much of the time of the Senate, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a clipping from the Philadelphia Inquirer of May 8, 1934, under the heading "Deficit Rises as New Deal Costs Mount."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of May 8, 1934]

DEFICIT RISES AS NEW-DEAL COSTS MOUNT—ALPHABETICAL AGENCIES SPEND $49,209,421 IN 2 DAYS; NEARLY 300,000 EMPLOYEES ON ROLL—EMERGENCY EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR REACH $3,279,798,172; ORDINARY EXPENSES $2,606,426,749

By Thomas F. Healey

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The expenditure in 2 days of $49,209,421 by the alphabetical agencies of the new deal graphically illustrates the cost of the Roosevelt administration's adventure in political and social experimentation.

The figures are more expressive than the total expenditures of those agencies for the fiscal year thus far, because they come within easy comprehension. To say—which is the case—that up to May 2 the recovery program cost $3,279,798,172 is to become astronomical.

It is less of a jolt to the average taxpayer to contemplate that figure than to realize that in the first 2 days of May it cost $49,209,421 to operate the vast recovery machine, and that with ordinary governmental expenditures the deficit in those 2 days was increased by $27,916,541.

It is also illuminating to point out that this recovery machine has accumulated in Washington and throughout the country an army of new Government employees which, according to the latest figures obtainable, approaches 300,000—284,149, to be exact.

Because of intricate methods of bookkeeping and the fact that various of the regular departments of the Government have employees who are paid out of emergency funds, it is impossible to estimate the amount of emergency funds which is dispensed in salaries. But it may be accepted as a certainty that a heavy percentage of the total expenditure comes under the head of administration of the new bureaucracy which the recovery program has set up.

FORTY NEW-DEAL AGENCIES

Before dealing further with specific costs, it is pertinent to point out that, while there have been decreases in the personnel of the regular Federal departments, particularly in the Treasury, the Post Office, and the Department of Commerce, the new-deal agencies, which, with their subdivisions, number about 40, are constantly increasing their personnel and their expenditures.

Month by month the established recovery organizations increase pay rolls, and as new agencies are established the administrative costs mount accordingly. The latest figures obtainable, which do not include persons who were employed under the Civil Works Administration, follow:

	Employees
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	4,403
Farm Credit Administration	7,263
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	3,251
Federal Home Loan Bank	301
Federal Emergency Relief Administration	183
Civil Works Administration	391

Central Statistical Board	12
National Recovery Review Board	23
Federal Alcohol Control Administration	86
Home Owners' Loan Corporation	12,527
Emergency Conservation Work	241,706
Total	284,149

Of the 241,706 total for Emergency Conservation Work, 217,689 represent an enrolled personnel and 4,628 a military personnel consisting of Army officers and enlisted men.

Employees of various regular establishments who are paid out of emergency funds are not included in the above figures.

MOUNTING COSTS

For the fiscal year up to May 2 the deficit amounted to $3,362,360,664. In that period total emergency expenditures were $3,279,798,172 and expenditures for the ordinary operations of the Government were $2,606,426,749.

In other words, it cost $673,371,433 more to finance the alphabetical agencies during the fiscal year thus far than it did to pay for the ordinary operations of the Government.

For the first 2 days of this month the cost of the ordinary operations is $34,621,152 less than the cost of the emergency organization.

The following table gives the emergency expenditures for the first 2 days of May and for the fiscal year to May 2:

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the only reason I have for presenting this matter to the Senate at the present time is that the sections in the sugar bill imposing the penalty as an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, were never discussed. They went through the Senate without any one knowing anything about them, so far as I know. The fact that a bill was brought in here under the conditions named in the editorial from which I read made me think that we ought to have more knowledge of conditions, and that we ought to discuss them liberally in order to know exactly what regimentation of agriculture means.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 56, it is proposed to strike out lines 16 to 21, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(b) Any person who (1) with intent to injure or defraud another willfully violates any rule or regulation under this act, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000; except that if such person is an exchange a fine not exceeding $100,000 may be imposed; or (2) without such intent willfully violates any rule or regulation of this act, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $500; except that if such person is an exchange a fine not exceeding $10,000 may be imposed.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, a reading of subsection (b) of section 30, on page 56 of the bill, discloses the language which is sought to be changed by the amendment just read at the desk.

It will be noted, upon an examination of the amendment, that I do not seek to change the penalty in any case where the violation is with intent to injure or defraud another. In that case—that is to say, where the violation is with intent to injure or defraud another—the penalty remains exactly as it is stated in the bill in subsection (b). In the case where the violation is made without such intent—that is to say, in case of casual violation or in case of incidental violation, where there is no wrongful intent—the penalty is cut down to such extent that the maximum will be $500 instead of $10,000, as provided in the bill.

In case the violation is by an exchange the penalty is cut down from $100,000, as provided in the bill, to $10,000 in the case of violations without intent to injure or defraud another.

The only purpose of the amendment, therefore, is to provide a reasonable and fair penalty instead of an excessive penalty for a violation made without intent to injure or defraud any other person.

I offer this amendment to meet some part of the criticism which I made earlier in the debate today. If I had my way, I think I should hesitate for a very long time before I would authorize the Commission to make rules and regulations which would be sustained by the force of indictment and trial and conviction and penalty in a court, but I assume, from what I know of the situation here, that I am not going to have my way in this respect. Therefore, I do not offer any amendment which has for its purpose striking out section (b) of subsection 30, but, as I say, I should merely attempt to modify that section so that it would operate less oppressively upon those who may commit a violation without the specific intent to injure or wrong another.

That explanation might suffice without any further statement, but in order that the RECORD may disclose something of the nature and effect and extent of the regulations to be promulgated by the proposed Commission, I am going to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a very brief time so that I may call attention to some few of the regulatory powers of the Commission and some few offenses that may be committed by those who are affected by this proposed law, and to call attention specifically to the fact that the regulations established are not limited in their application to stock exchanges, nor to members of stock exchanges, nor to brokers, nor to dealers, nor to any other persons who have a professional relationship with trading in securities; but the regulations affect the public very generally and, of course, from time to time will affect a very large number of persons, thousands upon thousands of persons, who are not professional traders in the stock market, and who, therefore, may not have knowledge of the regulations, who may have no appreciation of the regulations, and may not even know that the act which is being committed is in violation of the regulations.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before the Senator enters upon that phase of the subject, will he yield to a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FESS. The problem here is to give regulatory power to a commission under regulations which may be established by such commission, it not now being in our conception what the regulations may provide. If we want to make the regulations effective by appending a penalty, it seems the only thing that is open for us is to give authority to the Commission to make regulations and then allow the Commission to assess the penalty.

Mr. STEIWER. No; we do not do that. We create a crime in cases where the act is done in violation of the regulations.

Mr. FESS. That is so, although we do not know what the regulation is?

Mr. STEIWER. The result would be a prosecution in court but not the assessment of a penalty by the Commission.

Mr. FESS. But what the regulation is that may be violated is in the power of the Commission alone to prescribe.

Mr. STEIWER. Exactly.

Mr. FESS. That seems very offensive to our views of criminal law. Is there any way whereby we can avoid that? It seems to me the object might be reached in some other way than by delegating to a commmission, which has not as yet been appointed, power to make regulations and then attaching a penalty for violation of those regulations when nobody knows what they may be. Is there not some other way to reach the end desired?

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know what it is. The whole structure of this bill is such that acts are to become criminal offenses or not, depending upon the rules and regulations made by the Commission. If we let this structure stand—and I assume we have not sufficient power here to change the structure at this late hour—in very necessity there must be penalties fixed for violation of the rules and regulations; and I think all we can possibly accomplish is to see to it, if the Senate will take that view, that the penalty shall not be excessive or unreasonable, and shall not be so large as to operate oppressively and restrictively and to scare people away from the law and do an evil at the same time we are trying to do a great good for the people.

Mr. FESS. That will be some relief, but it still does not avoid the principle which seems to me is very unwise.

Mr. STEIWER. No; it does not avoid the principle, but I assume we will have difficulty getting this amendment agreed to; and certainly if it were a more far-reaching amendment we would be wasting our time in discussing it.

Mr. President, I now want to run briefly through the bill and call attention to some matters to illustrate what I mean when I say that we clothe the Commission with power to issue rules and regulations that affect a very large number of nonprofessional people, citizens of the country who have relations, direct or remote, with the stock exchanges or with the over-the-counter market, people who are not professional traders in any sense, and who in a very great number of cases would not have knowledge of the rules or the regulations or the amendments or changes made in those rules and regulations and would not know how to interpret them. They very readily might violate the rules by the willful performance of an act which they would learn to their sorrow afterward was an act inhibited by the rules and regulations of the Commission.

On page 9, subsection (b) of subsection (4) we find that—

(b) The Commission shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary (1) for the execution of the functions vested in it by this act, including the classification of issuers, securities, exchanges, and other persons or matters subject to regulations under this act—

And so forth.

It is obvious that the rules and regulations provided at this point in the bill may have very general application. I have not attempted to ascertain just how many people might be affected directly by those rules or regulations, but it readily might be that hundreds of thousands of citizens of this country would be affected, in one way or another, by the rules and regulations made under that authority.

On page 12, in section 6, we find that the Commission, in connection with the registration of national security exchanges, may require—

(2) Such data as to its organization, rules of procedure, and membership, and such other information as the Commission may by rules and regulations require as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

So here, Mr. President, there is another great number of persons who may be actually or ultimately affected by the rules of the Commission, that great group of people who are designated as investors.

On page 14, in section 7, we find with respect to margin requirements that a crime is declared in the sense that it is unlawful for a member of a national securities exchange, or any broker or dealer, under certain circumstances—

To extend or maintain credit or to arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit to or for any customer in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe.

Thus those who are creditors lending money in connection with stock-market transactions and those who are customers of the brokers and dealers are added to the great category of those affected by the rules and regulations of the Commission.

On page 15 we find a similar provision. There it is provided that it is unlawful to extend or maintain credit under certain conditions in violation of the rules or regulations of the Commission.

Under the head of "Margin Requirements", I think, Mr. President, I passed over two or three places that might have been in point and pertinent to the question of margin requirements and the number of persons who might be affected by the rules and regulations which are to be made upon that subject. I shall not, however, go back to that.

On page 15 at the place to which I intended to call attention we find a provision constituting it a crime for certain acts done—

In contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe to prevent the excessive use of credit for the purchasing, selling, or carrying of or trading in securities—

And so forth.

That has a further effect upon those who might extend credit under one guise or another for trading upon the exchanges.

On page 24, in two places, there are very important requirements under the general head "Regulation of the Use of Manipulative and Deceptive Devices."

On the same page we find that it is unlawful "to effect a short sale or to use or employ a stop-loss order" under certain conditions, if done "in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe."

We also find, following that language on the same page, that it is unlawful—

To employ * * * any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance which the Commission may by its rules and regulations declare to be detrimental to the interests of investors.

All through the bill there may be multiplied the instances, nearly 30 in number altogether, I believe, which clothe the Commission with power to make rules and regulations which, as I have said, are applicable not alone to stock exchanges, to over-the-counter markets, and members and brokers and dealers, but are applicable to the public at large and to all who may trade in securities, to all owners and holders of stock, to corporations, to their officials, to the whole business world of the United States.

I wish to reiterate that although the professional traders may find it very easy to live within the rules and regulations, because they know what they are and therefore may avoid the violation of any of the rules and regulations, the nonprofessional citizenship of the country cannot have that knowledge and in very many cases will unwittingly commit some act which they will find to their sorrow is a violation of some rule or regulation. If a citizen commits an act with intent to defraud he is not entitled to sympathy. He may be held to the law and penalized in accordance with the severe penalties of the law. I make no plea for him. But if a person commits such an act without intention to defraud or injure another, I say the least we can do is to differentiate by the use of proper language, so that the people shall not be afraid of the bill and shall not be afraid that the unwitting performance of some act will be a violation of a rule or regulation.

Mr. President, I hope those who are most earnestly sponsoring the bill will accept the amendment. It will not remove from the Government any authority that may be required. It will not weaken the hands of the commission in any way at all, but will make the measure more palatable to the nonprofessional traders and to those who may be injured by subsection (b) of section 6. I hope the amendment may be accepted and agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Kean	Reynolds

Copeland	Hebert	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I am very sorry that I cannot agree with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. I think his amendment tends to confuse and complicate the provisions of the bill. The provision in the bill to which it relates is simple and easily understood, and is adequate. I think we ought to stand by that provision.

The Senator from Oregon undertakes to divide the offenses into two classes, those where there is an actual intent to injure or defraud, and those where there is an absence of such intent. There are many regulations in the bill which have no reference to and do not involve actual fraud or intent to injure. In case of a prosecution it would be very difficult to prove actual intent to defraud or injure. When a regulation is promulgated which is intended to prevent actual fraud or injury, simple proof of the violation of the regulation ought to be sufficient without being compelled to prove intent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment does not eliminate the equation of willful violation, but provides that if a man or an exchange shall willfully violate the law or any regulation with the intention of injuring some person, he or it shall be punished by a maximum fine of not more than a certain amount, but if he violates the law without intending to injure any particular person he shall be subject to a much less fine.

As a matter of principle, it is always presumed that every man who willfully violates the law is charged with knowledge of what it may do to anybody else, although he may have no particular person in mind as the object of his intended damage or injury. To adopt the amendment would make it almost impossible to prove, although a man violates the law, that he intended any injury against any particular person.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is true, too.

I shall not prolong the discussion further than to say that while there may be cases of an innocent violation of the regulations, or a harmless violation of the regulations, there may be other cases of malicious, willful, knowing violation of the regulations; and, of course, there may be a variation of the penalty in the two cases. That, however, is a matter for the courts to determine. The courts everywhere, all over the land must take into consideration the facts and circumstances of each case. If a court finds that there has been an innocent violation of the regulations, of course it will not impose the maximum $10,000 fine. On the other hand, if a court finds that the circumstances are such as to warrant a heavier penalty, it will impose a heavier penalty. We must leave some leeway for the courts. The maximum fine is $10,000. The bill provides that it shall not be more than $10,000. The exact amount that it shall be, from $1 up, is for the court to determine upon the basis of the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

I think we ought to stand by the original text; and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate in respect to the pending amendment; but I wish to make one or two observations in answer to the comments made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

I agree thoroughly with the statement made by the Senator from Florida that the amendment distinguishes between offenses committed with intent to injure or defraud, and offenses which were committed without such intent. That is the whole purpose of the amendment. If the intent is to injure or defraud the penalty up to $10,000 may still be invoked. If the offense is without such intent the maximum penalty is $500.

Referring to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I think he misconceives the situation, at least partially. The Senator stated, as I understood him, that it would be difficult to administer the law under the amendment because the Government could not name or prove the identity of the person to be defrauded in some classes of offenses under the measure.

Of course, it is true that some classes of offenses under this measure are offenses against the general public. They are not offenses against individual persons. Therefore the indictment in those cases could not allege that the act had been done with intent to injure or defraud John Smith or someone else, as the case might be. It is always possible, however, to allege in an indictment that the offense was committed with intent to injure or to defraud other persons or innumerable persons, or the indictment may be phrased in the conventional language, alleging that the thing was done with intent to injure persons "who are to the grand jury unknown." That is conventional practice, everywhere resorted to in both Federal and State courts.

So I cannot conceive that there is anything in the proposal I have made, merely to protect those who might unwittingly violate a regulation, which would make it difficult for the United States to proceed against wrongdoers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not so much a question of what may be alleged in an indictment. Of course, it may be alleged in an indictment that a man, or a stock exchange, or a group of persons, had violated this law willfully, with intent to injure numerous unknown persons; but when the case comes to be tried it is necessary to do something more than simply to read the indictment. It is necessary to prove in some way that the willful violation of the law was intentional and that it was intended that it should injure somebody.

It would be easy for any defendant, under any form of indictment, to come in and say, "I did willfully violate this law. I knew I was violating it. I did it intentionally"—which means willfully—"but I did not intend to injure anybody." Under such circumstances, how could the Government prove that what he was saying was not the truth?

Mr. STEIWER. If the circumstances disclosed that the nature of the act was such as to injure other persons, the Government's case would be established almost before it started, because everywhere it is presumed that the defendant intended the normal consequences of his act. The Senator himself very well knows that in every jurisdiction, laws will be found similar in effect to the provision to which we are referring here, and they do not occasion any trouble in administration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], and vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I do not know how he would vote if present. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STEPHENS (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. On this question I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALCOTT (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], who is detained from the Senate by illness. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I must withdraw my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Has that Senator voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. METCALF. Then I have to withdraw my vote.

Mr. HEBERT. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBIN-

SON]. I am advised that if the Senator from Pennsylvania were present and voting he would vote "yea" on this question, and if the Senator from Arkansas were present and voting he would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] are unavoidably absent. If the Senator from West Virginia were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is detained in a committee meeting. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERTON. My colleague [Mr. LONG] is necessarily absent attending to departmental matters.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 44, as follows:

So Mr. STEIWER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "or any rule or regulation thereunder", and in line 18, after the word "act", to insert a comma and the following words, "or who willfully and knowingly, personally, or through another, makes any statement in any application, report, or document required to be filed with the commissioner under any rule or regulation under this act, which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading in any material respect."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the amendment will carry out the intention of the committee. The committee determined, I think unanimously, that the penalty of imprisonment should apply only to failure to comply with a provision of the act, and that for failure to comply with a rule or regulation of the commission the punishment should be a fine. However, the draftsmen, in making the changes throughout the bill, failed to correct section 30, and the purpose of the amendment is simply to carry out the intent of the committee, and make this section accord with the rest of the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator the significance of the part of the amendment which would strike out the words "or any rule or regulation thereunder"?

Mr. BYRNES. The section provides imprisonment, and, as the Senator will remember, it was determined that the punishment of imprisonment should not apply to a person who was guilty of violating a rule or regulation of the commission. The language is replaced in the next section, which does apply to a violation of any rule or regulation of the commission, or any report required by the commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The amendment is merely for the purpose of correcting a typographical error.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "accounts" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "accountants."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, it is proposed to strike out lines 11 to 13, both inclusive.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the subsection which would be stricken if this amendment were agreed to reads as follows:

(k) any further financial statements which the commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

This language is in section 12, which relates to the registration requirements for securities.

Earlier in the debate I discussed some phases of this section, and argued that the section would be restrictive and harmful in imposing requirements upon corporations which it would be difficult for them to meet in the registration of their securities, and which in some respects they would be unwilling to meet, and concerning which great trouble would follow.

I believe thoroughly that much of the so-called "fear" or "fright" on the part of corporations comes from their unwillingness to submit to the requirements of some portions of this section. I shall not again refer to the matters which I discussed earlier in the day, as they are not related to this amendment; but I call attention to the fact that in a colloquy with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] we discussed certain provisions on page 29, and I stated that although I thought it would be better if those provisions were not in the bill, I had no particular objection to the provisions to which he called my attention.

In the main, I think they are proper enough provisions. They are requirements which ought to be met. They provide information which the investors ought to have if this is to be a "blue-sky" law, and if we are to undertake through Federal legislation to exact of the corporations which sell their securities upon the exchanges detailed information concerning their affairs. I made the point, however—and this brings me to the amendment I have just offered—that whatever may be our attitude with respect to the provisions of this section, there is inherent evil in the section, in that it leads to uncertainty and breeds the distrust which comes from uncertainty.

To my mind, one great objection to the provision on page 28, which is a part of this section, and which deals with the requirement of an agreement that the issuer shall comply with certain rules and regulations to be made in the future, is that such an agreement introduces a very substantial degree of uncertainty into the minds of those responsible for conducting the affairs of the corporation. They cannot know in advance just what those requirements may be.

The language on page 29, in which there are lists of the particulars in which the information may be required, in my judgment helps the provision. That language does not hurt the provision, as some Senators may have assumed from questions propounded earlier in the day. I think it helps it, because at least it contains definite recitals of the categories of information which the commission may, by rule or regulation, exact of the corporation.

After we had completed the preparation of this language, after the drafting of the bill, and the members of the committee had exhausted their imaginative faculties and their ingenuity, and had listed everything they could think of, they added at the end of the list the language with which this amendment is concerned. At the end of the list they added that the corporation should be required to furnish—any further financial statements which the commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

Mr. President, inasmuch as the commission is a continuing body, with continuing power to make regulations, and continuing power to change its regulations, and continuing power to unmake today the regulation of yesterday, there will be no way in the world for any executive of any corporation to know what will be required of it if we leave in the law this basket clause which catches everything. It seems to me that the law will be just as effective without this general catch-all language. We can require, if there is anything further that we want to require, by express enactment. If there is anything which ought to be added to the category of information to be furnished, let it be offered here and accepted if the Senate agrees with the wisdom of adding it to the measure.

I see no objection to the specification of anything which in our judgment ought to be added. I do see objection, however, to the requirement of further financial statements, unknown and indefinite, when we deal with a commission that has power practically unknown and entirely indefinite, so far as this question is concerned, and when by the inclusion of this language we introduce into the meaning of the law a very great uncertainty.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the language as it is now written in the bill the only financial statements which the commission could require would be those provided for in subsections (I) and (J); that is, balance sheets for not more than 3 years in subsection (I), and profit and loss statements in subsection (J). Those are the only two subsections which refer to financial statements of any kind.

On page 29 reference is made to officers and directors; reference is made to the terms for which securities may be issued, and provision is made for enumeration of the officers and directors who get over $20,000 a year, bonus and profit-sharing arrangements, and so on. Those, however, are not financial statements. They do not give any adequate information with reference to the financial condition of the company. I do not think subsections (I) and (J) are sufficiently comprehensive to give a prospective investor a real picture of the financial condition of the company.

If the language should be stricken out as proposed by the amendment, the commission would have no power to require any information except that which is set out simply in a balance sheet and in a profit-and-loss statement covering a period of 3 years. If the Senator's amendment should be adopted, it would take away from the commission the power to obtain any additional information which might be essential in order to guide investors.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky indicate what further financial statements he would require of the corporation?

Mr. BARKLEY. It all depends on circumstances. The growth of the business, its development, its market, the value of its business, are matters not necessarily included in a balance sheet of income and outgo for any particular year or even in profit-and-loss statements. There are many financial items connected with the company which are not necessarily included in subsections (I) and (J). I could not, of course, and I doubt if the commission could, outline just what sort of financial information it might desire in order to give a prospective investor some assurance that the company in which he proposed to buy stock was sound. It would depend on circumstances. Each company would be different. The commission could not adopt an iron-clad rule, I imagine, with reference to all the concerns in the United States. So it would be impossible for anyone off-hand to indicate what sort of financial reports would be required under this basket clause, but it would give the commission power to require such financial statements as would give the investing public the benefit of knowledge concerning the soundness of the corporation as a whole.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, in answer to the suggestion just made, let me call attention to the language of the same section in lines 8 and 9 of page 29. The commission is there required, among other things, to be furnished information with respect to "the organization, financial structure, nature, and operations of the business."

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. "Financial structure" might mean simply the amount of stock outstanding, whether it was preferred or common, whether there was some A or B stock, whether it had par value or no par value. That would be included, probably, in a financial statement; but it would not necessarily include all the information with reference to the financial condition of the company.

Mr. STEIWER. I asked the Senator if he could state what might be required under subsection (K), to which we are now referring, and he made me the same kind of answer which has been made before by two or three Senators to whom I directed the same inquiry. I have not yet been able to find anyone who can name what it is that ought to be furnished under this subsection. I do not think the sponsors or the draftsmen of the bill were able to outline what it was they had in mind.

I do not know that any damage will be done to any corporation by this requirement, except that it introduces into the bill a degree of uncertainty which comes from boundless power and indefinite power which is not necessary in order to enable the commission to carry out the requirements of the proposed law.

Mr. COUZENS and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I think I can answer what might be required under that section. After the commission had received the profit-and-loss statement for not more than three preceding years, and the balance-sheet for not more than three preceding years, there might appear in the press in the middle of the year a statement that the concern had made a great profit, that it had discovered an oil well, or that some tipsters were out with the statement that the stock was going to rise, and the commission might desire authority to inquire of the corporation as to the accuracy of any such statement.

I cannot see what harm this requirement will do. I do not think the measure will be administered by robots. I hope those administering it will have some intelligence and some imagination; and if they have authority to ask for information under this so-called "basket" clause, and if they ought to have the information, I think it will not do any harm to ask for it.

Mr. STEIWER. That is registration information. The things that happen subsequently are not embraced under this provision. If something happens subsequently, there is another provision in the bill to enable the commission to obtain the information desired.

Mr. COUZENS. Very well; we will discard that——

Mr. STEIWER. And make another argument?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and make another argument. The same question arises every time some industry expresses a fear or quivers an eyelash. They get alarmed about business being affected and about their being harrassed and embarrassed. Viewing the situation as I do, I believe there is no justification for such a conclusion.

Assume that, when the registration application is filed, they have all the information required in (I) and (J) and that some of the officials, as in the Laclede Gas Co. case, pick up a newspaper and find there is something omitted from the financial report filed and then the commission desires to request more information under subsection (K), what objection is there to that?

Mr. STEIWER. Cannot the Senator see that after the security is registered if something happens of the kind he mentions the commission could not resort to this power to get the additional information? There is another section of the bill which will enable the commission to get whatever information it needs with respect to developments of that kind. I have no objection to it. But why place in the bill this boundless and unlimited power in the commission? If all the provisions were dropped except the first one and it merely said (A) the organization, financial structure, and so forth, and then said (K) any further financial statement, we would be in a peculiar position if we enacted the bill in that form. It destroys all the boundaries prescribed and all the definitions provided, because it gives to the commission the unlimited power to go as much further as they may want to go. That is the thing of which corporations are afraid. They do not know to what this may lead.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not share their fear at all.

Mr. STEIWER. Unless the Senator is going to list a stock it does not make any difference whether he and I approve of it or not. The corporations are the ones that are acting and they are the ones that are afraid of it. We can enact a law that will be effective without offending them, without bringing upon them a feeling of fright and fear. What is the use of writing into the law general requirements which may result in rules and regulations hurtful to business or expensive of operation? What is to be gained by it? We will have a sound structure without such a provision. That is the reason why I move to strike it out.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. What has the Senator in mind with reference to the financial statements which a corporation would refuse to give to the public when it seeks to sell securities?

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know that any corporation engaged in legitimate business would refuse to give any financial information to the commission. A little while ago a Senator referred to the value to the investor, but we do not know, of course, whether the information given would ever be published or whether it would ever be available to the investor.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator asked the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] what kind of a financial statement would be required. He thinks some corporation would be frightened by the possibility of being asked to furnish such a statement. I ask the Senator from Oregon, if the corporation is satisfied to have the commission fix the margin without knowing whether the margin will be fixed at a different figure this year from last year, if the Senator is willing to place discretion in the commission so to fix the margin, why should he be unwilling to allow the Commission to determine whether some further financial statement shall be required?

Mr. STEIWER. Does the Senator infer that the corporations of the country have consented to the margin requirement of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. I am asking the Senator from Oregon. I cannot speak for the corporations of the country and I do not believe the Senator from Oregon can do so. The Senator does not conceive of a single financial statement they would refuse to render, does he?

Mr. STEIWER. I think the stock exchanges were disposed to accept the margin provisions of the bill, but so far as I know we have no way of consulting the industries of the country in that respect.

Mr. BARKLEY. They were invited to come before the committee, but did not do so.

Mr. BYRNES. If they are not frightened by the power to fix margins, they ought not to be frightened by the power to ask for a financial statement.

Mr. STEIWER. It is not that alone. It is the conferring upon the commission of the power to make rules and regulations, and what would frighten the corporations would be the rules and regulations after they were made.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator's amendment proposes to strike out (k), which simply provides that the commission may require "any further financial statements which the commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors." The Senator says he cannot conceive of a corporation which would refuse to furnish a financial statement to the commission which the commission deemed necessary for the protection of investors.

Mr. STEIWER. It is not subsection (K) which the corporations fear.

Mr. BYRNES. That is what the Senator is moving to strike out.

Mr. STEIWER. It is the rule or regulation which would emanate from the commission under the authority of the provision, and we do not know what that rule or regulation may be. If this were as definite as are other subsections, then we would have some idea what kind of a rule or regulation might emanate under that authority; but we do not know what the rule or regulation may be. It may relate to the financial business of the corporation or it may relate to something else.

Mr. BYRNES. All the section provides is for the filing of—

> Such information, in such detail, as to the issuer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the issuer as the commission by rules and regulations require, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, in respect of the following.

It enumerates certain things and then provides:

> (K) Tny further financial statements which the commission may deem necessary or appropriate for the protection of investors.

The Senator cannot conceive of any financial statement that an honestly managed corporation would hesitate to give the commission when it was required for the protection of investors, and particularly in view of the further provision in the bill that the commission may not make it public if the corporation requests it not to be made public. The corporation may have a hearing upon it and it may not be made public then unless an order shall be issued. If they think they are hurt, they will be protected. I do not think there is anything real to fear. I think it is entirely imaginary on the part of the Senator. I really believe the corporations do not fear it.

Mr. STEIWER. Merely because the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Oregon cannot imagine what type of financial statement may be required is no indication that the commission would not have far greater and better imagination.

Mr. BYRNES. The corporation can object to it being made public.

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; and have a lawsuit on their hands.

Mr. BYRNES. It may have a hearing before the commission in private and the commission must then determine the question. If the corporation is aggrieved it can appeal to the courts. What more could the Senator want?

Mr. STEIWER. The corporation in the first place may find it utterly impossible to furnish the information and be obliged to go to a hearing and to appeal to the commission and then appeal to the court for relief.

Mr. BYRNES. If the corporation cannot furnish the information, then there is no information for which the commission can properly ask.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not believe the corporations can furnish the information required in (J). Has it ever occurred to the Senator that the requirement there permits the commission to require an audit or balance sheet certified, under the rules of the commission, by an independent public accountant, for the last preceding 3 years? How is a corporation going to meet that requirement, for instance? What if they did not have the audit by a certified public accountant? Can they go back 3 years and make the audit? Can they count the cash? The cash is counted today, and the audit is made today, and not 3 years ago. How is it possible to comply with subsections (I) and (J)?

If we pass a bill with so little consideration for the practical affairs of a corporation, what can the corporations expect of a general basket clause such as subsection (K), which is intended to enable the commission to get information pretty much as it may desire?

Mr. BYRNES. Of course the Senator has not moved to strike out subsection (I).

Mr. STEIWER. I think it ought to be amended.

Mr. BYRNES. All that subsection provides for is—balance sheets for not more than the 3 preceding fiscal years, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants—

Would the Senator want to attempt to sell to the American people securities when there has been no audit, or when there has not been an audit certified by a public accountant?

Mr. STEIWER. Not when there has been no audit. They might have an audit by their own accountant. This provision permits the commission to require an audit by an independent public accountant. The independent public accountant can do nothing at all except to go back and review the audit of the company's own accountant. How can the independent public accountant go back and make an audit when the inventories are all changed, and the cash balance is different? How is it possible?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, getting back to subsection (K), which the Senator is trying to strike out, one of the things which the company might report, not covered in any of the other subsections, would be whether they had given away a million dollars' worth of their stock, or any other amount of it, while they were selling stock to others. That is a financial statement which would be interesting.

Mr. STEIWER. That, I should think, would be covered under subsections (A) and (F), and possibly by other provisions of the bill. These things are not necessary for a business of that kind. If they were, I should not have offered the amendment. Every abuse of the kind named by Senators who are striving to keep this language in the bill is an abuse which can be met and dealt with effectually by the provisions of the bill. For that reason, while I shall not detain the Senate further, it would be better to omit this language from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. HASTINGS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before of my general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I made on a previous roll call concerning my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. STEPHENS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before of my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." Therefore, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COPELAND. Upon this question I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If the Senator from Pennsylvania were present he would vote "yea" on this question, and if the Senator from Arkansas were present he would vote "nay."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

I also wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], and the general pair of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

I have previously announced my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and abstained from voting. I now find that I am able to transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I do so, and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN and Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily detained; and that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is absent because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 50, as follows:

RECESS

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 9, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 8, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Charles Noyes Tyndell, S.T.D., rector of St. Peter's Church, Niagara Falls, N.Y., offered the following prayer:

O eternal God, through whose mighty power our fathers won their liberties of old, grant, we beseech Thee, to the representatives of Thy people the grace to learn what Thou wouldst ordain for their guidance in the maintenance of those liberties and such other institutions as in Thy wisdom Thou hast vouchsafed to place in our keeping.

We render unto Thee high praise and hearty thanks, albeit in utmost humility, that Thou hast granted us the privileged responsibility of caring for those institutions and peoples which Thou hast guided to our land.

May it be Thy blessed will, therefore, to direct and prosper the consultations of our Congress assembled toward the advancement of Thy glory, the abiding good of Thy universal church, the safety, honor, and welfare of Thy people; and that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavors upon the best and surest foundations, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations.

These, and all other necessaries for them, for us, and all Thy people, we humbly beg in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, our most blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MINNESOTA ASKS JUSTICE

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the steel code and the old system of basing have driven out more than 50 percent of all small fabricating industries in the State of Minnesota during the last 14 years, is the charge of Otto Swanstrom, president of the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co., of Duluth, whose application for relief from the strangling effects of Chicago plus has been before the National Recovery Review Board for the past 6 weeks.

This is no theoretical or academic problem. There is not a shred of partisan politics in it. It is a problem affecting profoundly the industrial life of my State.

The steel code, as it actually operates today, subjects Minnesota steel-using industries to all the destructive discrimination of the old Pittsburgh plus. The only difference is that Chicago and not Pittsburgh is now the basing point for price fixing on merchant bars and billets sold for fabrication in Minnesota. There is no difference at all in the vicious results to Minnesota industries.

Since Congress convened in January, the problem has been presented to the President, the Senate, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Recovery Review Board, and to various steel-producing, using, or distributing companies, and to code authorities.

There is no variance of opinion as to the need for action, although selfish competing companies in favored localities seek to delay it. The task before us is to get effective action now. Since the National Industrial Recovery Act authorizes the President to direct code modifications, his helpful intercession can produce best this immediate remedial action.

To him, therefore, Minnesota appeals for help.

AN ALLEGED ANSWER TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Pursuant to a Senate resolution adopted February 2 last, the Federal Trade Commission made a careful study of the results of the basing-point practice which operates in Minnesota as Chicago plus, and on March 19 reported comprehensive findings to the Senate.

Its report constitutes conclusive proof that the evil of which Minnesota industry complains, and which is driving steel fabricating plants from the Twin Cities to other States, does exist, requiring immediate attention and prompt Executive action.

The sole reply to the Federal Trade Commission's report, and the sole attack upon it thus far, consists of a pamphlet issued by the American Iron and Steel Institute and mailed to Members of Congress in envelops bearing the institute's return card.

This pamphlet is composed of reprints of 33 telegrams or letters purporting to have been sent to the President, some Senator, or a Federal commission or official by an alleged "small company" in praise of the steel code and its provisions, or in criticism of the Federal Trade Commission's report.

The pamphlet is captioned "The small company speaks for itself—an answer to the Federal Trade Commission's attack on the steel code."

In its introductory statement the American Iron and Steel Institute says in paragraph 3:

> Following publication of the report, scores of telegrams and letters to the President, Members of Congress, and the Federal Trade Commission poured into Washington from small iron and steel companies in all sections of the country. These messages protested the Commission's findings and without exception defended the steel code as a great help, not a detriment to the small companies.

This statement is a laughable combination of nonsense and fiction.

So far as the telegrams and letters inspired by the institute are concerned, it may be true. So far as my office, or the office of any Congressman with whom I have talked is concerned, it is untrue. No letter or telegram commending the steel code has come to me from any source, except the printed statements of the American Iron and Steel Institute itself. No communication of any kind or form criticizing the Federal Trade Commission, or its report, has come to me from any individual, firm, corporation, or agency, other than the institute itself.

Minnesota is a great steel-using State and an important section of the country. If letters and telegrams of the kind the institute quotes have poured in on Members of Congress, and they have been of the character the institute has used in its pamphlet, I have been blessed indeed by their failure to arrive. Letters and telegrams have come to me concerning this problem. With the sole exception of the piece of propaganda by the institute, all have supported the Federal Trade Commission's findings and attacked the steel code. Clearly, therefore, if a deluge of telegrams and letters bearing on the problem and unanimous in support of the code and against the Federal Trade Commission's findings has poured in on Washington, and the institute has had knowledge of the telegrams and letters and the contents thereof, to a point where it can say with authority, "Those messages protested the Commission's findings and without exception defended the code as a great help", and further can name the recipients of said "scores of telegrams and letters", it must have written the telegrams and letters, inspired them, or initiated or participated in the propaganda campaign which it cites. No other conclusion is possible and the whole scheme is too transparent to require further comment. If this typifies the best generalship of the institute, it should hire a "brain truster" from the "little red house in Georgetown." Those boys think.

Not only is the purpose of the institute entertainingly obvious but the telegrams and letters which it quotes are complete and convincing refutation of the institute's argument and proof that the Federal Trade Commission was right.

Minnesota complains that Chicago plus puts an unbearable handicap on Minnesota industries, which fabricate their products from merchant bars and billets, by compelling them to pay therefor the Chicago price plus the all-rail freight charge from Chicago to the Minnesota factory—in spite of the fact that the steel has never been in Chicago, is not shipped from Chicago, but is produced at Duluth, a few blocks away from the Duluth plant buying it and less than half as far from the Twin Cities as Chicago; in spite, also, of the further fact that if the steel were really shipped from Chicago it could be shipped by water to Duluth over the Great Lakes and to the Twin Cities via the river.

Minnesota steel-fabricating industries compete with similar plants in every part of the United States. When the basing-point practice compels them to pay a fictitious freight charge for a service that is imaginary—that is, an all-rail freight charge on raw material from Chicago to Duluth, Minneapolis, and St. Paul, in spite of the fact that said raw material is Minnesota produced and has never been outside the State—and on top of that the law of supply and demand compels them to pay an actual freight charge on their finished product back to Chicago and from there on to the point of destination, it means that the eastern manufacturer has a trade advantage of the $6.60 per ton fictitious charge on raw material and more than $6.60 per ton charge on finished product for actual freight service, a trade advantage therefore in cost of production ranging from $13.20 per ton upward.

It is this handicap which has driven so many steel-fabricating plants out of Minnesota and compelled so many others to shut down. This handicap is due to the basing-point practice. The steel code prevents any compensating-price allowance. Therefore, Minnesota asks of the President adequate modification of the steel code.

The American Iron and Steel Institute, instead of admitting frankly that the abuse exists, and cooperating to correct it, has instituted a campaign to prove that there is no abuse, and in support of its position presents telegrams and letters from a group of small companies which allege that the steel code has not harmed them.

There is neither logic nor sense in the argument.

Because a Maryland company does not suffer under the steel code is no proof that Minnesota industries do not suffer from Chicago plus. On the same line of reasoning it can be said with equal logic, or lack of it, that because one man has pneumonia and a second has not, the first man cannot be sick; or, if one man has a broken leg and a second is sound and well, the first man does not need a doctor. That is not argument. That is foolishness.

Also it is a matter of easily proved fact that the small companies emitting the joyful expressions of approval of the steel code, which the institute has quoted in its pamphlet, are themselves the beneficiaries of the very evil of which Minnesota competitors are the victims. Naturally the beneficiaries are happy. They are getting rich as a result of precisely the price discrimination which has forced Minnesota manufacturers into insolvency.

It is easy to submit the proof.

HOW INSTITUTE REFUTES ITS OWN ARGUMENT

From data given in the American Iron and Steel Works Directory, and through the courtesy of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is possible to analyze briefly the effects of the steel code upon the small companies, whose telegrams or letters are presented by the institute in its pamphlet attacking the Federal Trade Commission.

The first reprint is on page 2 of the pamphlet, and presents a telegram of March 21, 1934, from the Eastern Rolling Mill Co., of Baltimore, Md., to Senator BORAH. The telegram states that the company is "in the sheet-steel business." On page 32 of the steel code I find that basing points on "sheets" are Pittsburgh, Gary, Birmingham, and Pacific coast points. Consequently the price on sheet steel at the Eastern Rolling Mill Co.'s plant at Baltimore is Pittsburgh plus, or the price at Pittsburgh, the basing point nearest Baltimore, plus the all-rail freight charge from Pittsburgh to Baltimore. This freight charge is for an unrendered service, because the metal is produced at Baltimore and not Pittsburgh; in fact sheets are not produced at Pittsburgh at all, and addition of the freight charge, which the Interstate Commerce Commission advises me is 27 cents per hundred on steel bars in carload lots, means that the steel code gives this enthusiastic Baltimore company an artificial, arbitrary cost of production advantage of $5.40 a ton. Its Baltimore customers must pay this charge. With this advantage it can go outside of Baltimore if it wishes and undersell its competitors. Naturally it is happy. Naturally it will send Senator BORAH a telegram eulogizing the steel code. Because of this discrimination of the basing-point system this Baltimore company prospers while Minnesota companies strangle.

On page 4 of the institute's pamphlet appears under the title, "Small Companies Fairly Treated", copy of a telegram to the President from Rome Strip Steel Co., Inc., of Rome, N.Y., expressing satisfaction with the code and its management. The Rome Strip Steel Co. produces cold-rolled strip steel. The nearest basing points are Pittsburgh, Pa., and Worcester, Mass. The carload-lot rate from Worcester to Rome is $0.245 per 100, and from Pittsburgh to Rome $0.32 per 100. Consequently, with Worcester and Pittsburgh the basing points, the Rome Strip Steel Co., Inc., is able to charge its customers at Rome $4.90 per ton above the Worcester price and $6.40 per ton above the Pittsburgh price. It is not surprising that the company is pleased with the basing-point system, which permits it to make this extra charge for an unrendered freight service.

On page 9 of the pamphlet, under the title "Free from Unjust Discrimination", is copy of a telegram from the Sharon Steel Hoop Co., of Sharon, Pa., to Senator BORAH, saying that the company has found "operation of code to be equitable and free from unjust discrimination." The Sharon Steel Hoop Co. produces strip steel; its basing point is Pittsburgh, and the company, under the code, is permitted to charge $2.40 per ton for the imaginary freight service between Pittsburgh and Sharon. Since it is the beneficiary of this discrimination, it naturally deems said discrimination entirely equitable.

On page 11 is quoted an alleged telegram from Griffin Manufacturing Co., of Erie, Pa. This company says, according to the reprint of the telegram, that it is not oppressed and that its position is quite satisfactory. According to the directory, the Griffin Manufacturing Co. produces cold-rolled strip steel. Page 32 of the code gives the basing points on cold-rolled strip steel as Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Worcester. Cleveland seems to be the nearest basing point to Erie, and under the plus provision, Griffin Manufacturing Co. is able to charge its customers the Cleveland price, plus $3.05 a ton. With this discrimination in its favor, the company naturally is willing to bear testimony that it is "not oppressed or eliminated."

On page 12 the institute quotes from a communication by the Mahoning Valley Steel Co., of Niles, Ohio, to Senator BORAH. This company produces black sheets, on which the basing point is Pittsburgh. Under the code provision, this company is able to charge the Pittsburgh price plus $2.50 per ton velvet for fictitious freight service. Without comment upon this discrimination in its favor, the company advises the Senator:

Feel you do not understand conditions and that steel code should be left alone.

On page 13 the institute quotes with approval a telegram to Senator BORAH from the Philadelphia Steel & Wire Corporation, of Philadelphia. The title given the telegram is "Been most fair." This company's product is wire. Its basing point is Pittsburgh. Under the code, it is allowed to charge the Pittsburgh price, plus $5.80 per ton for fictitious freight service. Is it strange that the company now naively wires the Senator, "The code has not oppressed us in any manner but has rather been a very decided help"? Five dollars and eighty cents per ton velvet over western competitors should be a decided help to any company.

On the next page is a testimonial from Blair Strip Steel Co., of Newcastle, Pa. As its name suggests this company's product is strip steel. Its basing point is Pittsburgh, and the plus permits it to charge $1.85 per ton above the Pittsburgh price. Its statement that these basing-point provisions "have enabled us to operate profitably" is unquestionably true.

Turning to page 15 of the pamphlet we find the institute quoting a telegram, purporting to be from the Reeves Manufacturing Co., of Dover, Ohio, to the President. The attractive title given the telegram is "Saved from Utter Ruin." This company produces sheets. Its basing point is Pittsburgh. The carload lot rate is 16 cents per 100, and the company therefor charges its customers the Pittsburgh price, plus the fictitious freight charge of $3.20 per ton.

At the bottom of the same page, West Leechburg Steel Co., of Pittsburgh, operating a mill located at West Leechburg, declares that its position has been materially improved under the code. Undoubtedly the company is correct in the statement. Its basing point is Pittsburgh, and the Pittsburgh-plus provision allows it to charge $1.45 per ton for imaginary freight service.

The directory does not list all of the companies quoted by the American Iron and Steel Institute to prove its point, and time has not permitted me to investigate each company, but it is manifest by simple reference to the directory what the product of many companies is and how the basing point price-fixing provisions of the steel code operate in every instance to the company's advantage, and against its less favorably located competitors.

HARM TO MINNESOTA INDUSTRIES

In my speech of April 26 I stated the dilemma which confronts Minnesota industries utilizing merchant bars and billets, and the efforts some of them have made to secure relief.

The abuse was shown and relief was granted in the old Pittsburgh-plus case. Now with the corresponding and equal menace of Chicago plus, the steel code prevents relief. If Minnesota industries are to be saved the steel code must be amended.

You gentlemen who know the geography of Minnesota and the economic conditions prevailing there will realize that with Canada on the north and the Wheat Belt on the west, the market for most of the fabricated-steel products manufactured in Minnesota lies to the east or south—in Chicago or beyond. An exception to this, of course, is farm machinery.

Minnesota manufacturers selling in Chicago and other eastern points now have no compensating advantages. Under the codes they must pay practically the same wages, so their labor costs are the same, and under the steel code price allowances are impossible. Consequently, any arbitrary increase in production cost must be borne by the Minnesota producer. It cannot be offset and it cannot be avoided.

On this exact point the president of the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co. of Duluth wrote me on May 1, in part, as follows:

Mr. Bennett, of the Lewis Bolt & Nut Co., of Minneapolis, was in to see me the other day. They use 14,000 tons per year, and they are out $42,000 per year because of this discriminating position. The code and the old style of basing has driven out more than 50 percent of all steel-fabricating industries in the State of Minnesota during the last 14 years.

* * * There is one place, perhaps, you are a little bit too conscientious, when you state that labor is nearly as costly here in this territory now as it is in the East. I only want to say this to you, that labor is exactly the same as in highly industrial centers of the East; there is no difference any more. We have nothing compensating to work against the strangling process forced upon us by steel code and steel institution in the present practice of basing point.

On April 26 H. L. Grapp, vice president of Despatch Oven Co., of Minneapolis, wrote me:

DEAR MR. CHASE: * * * Many manufacturing plants have had to leave the State of Minnesota, and we, likewise, have been contemplating such action, due to high freight tariff and the various items added to the cost of steel under the steel code.

Ninety percent of the products we manufacture are sold in the eastern section of the United States, and still the N.R.A. wants us to sign a code with our eastern competitors, who have price advantage of steel, which compels us to work on an equal basis with them. This, of course, practically eliminates us as far as competition is concerned.

We have objected to signing eastern N.R.A. codes primarily because it places us at a great disadvantage. However, if unfair practices, such as the Chicago base, were abolished, we could buy our steel at Duluth, and we would then be on a par with our competitors and could compete on a price basis.

This matter is most serious and affects every industry in the State of Minnesota.

We have on many occasions discussed moving our factory to the State of Pennsylvania or Ohio, and if unfair practices continue we, as well as other manufacturers, will be compelled to move our factory out of this State.

We are writing this letter to you explaining our particular situation, and, frankly, we cannot express our gratitude for your efforts in behalf of the manufacturers in the State of Minnesota.

If you desire additional information from us, it will be gladly furnished.

Hoping that you will keep up this fight and thanking you for the action you have already taken, we are,

Yours respectfully,

DESPATCH OVEN CO.,
H. L. GRAPP, Vice President.

Accepting Mr. Grapp's offer of further information, I telegraphed him on April 28 for additional data showing the situation of other Minneapolis manufacturers, in order to demonstrate by an uncolored statement of exact fact whether or not the steel-code provisions are strangling Minnesota industries. I did not select the companies, have made no effort to communicate with them, have not tried to start a deluge of letters pouring into Washington, and have not deleted Mr. Grapp's reply. It is quoted in full and verbatim:

APRIL 30, 1934.

Mr. RAY P. CHASE,
Minnesota Congressman, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: With reference to your telegram of April 28, wish to advise that in the limited space of time the writer has phoned a number of manufacturers in this city whose problems run parallel to ours. However, in general, all Minnesota manufacturing plants are faced with the same situation, and if inquiry was sent to them the facts would disclose a similar situation as to that which we have already explained.

However, here are some of the reactions from some of the manufacturers with whom the writer has personally talked and who will be glad to give further information, if needed:

Torso Manufacturing Co., Minneapolis, Mr. H. C. Cartney, treasurer. Mr. Cartney states that 75 percent of their products are sold and used in eastern markets, Chicago and beyond.

Puffer-Hubbard Manufacturing Co., Minneapolis. Mr. A. L. Goetzmann reports that 50 percent of their usual volume of business is in Chicago or east of that point, and that since freight rates have increased between here and Chicago and the various Chicago plus applied to the steel they use that they have lost practically their entire eastern market.

Johnston Manufacturing Co., Minneapolis. Mr. Johnston, president, reports that 75 percent of the equipment they manufacture is sold in eastern markets and that their sales are being seriously handicapped due to the fact that it is very difficult for them to meet eastern competition with the high cost of steel and freight rates.

Currier Manufacturing Co., Minneapolis. Mr. Currier, president, reports that 80 percent of their products are sold to eastern markets. Their business has been seriously handicapped by competitors in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, and Ohio due to the advantage these competitors have on the cost of steel and freight rates.

C. W. Olson Manufacturing Co., Minneapolis. Mr. Olson, president, reports that 30 percent of their entire output formerly went into the Michigan territory. Due to the increase in steel costs and freight rates, they have lost their business entirely, which has, of course, reduced their pay roll.

Diamond Iron Works and Mahr Manufacturing Co., Minneapolis: Mr. Bingenheimer, president, advised the writer that 50 percent of the Diamond Iron Works sales goes into eastern markets, but their subsidiary, the Mahr Manufacturing Co., ships 90 percent of their products into eastern markets. They have found their business seriously handicapped by the increased cost of steel and the high western freight rates which exist between Chicago and Minneapolis.

Flour City Ornamental Iron Works, Minneapolis: Mr. Tetzlaff reports that 80 percent of their output goes into Chicago or territories beyond, and that the Chicago plus seriously handicaps their sales on contract work. They, of course, are also handicapped due to the high rail rates.

Lewis Bolt & Nut Co., Minneapolis: Mr. Paper is faced with a similar problem as stated above and he appreciates your activities.

The writer had a very pleasant talk with Mr. Anderson, of Minneapolis Moline Power Equipment Co., whom you, no doubt, are familiar with. He states that due to the fact they do not ship into eastern markets and that all their products are used by farmers in the northwestern territory that they do not seriously object to the Chicago plus. They, of course, add the Chicago plus to the price of their machines and separators, and this additional expense is passed on to the purchaser, who is the farmer.

There are several other factories here who have a like situation, but nevertheless the extra cost of getting steel here has to be borne by the people in the Northwest.

If the writer had more time at his command he could obtain in the three major cities of Minnesota—Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth—names of over 50 manufacturing plants who form the bulk of industry in this State, and who will give out similar statements as those incorporated in this letter.

These manufacturers to which we refer are the principal employers of skilled labor in our State, and naturally, when they cannot compete with eastern competition, this labor will be out of work and will have to seek their livelihood in some other State, all of which works to a distinct disadvantage to the State of Minnesota.

We were pleased to receive your letter of April 28, and give you authority to use our name and also to use the other firm names and individuals given in this letter.

Now, as to a definite example as to what we are confronted with in the way of costs, is to take one of our standard ovens which sells for around $5,000. Of this $5,000, $2,000 consists of steel, and to this part of our cost we must add the Chicago plus, and, in turn, add any commission which our salesmen have to get, and must, of course, make a profit to stay in business and, therefore, have to add an additional amount. Then on this, we must figure the cost of transporting the steel from Chicago to Minneapolis and from Minneapolis back to Chicago, as our price has to be f.o.b. installation point. Therefore, after adding the extras as outlined, our ultimate price to the eastern manufacturer must include the items enumerated. The reason we have been able to do a nice volume of business in past years is because we have a more efficient factory organization, and who can produce more work per labor-hour. This has permitted us to compete in many instances.

However, since the Chicago plus and the increase in freight rate, some time back, we find it difficult to compete with eastern competition at this time. This is brought about as the eastern manufacturer does not have to add the Chicago plus, nor do they have to add the freight to and from their factory as we do on account of being located in Minneapolis.

The various codes which we have been requested to join insist that we operate at the same labor hours, pay the same salaries, and publish to the code authorities all the price information, and that under the code we are supposed to be able to compete with eastern manufacturers who make up the code authorities. The writer has personally asked the N.R.A. administrators and others how we are to arrange our manufacture under the N.R.A. so as to stay in business, but no one seems to have any solution to our problem.

It is apparent that we can accept some of the generous offers in cities in Ohio and Pennsylvania who want to give us factories if we will come to their city and provide a pay roll. We, of course, do not desire to move our factory, as our organization is made up of individuals who have been born and raised in this State, and who own real estate and personal property and, by all means, would want to continue in business here if at all possible.

Every one of the manufacturers with whom the writer has talked seems to appreciate the work you are doing in their behalf and the writer will consider it a personal favor if you will forward to him any information you obtain or give out so we may have it in our files.

We sincerely appreciate your interest and cooperation.

Yours respectfully,

DESPATCH OVEN CO.,
H. L. GRAPP, Vice President.

The statements of Mr. Grapp's letter, the plight of these manufacturing companies, and the industrial problem of Minnesota are presented to Congress, the President, and the country in the hope that we may receive exact justice through prompt remedial action.

ADDED COSTS TO FARMERS

In the letter just quoted there is a significant statement aside from recital of hardship on industry. That is where Mr. Grapp in paragraph 11 speaks of the Minneapolis Moline Power Equipment Co. The helpful candor of this company's respresentative is convincing proof that there are two horns to Minnesota's dilemma.

If its manufacturers seek to sell their products in the East they cannot compete successfully because of the stifling effect of Chicago plus, and therefore are losing this desirable eastern market, with resultant decreased sales, lessened profit, and reduced pay rolls.

If, on the other hand, they sell to farmers of the Northwest, the farmers must pay a higher price for their machinery than they otherwise would have to pay, for the sole reason that the basing-point price-fixing practice has added the fictitious charge to production cost, and this fictitious charge the farmer must pay.

THE PLIGHT OF MINNESOTA

This is the plight of my home State. The injustice of it is known by everyone familiar with the facts and admitted by everyone except those who profit by the abuses which we seek to eliminate.

The United States Steel Corporation endeavored to correct the abuse before the steel code divested it of power to do so; the Federal Trade Commission vigorously condemned the evil and suggested the remedy. The daily press recites that the National Recovery Review Board is in accord with the Federal Trade Commission and has so reported.

A similar situation confronting Stockton, Calif., was discussed by the Federal Trade Commission on page 20 of its report to the Senate. The report says:

As a matter of fact, no sheets are produced at Pittsburgh, yet it is made the basing point for that product.

Another example of the far-reaching effects of the establishment of new basing points is found in the experience of Stockton, Calif. Prior to the code, Stockton could buy steel on an equality with San Francisco by reason of its being made a deep-water port through the expenditure of millions of dollars appropriated by the Federal Government. It thus became a distributing center for the upper portion of the San Joaquin Valley, and a number of businesses were established on the strength of that development. The code made Pacific coast ports basing points, but excluded Stockton. As a result Stockton and San Joaquin Valley territory have to pay the all-rail freight from San Francisco and have lost the benefit of water transportation to Stockton.

It is suggestive that this situation was cured by action of the code authority during the week of April 8.

Also suggestive in view of the Federal Trade Commission's report is the following Executive order issued by President Roosevelt last January:

EXECUTIVE ORDER

COMPLAINTS CHARGING THE PURSUIT OF MONOPOLISTIC PRACTICES

In order to effectuate the policy of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, pursuant to the authority thereby vested in me and in accordance with the provisions of said act and the provisions of an act to create a Federal Trade Commission approved September 26, 1914, do hereby direct that:

1. Whenever any complainant shall be dissatisfied with the disposition by any Federal agency, except the Department of Justice, of any complaint charging that any person, partnership, corporation, or other association, or form of enterprise, is engaged in any monopolistic practice, or practice permitting or promoting a monopoly, or tending to eliminate, oppress, or discriminate against small enterprises, which is allegedly in violation of the provisions of any code of fair competition approved under the National Industrial Recovery Act, or allegedly sanctioned by the provisions of such code and allegedly in violation of section 3 (a) of said National Industrial Recovery Act, such complaint shall be transferred to the Federal Trade Commission by such agency upon request of the complainant.

2. The Federal Trade Commission may, in accordance with the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the provisions of an act to create a Federal Trade Commission, approved September 26, 1914, upon the receipt of any such complaint transmitted to it, institute a proceeding against such persons, partnerships, corporations, or other associations, or form of enterprise as it may have reason to believe are engaged in the practices aforesaid, whenever it shall appear to the Federal Trade Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public: Provided, That if in any case the Federal Trade Commission shall determine that any such practice is not contrary to the provisions of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act or of sections 2, 3, or 7 of the act of October 15, 1914, commonly called the Clayton Act, it shall, instead of instituting such proceeding, transfer the complaint, with the evidence and other information pertaining to the matter, to the Department of Justice.

3. The power herein conferred upon the Federal Trade Commission shall not be construed as being in derogation of any of the powers of said Commission under existing law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 20, 1934.

In light of the above, another statement by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson is interesting.

In column 5, page 2, of its issue of April 27, the Wall Street Journal says:

JOHNSON TO DISCUSS STEEL CODE TODAY—"WON'T BE MUCH LEFT" OF F.T.C. COMPLAINT, HE PREDICTS—N.R.A. NOT SATISFIED WITH WAGNER BILL

WASHINGTON.—General Johnson, the N.R.A. Administrator, said Wednesday that he was going to confer Friday with leaders of the steel industry on changes in the code suggested by the latter. The general predicted "There won't be much left" of the Federal Trade Commission's complaints after the code is revised. He opined that the basing-point system is incorrect when the points have no relation to the point of manufacture. To correct the code along these lines would require "considerable change", he stated.

What Minnesota industries need is relief.

What Minnesota wants is justice, and effective, immediate action to insure it.

The State looks to the President.

I have presented this problem from the viewpoint of the State of Minnesota. It is not a local problem, however. The discriminatory practice affects unfavorably steel-using industries in many parts of the country. These industries are the victims of the practice. They need help.

For example, and in proof of my assertion, I quote from page 72 of Senate Document 159, Seventy-third Congress, second session:

NOVEMBER 29, 1933.

COMMERCIAL COMMITTEE,
American Iron & Steel Institute,
550 Fifth Avenue, New York.

GENTLEMEN: In a letter dated November 4 steel consumers in the Mahoning Valley protested to the American Iron & Steel Institute against the establishment of Pittsburgh as the basing point for flat-rolled steel sold in the valley district. The undersigned producers of steel, operating plants in the Mahoning Valley, are in sympathy with this protest and petition the American Iron & Steel Institute to reestablish the basis of selling in effect prior to the date of the steel code.

For more than 25 years flat-rolled steel has been sold to consumers at the Pittsburgh price f.o.b. valley mill. Four or five years ago an arbitrary charge of 5 cents per hundred pounds was added to the mill price for delivery to any point in the district. This basis of selling was known throughout the industry and was not the nature of a confidential price.

The steel code establishes Youngstown as a basing point for pig iron, concrete reinforcing bars, spikes, sheet bar, skelp, and other forms of semifinished steel, and regulation no. 2 establishes the price of rods at $1 per ton above the price at Pittsburgh. Although there is more capacity to produce sheets and strip steel in the Mahoning Valley than any other district, the steel code provides neither a base price at Youngstown nor a valley price for these products.

Steel consumers in the Mahoning Valley are principally fabricators of sheets, strip steel, and plates, who establish their plants close to the sources of supply, and have built their business upon a cost of steel comparable to cost at Pittsburgh. To arbitrarily increase the price to these consumers from $1.50 to $2.50 per ton without a similar increase in the price to their competitors, will throttle development of the valley and cause established industries to retire from business or move to other districts.

We believe it was not the purpose of the steel code to change established and recognized practices, or to throttle industry in one locality for the advantage of other districts, and petition the directors of the American Iron & Steel Institute to authorize the reestablishment of the basis of selling which has existed in the Mahoning Valley for more than a generation.

Yours very truly,

CARNEGIE STEEL CO.
MAHONING VALLEY STEEL CO.
REPUBLIC STEEL CORPORATION.
SHARON STEEL HOOP CO.
YOUNGSTOWN SHEET & TUBE CO.

THE RECORD

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, when President Roosevelt, as head of the party, took over the reins of the Government, conditions throughout the country were extremely bad. He knew that to regain the confidence of our citizens it was necessary to put into effect many new kinds of laws, and it is to his credit that he said to the public:

I may make some mistakes—some of the legislation may not work; however, if an error in policy is made I will gladly acknowledge such a fact, and we will try something else.

This is the kind of leadership that one likes to follow, and it has been a pleasure and privilege to stand with him in every matter that I thought would be beneficial to our citizens.

Serving in Congress can be compared to attending school, as the longer one is trained the more efficient he becomes, and this brings about a higher standing for the district.

I have served as a member of the following committees: Public Lands, Patents, Pensions, Printing, Privileges and Elections, Expenditures on Public Buildings, Naval Affairs; and now for the first time in the history of the State have a membership on the most powerful committee in the House, the Ways and Means Committee, which approves committee chairmen and assigns all other party members to committees; also prepares the revenue laws, tariff, and many other kinds of legislation of importance.

Length of service is known by everyone informed as to what counts in Congress, and the district has the chairmanship of the Oklahoma House delegation, chairman of the twelfth legislative zone, chairman of a special congressional committee, first vice chairman of the national congressional committee, secretary of the legislative forum, and chairman of the subcommittee that presented the oil legislation which is now a law.

I am proud that we had the honor of presenting the first bill to guarantee deposits in Government-supervised banks and to ask for the first hearing ever held in either branch of Congress on this subject. As long as this bill remains a law, no more will communities be paralyzed with bank failures, which bring about indescribable hardships to the poor as well as to others. Every one of these honors belongs to the district—every one would be lost should my constituents be misled by those who spread poison for the purpose of trying to promote themselves by a campaign of vilification and criticism. I have lived in what is now Oklahoma for over 30 years. All of my interests rest with the splendid citizenship that I have been pround to represent, and, of course, nothing will make me more happy than to be allowed to continue serving my friends and constituents as the first Representative from the Seventh Congressional District of Oklahoma.

THE PROGRAM OF THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. HOLLISTER] before the League of Women's Voters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered May 5, 1934, by my colleague [Mr. HOLLISTER] before the League of Women Voters:

I find I am to talk today on the program of the present administration; surely no simple subject, nor one that can be quickly dispatched.

These are times of great stress and strain, when many of the standards by which we have been accustomed to guide our public and private lives seem to be antiquated; when people are groping in a blind fog for a fixed light toward which they can turn their faltering footsteps. Perhaps it is a good thing for one in public life to make a frank avowal of his beliefs—a simple credo—and then superimpose on it the current governmental trends in order that he may see how they fit.

I believe in the future of this country. I believe in the innate common sense of its people. I believe in the advantages of its geographical position and in the wealth of its natural resources. I believe that these advantages have been marvelously developed by the operation of the competitive economic system. I believe that this system is in the long run immeasurably superior to any other economic or social structure that has as yet been devised or even suggested. I realize that this system is far from perfect, that it needs to be directed intelligently, and that because of human frailty and greed certain reasonable curbs must be imposed. In times of stress the system may need a substantial amount of artificial support. I believe, however, that these curbs and this support should be kept at the minimum and that we should maintain at all times a system under which the liberty of the individual remains as the essential principle.

Conversely, I do not believe at all in governmental regimentation. I do not believe in so-called "planned economy" in its broad sense. I do not believe in putting the Government in business. I do not believe that a nation can spend itself out of a depression with government money. In fact, I do not believe in any system which substitutes governmental effort for private effort, or which tends to circumscribe and limit the reasonable rights of the individual while at the same time the power and scope of government is increased. Private business develops by private initiative, and when private business increases we increase employment and raise the buying power of all the people. In no other way can this result be achieved without a complete change in the economic and social system. What we need today is less government and more business.

Let us apply these principles to the present governmental situation. It is safe to say that never in the history of this country has so much major legislation of such a varied nature been adopted in the same length of time. We have in a short space of time altered fundamentally many of those precepts of our Government which have been longest established.

Please understand that I am not making a political speech. I know this is a nonpolitical organization, and I am trying to review dispassionately the present situation. As one of the minority party, I am perhaps in a better position to make a fair criticism than one who may be compelled by party loyalty to ignore obvious administration mistakes. I could, of course, discuss the campaign speeches of the President, the platform of the Democratic Party, and the inaugural address, and then compare with these the actions taken by the administration since it came into power. I realize that the right to change one's mind is not limited to the fair sex. It is only fair to point out, however, that these fundamental changes in the theory of government were not forecast during the campaign and were not then at issue. They reflect in no sense the desires of the voters as expressed at the polls, but represent the theories and inclinations of a small group of advisers who surround the President and who do not apparently feel any obligation of allegiance to the avowed principles on the basis of which their chief was elected.

If I am correct in my premise that we want more business, we should naturally assume that the first and more important step was to assist business in getting under way, and in the meantime to adopt such essential emergency relief measures as would alleviate human misery until the effects of business rejuvenation would make such relief unnecessary. It is here, may I say, that the President's advisers made their great and fundamental error. From the very beginning they have mixed inextricably the subject of temporary relief with permanent reform. Relief is assistance, and involves helping someone to help himself. Reform, even good reform, is upheaval. Business needs assistance to get on its feet. Attempts at reformation inevitably spell business dislocation and doubt—often disaster. It has been a curious phenomenon of the past year that we have seen these two forces in direct conflict, with business as the innocent victim.

Examples of relief are found in the bank-deposit insurance provisions of the 1933 banking bill which have allayed in the minds of the small depositors the fear of the loss of their money. This has in turn strengthened the position of the banks, who now need not fear the hysteria of the small depositors in starting bank runs. Another example of relief is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, adopted to help out the distressed home owner who has real value in his property, but who cannot meet his mortgage obligations at the present time. The exchange of bonds for these mortgages has strengthened the situation of banks and insurance companies by adding liquidity to some of their frozen assets. The granting of aid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to banks, insurance companies, and railroads, begun in the previous administration, was a relief measure of the same nature. This was followed up by the acquisition by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of notes and debentures of banks for the purpose of strengthening their capital structure. There is now under discussion a bill to provide a certain amount of working capital for small industries and thus permit them to continue in business and keep their employees at work. This will undoubtedly become law.

Most of these are temporary measures to tide over the present emergency, and all of them are for the purpose of helping the individual or business to help itself.

Contrast with these the Securities Act of 1933, which by making drastic and unreasonable rules for the registration and the control of the sale of all securities, has almost completely dried up the flow of private capital into the long-term financing of industry, and which has probably done more to stifle the recovery of the heavy industries, or so-called "durable goods", than anything which has happened during the depression. Yet almost all business men agree that if we can once put the durable-goods industries on their feet by making it possible for the buyers of machinery and similar heavy goods to secure capital to finance their needs, we shall be well on the way to recovery.

The stock exchange control bill which the House passed yesterday, and which will undoubtedly become law, though perhaps in a more modified form, is another example of the same manifestation. On the face of things it purports to curtail stock gambling by the regulation of stock exchanges. No one believes in stock gambling, and all are agreed that a certain amount of regulation of security exchanges would be salutary, but the average business man will tell you that this bill goes far beyond its avowed purpose. It puts corporations and individual officers and stockholders under arbitrary and unnecessary bureaucratic control. It tends also to shrink the market for stocks unreasonably, and thus materially affect the liquidity and even value of such investments. Both these measures are examples of attempts at reform which stifle business rather than help it.

The fiscal policy of the administration is another reform measure which has put fear into industry. This policy has changed a number of times and is even now uncertain. There was at first considerable talk of the commodity dollar, that is, a dollar whose gold content changes steadily, but whose buying power is theoretically kept on a fairly even keel. I say "theoretically", because there are few sound economists who really believe that this managed dollar can really be managed with any safety or success. The administration apparently reached that conclusion when it devalued the dollar at a fixed gold content, but at the same time it removed from our currency the right to demand anything of value in exchange for it. We have ceased to have any real metal base whatsoever for our currency; certainly a reform measure with a vengeance.

Please do not think the problem is as simple as I have stated it, or perhaps I have not stated it as simply as I had hoped. Much of this legislation is two-edged, or many-edged. It may have one aspect which is beneficial, but another that is hurtful. Sometimes the difference lies in the method of administration. No one can deny for instance that the National Recovery Administration has helped some lines of business greatly. A reasonable regulation of business by its own action is most salutary, and this occasionally seems to be the trend of the National Recovery Administration. The next day, however, we hear from the picturesque gentleman in charge of the work that he will crack down on business for this or that reason, and fear is again felt for the future.

I gave at the beginning of my talk a general creed for the long pull. Let me now give a more specific one for the present emergency. I believe that this Government must curtail expenditures—begin to work at once for a balanced Budget, not a balanced regular budget as distinguished from an emergency budget, but a balancing of all budgets. What good will it do if we balance the regular Budget, if the emergency one bankrupts us? What would you think of the intelligence of a man who boasts that he has paid the regular tradesman, if the sheriff is about to walk off with all his belongings to pay for some splendid emergency banquets he has given? What would be the advantage to an industry to have no current debt payable if it had a mortgage about to become due and no money with which to pay it? The analogy is clear. If Uncle Sam can't pay his debts, what difference does it make whether they are called "regular" or "emergency" debts?

The next tenet of my belief is allied to that just given. I believe in a sound currency, i.e., one in whose basic value we can have confidence over a long period, even though its buying power may fluctuate within reasonable limits. Since the date when the Government confiscated all the gold of the country, most of our currency has no intrinsic value. Its current purchasing power depends entirely on the confidence which those who use it have in it. Once this begins to weaken, and the bank notes which represent all but a small fraction of the currency of the country approach more and more quickly their actual value as scraps of paper, then are we indeed lost. The cost of living rises in an ever-increasing spiral and wages lag far behind. We enter the speculators' paradise, and all sound values disappear.

The last article of belief, but one of paramount importance, brings up the question of governmental regimentation. I believe firmly that we must begin at an early date to decentralize our Government, to abolish many Federal agencies, and turn their functions back to local government or to private control and initiative. There have been created during the last year about 40 new boards and commissions with over 40,000 employees, and these governmental bodies issue their arbitrary and often half-baked orders to you and to me. They send their auditors, inspectors, and appraisers throughout the country, and they demand the filling out and filing of applications, blanks, and reports without limit. Red tape and delay meet us on every side. Many small industries find the accounting costs of keeping up with the requirements of the Government almost wiping out the small profits which they may be beginning to make.

There are many evidences that the trade dislocations of the Great War which were in the main responsible for the terrific depressions through which the various countries of the world have recently passed are becoming readjusted by the inexorable operation of natural economic laws. England, for instance, which has gone through the valley of shadow, and which has unsuccessfully tried and given up a number of the experiments which we are so gayly following, and which has now gone back to sounder principles of economic development, seems to be well on the road to recovery. There is no doubt that basic conditions in this country are considerably better than they were at the depth of the depression. There is no reason that they cannot continue to improve, but they will only improve if private industry is given an opportunity to utilize the innate abilities and resources of the country and its people without continual interference by the Government. We must not do so many foolish things that we keep business in a condition of fear. The most important and most numerous class in the country is the working class. Its ultimate welfare depends solely upon the proper development of industry. We need not fear the future if we will give industry a chance, stick to sound money, and balance the Budget.

THE "NEW DEAL" AND THE "OLD DEAL"

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech I made in Chicago last Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me before the Illinois Manufacturers' Cost Association, Chicago, Ill., May 1, 1934:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I am here at your gracious invitation, the honor of which I greatly appreciate. It is an added honor to me that Col. Robert McCormick has been good enough to take the chair, and I shall have occasion before I conclude my remarks to dwell upon the great service that your chairman has done the Nation in his valorous fight for the freedom of the press.

We are living in a very critical period of our Nation's history. In the language of Tom Paine, "These are the times that try men's souls." It is no time for mere partisanship. If I express my deep convictions as to the inevitable effect of many current measures upon our form of government, I am not lacking in respect for our President, for whose masterful leadership I have great admiration, nor do I speak as a Republican, but only as an American citizen who wishes to raise his feeble voice to vindicate the Government of our fathers, and to deprecate the policies that, intentionally or otherwise, are fast destroying the Constitution of the United States.

No one would have taken a deeper interest in this possibility than Abraham Lincoln of Illinois. The great purpose of Lincoln's career, to which he was as "constant as the northern star, of whose true fixed and resting quality there is no fellow in the firmament", was to preserve the Union by preserving the Constitution. All other issues, including that of slavery, were to him of great but subordinate importance.

Let me tell you a comparatively unknown incident in the life of the great emancipator. He had arrived in Washington as the President-elect. When Mr. Lincoln reached that city on February 23, 1861, a peace conference was then in session in Washington, and its delegates waited upon Mr. Lincoln. They represented to him the great danger to the country in any attempt to enforce the Constitution, upon the seven States which had already defied its authority by seceding from the Union. One of these delegates said to Mr. Lincoln, "It is for you, sir, to say whether the grass shall grow in the streets of our commercial cities." To which Mr. Lincoln made the following reply:

"If I shall ever come to the great office of President of the United States, I shall take an oath that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and that I will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution. It will not be preserved and defended until it is enforced and obeyed in every part of every one of the United States. It must be so respected, obeyed, enforced, and defended, let the grass grow where it may."

Two and one half years later he was to stand on the field of Gettysburg with the new-made graves of the dead about him to invoke, in immortal phrases, his countrymen to "highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Less than two years later Lincoln was to seal his devotion to the Constitution with his life's blood.

Sixty-nine years have passed since he gave to the Constitution, even as the soldier dead of Gettysburg, "the last full measure of devotion", and it is a significant and portentous fact that today the Constitution, insofar as it sought to distribute power between the Federal Government and the constituent States, and insofar as it sought to restrain the Federal Government within its carefully prescribed channels of power, is virtually, or at least largely, nonexistent, except as a great historic tradition. The warning of another great citizen of Illinois, and a former Chief Justice of the United States, has come to pass. That is with our form of government, as has happened so frequently with the extinct religions of the past, that "the form has survived the substance of the faith."

This Constitution of ours, once jealously loved by the American people and admired by the leading publicists of all nations, and now either violated or at least flouted by men high in official place, is facing its most serious trial. The question that now confronts that people and will continue to confront it until the battle is lost or won is whether they want the Constitution to survive in its essential features. If they do not, they will say so, and it will perish.

This is far more than a question of sentiment or of loyalty to our past. It is a matter of the most practical interest to all who own property, who seek to use it lawfully in their own manner, and who may desire to transmit it to their posterity. A very profound student of governmental institutions, perhaps the greatest of the nineteenth century, Sir Henry Naine, attributed the amazing growth of America, one of the most stupendous pageants in the history of mankind, not merely to the wealth of its natural resources but to the inviolability of property rights which the Constitution had secured. He said: "All this beneficent prosperity reposes on the sacredness of contract and the stability of private property", and he added that the clauses of the Constitution which had thus insured the protection of property rights were "the bulwark of American individualism against democratic impatience and socialistic fantasy." Unhappily, that is no longer true.

In this connection it should never be forgotten that the Constitution was born of an economic crisis which was far graver than that through which we are now passing, and it was the men of character and property in this country who assembled in the great Constitutional Convention in 1787, in my city of Philadelphia, to protect their property rights by the creation of a form of government which, while recognizing the principle of democracy, would nevertheless prevent its excesses. Today, however, in Washington there is only lip service to the Constitution. It has wholly ceased to be a restraining force upon these excesses of democracy. The power of the Government is largely concentrated in the executive branch of the Government, and in that department men of high position flout the Constitution and sneer at anyone who ventures to raise a voice in its behalf. If any respect is paid to the Constitution, it is on the pernicious theory that an emergency may excuse its violation and justify congressional laws and executive measures in plain violation of its terms. Let it here be added that the American people have been betrayed into a false security by the illusion that the Federal judiciary, and notably the Supreme Court, will fully and automatically prevent any violations of the Constitution. Its power to do so is very limited, and in a democracy the only real salvation of the Constitution lies in the people themselves. If they are unworthy of it, it will perish, for it is a truth as old as Aristotle that a constitution cannot survive unless the people are worthy of it.

It is this fact, of which too many of our people are seemingly ignorant, that makes this the greatest crisis in our Government since 1860. Indeed, in one respect it is a greater crisis, even though the revolution now in progress is bloodless and has none of the pomp and circumstance of war. What was the crisis of 1860? The Republican Party had come into power for the first time and had elected Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States. At once seven States seceded from the Union before he could even take the oath of office. If Lincoln had acquiesced in the withdrawal of these States from the Union, what would have been the result? The loyal States, comprising at least 75 percent of the population, would have continued under the Constitution, and it would have remained for these States the great charter of ordered liberty. The 11 States which finally seceded would, for the time being, have formed a separate republic, but, with the exception of slavery and some minor details of government, they, too, would have existed under a constitution not dissimilar to the Constitution under which we live. The dissolution of the Union into two republics would have been an immeasurable disaster, but it is probable that sooner or later the centripetal influences of the railroad and the telegraph and other unifying influences yet to be would have brought them together.

The supreme issue now is not whether the Union will dissolve into two or more fragments, but whether the most essential features of the Constitution will be abandoned in all of the 48 States which constitute the Union. If the Constitution thus fails in its most essential feature, then it may prove a greater disaster to future generations than the mere disintegration of the Republic into two republics. This may seem a hard truth and one that you and I are loath to accept, but it is a fact which cannot be ignored that, if the Constitution is, as Gladstone said, the "most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man", then it is a greater disaster for it to perish as the charter of government for all 48 States than if it remained a form of government for the greater part of the States.

What do I mean by the essential features of our Government? It would take too long to enumerate them all, but the greatest of these is our dual form of government, whereby certain powers of common and uniform concern are allocated to the Federal Government and all remaining powers are reserved to the States, and to the people thereof. If in the vital matter of trade and industry all power is concentrated in the Federal Government, then our dual form of government ceases to be in the most important of all fields of governmental operation, namely, that of trade and industry. This means something more than what has been called State rights. It means the destruction of local self-government, and what is of infinitely more importance, the rights of the individual as against the power of government.

It must be obvious to anyone who will calmly consider realities and not be misled by illusions, that the line of demarcation between interstate and domestic commerce has been wiped out in the last 12 months. The Federal Government has now assumed complete and effective power over all trade and commerce so that it today controls the banks, national and State, the railroads, whether operating between the States or wholly within a State, the manufacturing industries, the conditions of labor, and the activities of the farm; and this power is the more serious because it is not in the last analysis exercised by the Congress, which theoretically represents the composite will of the American people, but by the executive and his deputies. The portentous fact is that in the matter of agriculture, manufacture, transportation, banking, we are living under a dictatorship, and it is no compensating assurance to be told that it is a "benign dictatorship", for that is a contradiction in terms.

I do not question for one moment the patriotic purposes or the amiable intentions of the President of the United States. I have nothing but admiration for his qualities of leadership, which may rank him as one of the most forceful Presidents that this country has ever known, but it can be said of him, as of anyone vested with dictatorial powers, that the appetite for power "grows by what it feeds on." No ruler is so dangerous as the one who unites with complete power the intoxication of popularity, and the liability of a dictator to abuse powers was never more strikingly illustrated than when, without any hearing, the President canceled property rights which were worth millions of dollars, threw 25,000 men out of work, and subjected the Army aviators to the perils of death. This action contradicted every basic ideal of liberty, and while the President is the most amiable of men, yet the pride of power was never more strikingly illustrated than when the Executive Office publicly criticized Colonel Lindbergh simply because Lindbergh had protested against the confiscation of his own property without his constitutional "day in court."

In my judgment, the overshadowing political issue in the next 2 years is, or should be, to save our form of government. Mr. Hoover prophetically said in his principal speech in the last Presidential campaign that that contest was not between two candidates, or even two parties, but between two philosophies of government, and time has vindicated the truth of that statement. However little the fact may be now appreciated, and however disposed the industrial interests of the country may be to sell their precious birthright, constitutional liberty, for the mess of pottage of a temporary and largely fictitious recovery, the fact remains that two philosophies of government are now at death grips. The one is the philosophy of the present administration, and it differs in degree but not in kind from that of Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini. It is a philosophy which turns citizens into subjects and makes them live by the sufferance of their Government. The other philosophy is that of the master architects of the American Constitution, who believed that the Government should confine its operations to strictly governmental functions and not attempt to regiment the citizen in his industrial activities, whether they be those of the farm or the factory. Upon the decision of this issue will depend the future of the Republic, for if the present policy of a unitary socialistic State shall prevail, even the Union, which is older than the Constitution, may not long survive.

The present crisis in constitutional government is, therefore not dissimilar to that which existed in the Nation when Abraham Lincoln took an oath of office to support and defend the Constitution of the United States, and it may be well to recall what he said as to the obligation of that oath. Turning to the States which had revolted against the Constitution by acts of secession, he said, "You can have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect, and defend it", and all that followed in that tragic Civil War, from Bull Run to Appomattox, was the performance of that duty. When the present administration required, under penalty of imprisonment, a pants' presser in Tampa, Fla., to charge not less than a certain amount for his labor, then the Federal Government did assert a right not merely to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, as authorized by the Constitution, but to regulate all trade and industry in the United States, and this is the destruction of a basic principle of the Constitution, that the States, respectively, should regulate all trade and industry within their own borders. No one, except some salaried advocate of the present regime, would seriously contend that the pressing of pants in Florida is in any sense interstate commerce. It is to the credit of the administration that most of the President's advisers, who are formulating these socialistic policies, tacitly admit that they are without any authority under the Constitution and are essentially revolutionary in their nature.

Few in Congress sought to justify under the Constitution the seizure by the Federal Government of these reserved rights of the States.

Those who attempted to do so, either under the theory that an emergency could provide a moratorium on constitutional obligations or that the power to regulate the domestic trade of a State was implied, again remind us of the sarcastic remark of Lincoln that there were those whose powers of interpretation, when sufficiently stimulated by self-interest or love of power, were such that they could solemnly argue that "a horse chestnut is the same as a chestnut horse."

To such, the solemn words of the Constitution, written with a lucidity and clarity that the world has ever since admired, are meaningless symbols, to which any meaning can be attached by self-interest. It reminds one of that passage in Alice in Wonderland, where Humpty Dumpty said, "When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean, neither more nor less." To which Alice replied, "The question is whether you can make words mean so many different things." To which Humpty Dumpty replied, "The question is, which is to be the master—that's all." The proponents of the new deal regard themselves as the masters of the written word of the Constitution, and where they can find no authority for extraordinary acts, they usurp the right to interpret the Constitution contrary to its express language. Indeed, they do not interpret it; they ignore it.

It is to the credit of the President that, with few exceptions, he has not sought in any public address to justify many of the policies of his administration by any grant of power under the Constitution. In one of the first of his radio addresses he said that all the powers of a dictator which had been vested in him were constitutional, because they had been duly delegated to him by Congress. He has never since pursued that line of argument, for it must be obvious to anyone that when a duty is imposed upon Congress, such as the regulation of the value of coinage or of interstate commerce, Congress does not discharge that duty by wholly abdicating it.

The framers of the Constitution believed, and such was the consistent policy of their forbears, that there were many important governmental measures which one man, however wise and well meaning, could not wisely exercise, but which would require the composite intelligence of the representatives of the people in Congress assembled. For example, the Constitution expressly said that Congress, and Congress alone, should impose taxes, and "to make assurance doubly sure", it expressly provided that all revenue measures must originate in the House of Representatives, it being the body most representative of the general will.

This has been a principle of English-speaking liberty for 500 years. In defense of that principle Sidney and Hampden and Elliot had risked their lives, while, on the other hand, for defiance of that principle Charles I lost his head and James II his crown. Nevertheless, the present Congress, in clear violation of the Constitution, vested an absolute power in the Secretary of Agriculture to impose processing taxes in his sole discretion, under which already nearly a billion of dollars have been wrongfully exacted from the processors of agricultural commodities and paid over to one class of the people as a subsidy. This violation of a constitutional principle, which we and our forbears had fought for from the time of the Plantagenets to the present administration, was the more indefensible because the money thus raised by the arbitrary power of one man was turned over, in his sole discretion, to one class of the community. Let us hope that this marks the climax of a policy of recent years to bleed white the industrial States of the Union, which have 75 percent of the population and pay over 90 percent of the tax burdens, for the benefit of the wheat and cotton planters and the hog raisers of the agricultural States.

The President, not content with his present power to reduce or increase import duty by 50 percent upon the advice of the Tariff Commission, now desires not merely to exercise that power without the advice of the Tariff Commission, which acts upon a hearing, but to make a treaty without the consent of the Senate which would pledge this country to admit the products of other countries upon some scale of duties which the treaty would prescribe. This offends the Constitution in two ways. It not only seeks to confer power within a statutory margin in the President to determine the rate of import duties, but it gives him the right to incorporate reciprocal-tariff rates in a treaty without the consent of the Senate. If such a law were passed and sustained by the Supreme Court, it would simply mean that the President would hold by the throat every industry in this country whose existence depends upon a protective tariff. We have already been admonished by his Secretary of Agriculture that either we must continue to subsidize the farmer at the expense of fiscal bankruptcy or we must let into this country at least a billion dollars' worth of manufactured products. It must be obvious that we cannot admit such a volume of products now dutiable without closing thousands of factories in the United States. We would then give employment to aliens in foreign lands and throw thousands of American workmen on the bread lines.

I assume that the President would not intentionally bring about this result. But to give him the power to do so is to subject the industries of this country to possible ruin.

In this connection it must be remembered that when we speak of the President's edicts or decrees, it is unthinkable that he can personally decide one in one hundred of the many questions which are nominally referred to him and decided in his name. His industry is great, and his power of decision is amazing, but the powers so lavishly conferred upon him are delegated to many deputies and it would be one or more of these deputies who can determine the fate of thousands of industrial establishments, if the President has the power to reduce duties under reciprocal trade agreements.

Until the President delivered his annual message to Congress on January 3, 1934, I had tenaciously believed that he had no sympathy with any attempt to make a permanent change of our form of Government, and that his only purpose, which was quite intelligible, was to meet the grave conditions of an economic crisis by temporary measures of a drastic character. When, however, the President came before Congress on January 3 last, he gave, in his charming and engaging way, an intimation that he shared with his closest advisers the conviction that this revolution in our form of government should be permanent. Smilingly he told the Congress that it was his purpose "to build on the ruins of the past a new structure, designed better to meet the present problems of modern civilization", and he promised "a permanent readjustment of many of our ways of thinking and, therefore, of many of our social and economic arrangements." With a glance at the Supreme Court there assembled, he pointedly said that it was "the joint task of the legislative, the judicial, and the executive branches of the National Government to consolidate what we are doing to make our economic and social structure capable of dealing with modern life." He recognized that the new deal was at the sacrifice of the old-order freedom, for he added, "We have demanded of many citizens that they surrender certain licenses"—by which he meant liberties—"to do as they please in their business relationships." As to the National Recovery Act and its complete usurpation of all the rights of the States in reference to their domestic trade and industry, he said that "we have created a permanent feature of our modernized industrial structure", meaning the N.R.A., and that "it will continue under the supervision, but not the arbitrary dictation of Government itself." Forgetful of the limitations of the Federal Government under the Constitution, he promised a national plan which will eliminate the use of inefficient tools, conserve and increase natural resources, prevent waste, and enable millions of our people to take better advantage of the opportunities which God has given our country.

This apparently meant that the ambitious program of the Secretary of Labor to limit the hours of labor, the amount of production, the minimum wages of labor, and the maximum price of sale, and even the right to improve plants to increase production should be regulated by the Federal bureaucracy.

A few days later the President again pointedly told the country that his new deal would be a permanent policy of our Government.

The American people now know exactly what they have to expect; and in the same address the President gave one indication of the essentials of the new deal when he demanded that all industrialists should make a further reduction in the hours of labor and give increased wages for less work. We were advised that we must either accept that as an Executive edict, or expect a rigid law of Congress which would reduce working hours to 30 hours a week. The new deal contemplates the right to determine the amount of wages, the hours of labor, the amount of the output, the character of machinery used in production, and the size of the crops, and yet the new dealers wonder why confidence is so little and recovery is so slow.

Even more recent and significant was the statement of the President at the dinner of the Gridiron Club of Washington. I cannot quote his exact language, for the speeches of a President at the Gridiron dinner are not reported, but I am credibly informed that, in speaking of our Constitution, he referred to the fact that our historic warship, which we called the "Constitution", and which is familiarly known to us as "Old Ironsides", might have been a good warship in the days of the Barbary pirates, or the War of 1812, but would be of little use today. The implication would seem to be that the Constitution of the United States, while it served a useful purpose in the past, was equally out of date today. This reminds me of a poem which a correspondent has sent me, and two verses of which I venture to quote:

"Aye, tear the wrinkl'd parchment down!
Has it not held a place
Close to the human hearts that throb
In breast of noble race?
For it recites those principles
Of Freedom for mankind
On which our Nation great has thriv'd
And whereby States we bind.

Hold! There are those among us who Say God's hand held the pen
That wrote that sacred document
And guided those wise men.
Aye! Millions now arise in might
Who will not be denied:
'The Constitution, Hope of all,
'Shall not be crucified.'"

Let us never forget that the Constitution is something more than a written document. It is the voice of a mighty spirit of the English-speaking race from the time of the Pilgrims to the present day. What was the significance of the Pilgrims in history? It is not so much what they did as what they were. They were the world's greatest individualists, and their individualism was inspired by a deep religious conviction of the integrity of the human soul. It was that spirit that led them to leave the land of their fathers and to seek a wilderness in which, if they were not comfortable, they could at least be free. The noblest charter of individualism is the Constitution of the United States. Its great purpose was to insure local self-government and to protect the inviolable rights of the individual. It made a reality of the noble preamble to the Declaration of Independence that governments did not create men but men created governments, and that the individual had rights which no government could deny. With this theory of government we transformed, in a space of time that could be literally measured by two lives, one of the smallest nations into the master State of the world. In so doing we built up a civilization greater in diffused comfort and in equal rights than any other nation, and it is this theory of government which we are asked to abandon in the hysteria of the present economic crisis.

The question rises above any question of economics. It vitally affects the manhood of the American people. I greatly regretted the action of the Government in devaluing the dollar and repudiating our obligations to pay, as provided in the contract, but these fiscal errors, if they are errors, are as nothing to the devaluation of the manhood of the people in the administration of the N.R.A. law. American industrialists who wanted to manage their own business in their own way were terrorized by threats of "economic death", and in accepting the servitude of the Blue Eagle they have bowed as truly to Gessler's cap as did the citizens of Altorf until William Tell showed the road to freedom.

It is true that the President recently said that what was happening was not revolution but evolution, but hardly had he said so when his chief adviser, Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell, in a recent issue of Today, said: "The real economic revolution is just beginning in the United States. It is a fundamental error to assume that we have reached the end of the 'swing to the left' and that we may forego any further important policy changes."

All of which is the professorial equivalent of the more picturesque phrase of General Johnson, who grimly said to the industrial representatives of the United States in convention assembled, "You ain't seen nothing yet." What that means was shown by Professor Tugwell in the same article, when he said: "If industry, working as it now has a chance to do in cooperation with the Government, will adopt policies of low prices, high wages, and a planned use of its capacity, foregoing speculative profits in some periods as well as speculative deficits in succeeding ones, all the objectives will have been accomplished."

Translating this into plainer speech, it means that the industrialists of this country are directed by the bureaucrats to increase their expenditures and simultaneously lower their receipts. If this policy can be enforced, then one business in America will be prosperous. It will be the manufacture of red ink.

While the now famous Dr. Wirt rendered a service to his country in calling attention to an undeniable menace to our institutions, he unfortunately defeated his own purpose by overemphasis of a false analogy. No one believes that President Roosevelt is either a Kerensky or a Stalin. He is too forceful a man to play the role of the weak and vacillating Kerensky and he is too patriotic an American to assume the role of Stalin. The possible reaction to this overstatement with its anticlimax may lead too many Americans to believe that there is no truth in the charge that our form of government is being undermined by socialistic methods of government. That a social revolution is in progress which involves the very foundations of the Republic was admitted by Donald Richberg, the leading counsel for the N.R.A. He says, "The long-discussed revolution is actually under way in the United States. There is no need to prophesy. It is here. It is in process. In many other countries there have been revolutions since the World War—each one with surprisingly little bloodshed, but with a tremendous exercise of force and oppressive power. * * * The violent overthrow of parliaments and rulers is nothing new, but the peaceful transition of all departments of government from one fundamental concept of a political economic system to another is different." No words could be plainer than that.

If other confirmation is needed as to the intentions of those who are now in high official place, it would be enough to refer to the many speeches of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, who is too honest a man to clothe his purposes in ambiguous language. In more than one address Mr. Ickes has emphasized his belief that the American experience in democracy has hitherto been a failure, and that the pioneer period of our history had resulted in, to quote him, "our national degradation." In his judgment the descendants of the conquering pioneers more and more lived lives of ease and comfort, while profits continued to pour in as the result of physical slavery in the South and economic exploitation in the North.

I had thought that the progress of America was one of the most stupendous pageants in the annals of the world, and that nowhere in any other country or at any other time had the average man reached so high a plane of comfort and liberty and self-respect. Secretary Ickes seems to believe that we should regret our past and turn hopefully to the new millennium of the "brain trust", whose love of liberty is shown by the imprisonment of a man because he was willing to take less for his labor than some of his competitors. We are now to have the glorious millennium of an age in which, under the planned economy, no man can work or sell the product of his labor except by the gracious permission of a Washington bureaucrat. I confess I prefer the liberty of the individual, which we owe to Franklin and Washington, to Jefferson and Hamilton, to Webster and Lincoln. The individual may use his liberty to make mistakes, but that is a part of his liberty, but surely it is better than to be a guinea pig, to use Alfred E. Smith's striking phrase, upon which the "brain trust" experiments so futilely.

I appreciate that the President is a great leader. Few of his predecessors have ever surpassed him in swiftness of decision or courage in action. We do not question his qualities as a leader, but we do feel greatly concerned as to where he is leading us. Some of us are not prepared to give up so quickly the well-tested institutions of our country in favor of a new scheme of government, whose boundaries are not prescribed and whose objective is not clear. We are not prepared to tear down in a day what it has cost the past efforts of over a century to erect.

Nothing better illustrates the avowed purpose of the present administration to turn our Government into a unitary socialistic republic than one of the latest acts of the N.R.A. administration. It has always been apprehensive that the judiciary, which is the last line of defense for constitutional liberty, would declare their ambitious project unconstitutional in respect to trade and commerce within the States, and that fear was well founded, for in at least four different jurisdictions both Federal and State courts have now declared that the National Recovery Act, so far as it attempted to regulate the factory and the farm within a State, is unconstitutional. Let me say in passing that the two recent decisions of the Supreme Court in the Minnesota moratorium case and the New York milk case in no respect weaken the views thus expressed by these Federal courts, for in these recent decisions the Supreme Court was only discussing the reserved powers of the States. No question as to the powers of the Federal Government was involved.

Conscious of this rising tide of judicial decision, the N.R.A. resumed its movement to have the States pass independent legislation to make the National Recovery Act the law within their own sphere of power. Not content with suggesting this to the States, the N.R.A. administration on February 11 drafted a model law for the acceptance of the States; and I want to draw your attention to the second section of that act:

"SEC. 2. To effectuate the policy of this act, the Governor is hereby authorized to consent to the President of the United States utilizing State and local officers and employees in effectuating the policies of the National Industrial Recovery Act in accordance with the provisions of section 2 (a) of that act."

I question whether any more humiliating proposal was ever made to the States. It invites them to surrender their police powers to the Federal Government so that every State official would become merely an officer of the President. If there were at the moment any pride in the States, they would resent the suggestion as preposterous. Imagine great historic States like Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Illinois authorizing their Governor to crawl to the throne of Federal power and ask the President to become in fact the super-Governor of those States in the matter of police administration. The fact that no attention has been paid to this marks the supreme demoralization of constitutional morality in this country. It would be the final act of surrender by the States of the power which they had so jealously reserved in creating the Union. It makes waste paper of the tenth amendment to the Constitution, which was intended to make inviolable the reserved rights of the States. It realizes the dream of Alexander Hamilton, who, in the Constitutional Convention of 1787, advocated the abolition of the States. He took the floor on June 18, 1787, and, referring to the States, he said: "If they were extinguished, I am persuaded that great economy might be obtained by substituting a general government. I do not mean to shock the public opinion by proposing such a measure. On the other hand, I see no other necessity for declining it."

This speech was received with amazement. As one member of the Convention said, "Hamilton had many admirers, but no supporter." His speech was never thereafter referred to in the Convention, and soon thereafter Hamilton left the Convention and did not return for many weeks thereafter, and then only for short periods. Conscious of the amazement of the Convention, Mr. Hamilton subsequently tried to correct it by saying: "By an abolition of the States I meant that no boundary could be drawn between the National and State legislatures and that the former must therefore have indefinite authority. If it were limited at all, the rivalship of the States would gradually subvert it. As States I think they ought to be abolished, but I admit the necessity of leaving in them subordinate jurisdictions."

If the proposed law shall now be adopted by the States, then Hamilton has had his wish, for the States are virtually abolished if their entire police administration is turned over to the President to do with as he will in the regulation of all trade and industry.

I appreciate that the "new deal" is a catching phrase, but it might be well for Americans to recall what the old deal was. It was the work of Washington and Franklin, of Hamilton and Marshall, of Webster and Lincoln, and under that old deal our Nation had grown from one of the smallest of the nations to be the master State of the world. Notwithstanding all the ballyhoo of radio and press, which gives but one side of the story, I refuse to believe that Professor Moley was as wise as George Washington, or Professor Tugwell as sagacious as Dr. Franklin, or General Johnson as great an executive as Alexander Hamilton. If it were possible to recall the dead from the land of the spirits, I would willingly exchange these apostles of the new deal for one hour of the old deal of George Washington or Benjamin Franklin.

Should this ambitious program of social reconstruction, which Congress made only temporary to meet an emergency, now become permanent, then our Government in the vital matter of trade and industry will differ in degree, but not in kind from the governments that now regulate the industrial life of the individual in Italy, Germany, and Russia.

I have endeavored throughout this address, which is made in no spirit of narrow partisanship but simply in that of patriotism, to do full credit to the leadership of President Roosevelt. Possibly there has never been since Thomas Jefferson a more attractive leader of the masses; but whatever his merits, this Government is greater than any one man, and we are not the children of Hamelin to follow the dulcet flute of the Pied Piper, especially as some of us see ahead only the yawning abyss of fiscal bankruptcy and economic bondage. It is interesting how history repeats itself, not only in events but in the reincarnation of personalities. Of all the great rulers who governed the destinies of imperial Rome, none was more attractive than the Emperor Augustus. He was young, affable, generous, kindly, and well meaning, and his many graces of character were reflected in his personal beauty. He, too, came to the throne of power in a great emergency, when his great uncle had been a victim of the jealousy of envious senators. No one can question that Augustus did much to bring the emergency to an end and to restore peace in his country, but it was at the sacrifice of its liberties. He induced the senate to delegate all its powers to him for a period of 10 years. The senate never regained it, and each 10 years Augustus and his successors celebrated the absorption of the power of the Senate, which meant the end of the Roman Republic. Similarly the American people were assured that these emergency proposals were only temporary and for a special purpose, and that the legislative powers that Congress had abdicated would be restored to the Great Council of the Republic. It remains to be seen how far the parallel will persist; but as long as human nature is human nature, the Executive—whether the President be Mr. Roosevelt or his successor—will not readily surrender powers which under the pretense of an emergency the Executive has taken from Congress. If our form of government is to be restored, it will be for the American people to do so.

Future historians will be greatly puzzled why the American people, after clinging to their institutions for nearly 150 years, seemingly surrendered them so readily. For this extraordinary change in the spirit of the American people there are many reasons, but one of them, and possibly the greatest, was that under the pressure of an emergency, free discussion, which is the life force of a democracy, was virtually destroyed until recent months. Those of us who attempted to protest against so radical a change in our form of Government were generally denied an opportunity to express our views, either in the press or over the radio, while the administration used the public funds for propaganda purposes to an extent for which there is no precedent in our history in times of peace. A few fearless and patriotic newspapers were notable exceptions. The Chicago Tribune, Daily News, and Chicago Journal of Commerce, the New York Herald Tribune, the Baltimore Sun, and the Los Angeles Times opened their columns to protestants and unlimbered the artillery of their editorial page. Nothing better illustrates the undemocratic spirit of the administration than the attempt that was made to shackle the press by the N.R.A. It had the big stick of a potential threat to license the newspapers of America and thus go back to the time of the Star Chamber when no newspaper could be published without its consent. Slowly and grudgingly the N.R.A. agreed to write into the newspaper code a disclaimer of any intention to interfere with the liberty of the press, but as long as there was the threat of licensing the papers, it did not greatly matter whether the first amendment to the Constitution was written into the code or not.

Given to the Administrator of the N.R.A. the right to license a paper, there was his corresponding right to revoke a license, and as long as this threat was held as a great club over the newspapers of the land there could not be complete freedom of expression. I mention all this to pay a tribute to the distinguished journalist who has honored you and me in presiding at this dinner. No one made a more valorous attempt to defend the freedom of the press than Col. Robert McCormick. Wherever an opportunity was offered to him he publicly protested against any attempt, however specious, to put the press into shackles. He has rendered many distinguished services to his Nation, but none so great as the fight which he, at times almost single-handed, made in defense of that liberty of the press, without which our democratic institutions would be a hollow sham.

What he did for the press it is for the industrialists of America to do for the freedom of business. Unless you have lost the American spirit, you cannot welcome the permanence of a system whereby you conduct your factories by the sufferance of the Federal Government and compensate your labor as required by some labor organization. Do not sacrifice your hard-earned freedom for temporary advantage. Do not sell your birthright for a mess of pottage.

BOUNDARIES OF THE NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, N.MEX.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H.R. 8982) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. This is necessary in order that the committee may consider a slight amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

GRAIN FUTURES ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE] may have the remainder of this week within which to file a minority report on the bill (H.R. 9471), to amend the Grain Futures Act to prevent and remove obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grains and other commodities by regulating transactions therein on commodity futures exchanges, by providing means for limiting short selling and speculation in such commodities on such exchanges, by licensing commission merchants dealing in such commodities for future delivery on such exchanges, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

A.A.A. PROCESSING TAX ON HOGS

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, prior to the new deal it was lawful for eastern farmers to raise a few hogs each year, butcher them, and sell enough of the dressed pork for cash to enable them to pay their county, town, and school taxes without being subjected to a Federal tax for this privilege. Such for a century and a half has been the custom among thousands of farmers in New York State and throughout New England. The usual practice has been for each farmer to raise a limited number of hogs, put down one or two of them for his own use, then sell the others to regular customers or exchange pork for merchandise.

Now, under the socialistic regimentation system, the Government has adopted a scheme to tax the farmer who raises, kills, and sells his own hogs. Failure on his part to pay the tax or make an accurate report of the transaction, as required by law, is punishable by a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or by both fine and imprisonment.

In their daily ballyhoo over the radio describing the benefits of the A.A.A., the bureaucrats have failed to stress the tax features and the criminal provisions of the act as they apply to the small farmer in the Eastern States. The farmer in the West and South who produces and sells hogs alive, which is the usual practice in the large hog-producing areas, is not subject to these regulations and is required to make no report nor pay any processing tax. I mention this because what I shall have to say applies particularly to the farmers of the Eastern States.

The provisions of the A.A.A. and the regulations adopted to carry out the law are of very great importance to over 2,400 farmers in my congressional district who in the past have raised, killed, and marketed each year on the average of from 3 to 7 hogs. Under the terms of the A.A.A., the farmer who slaughters his own hogs and sells the pork is a "processor" and subject to the processing tax. The processing tax has been increased by the Secretary of Agriculture from 50 cents per hundredweight on November 5, 1933, to $2.25 per hundredweight on March 1, 1934.

The record the farmer is required to keep "with respect to the slaughter of hogs of his own raising and the sale of any of the products thereof" is explained in a bulletin issued by the Government, from which I quote:

He is required to keep a written record showing:
(a) The date on which the hogs were slaughtered.
(b) The number of hogs slaughtered.
(c) The live weight of the hogs slaughtered (where not practicable to do this, he may make an estimate of the live weight of the hogs, showing the basis used in arriving at this estimate).
(d) The hog products sold after November 5, 1933, the weight thereof, the price paid therefor, the date of the sale, and (where practicable) the name and address of the person to whom sold.
(e) The hog products consumed by himself, his family, employees, or household and the actual or estimated weight thereof.
(f) The live weight of hogs processed for the producer, his family, employees, or household, together with the names of the processor thereof.

This, however, is only the beginning of the red tape to which the small farmer is subjected under the A.A.A. He must file a processing-tax return. Here is what the Government bulletin requires:

As soon as a producer has sold or exchanged, on or after November 5, 1933, in excess of 300 pounds of hog products, derived from the hogs of his own raising which he has slaughtered, he becomes liable for a processing tax. The producer must file a processing-tax return of the products sold in excess of the exemption on or before the last day of the month following the month in which the sale or exchange of such products exceeded 300 pounds.

The only method by which the small producer of hogs can legally escape the processing tax is to sell his hogs alive or keep within the technical exemption of 300 pounds, which he, together with his own family, employees, and household may sell or exchange during any marketing year. If, however, he sells in excess of 300 pounds, he is subject to a tax on the excess, and if he sells in excess of 1,000 pounds he loses the exemption and is taxed on the entire amount.

It has been customary for the small farmer to trade some of his dressed pork for merchandise or services, but now under the A.A.A. he cannot do this without paying the processing tax, unless, of course, he keeps strictly within the exemption. This new-deal plan completely upsets a custom that has prevailed among the farmers of my district for years.

If the farmers of the district which I have the honor to represent attempt to follow the time-honored local custom of killing and marketing pork, the tax in the aggregate will amount to approximately $71,000 per year.

This is a most unjust discrimination against eastern farmers. They have not been responsible for the surplus of pork which inspired the experiment of destroying more than 5,000,000 hogs.

What I have had to say is not captious criticism. Regardless of how I may feel about this discrimination and injustice, I have attempted in restrained language to point out to many distressed farmers the necessity of keeping out of the clutches of this drastic law. If I were to state that the A.A.A. had been of no benefit to the farmers of New York State, I would be charged by the administration as a "Tory", "a chiseler", and a rank partisan. I do not need to make the assertion. An official of the administration has spoken on this point with highly commendable frankness. On April 5, 1934, Chester C. Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, addressed a conference of extension workers and representatives of farm organizations held at Syracuse, N.Y. Here is what Administrator Davis had to say:

I realize that I am talking to a group representing a region that has not been directly and favorably affected by one of the major programs of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The purpose of this conference is to lay all the cards on the table, face up, discuss with you the fundamental theory underlying the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the objectives of the Administration operating under it, and to find out in what way the powers conferred on the Department of Agriculture under the act can be utilized on behalf of New York agriculture.

This conference—

Administrator Davis continues—

is devoted especially to the agricultural problems of your great State. I say to you frankly that the case of the Adjustment Administration in New York cannot be balanced if you take into account only the direct and immediate benefits to your farmers arising from the program undertaken up to date.

This broad admission would not have been made by Administrator Davis if there had been even one direct benefit to the farmers under the Agricultural Adjustment Act to which he could have pointed. Face to face as he was with the representatives of farm organizations who knew the facts, he further admitted that in some cases the effects upon New York State farmers had "been adverse." The adverse effects he mentioned were something the farmers already knew. Here is what Administrator Davis said:

I have in mind particularly the increase in the cost of feed and of sacks.

It was not necessary for him to stop with the enumeration of the increased cost of feed and sacks. The farmers know that the processing tax has increased the cost of many other things they have to buy out of all proportion to the price they receive for what they produce. The N.R.A. has added still more to the cost of what he buys.

Instead of going into further detail, however, Administrator Davis sought to allay the existing hostility to the act by pointing out that the Federal Government had assisted the farmers by the expenditure in New York State of $75,000,000 for employment under the C.W.A. He did not, however, explain to the farmers that of the $693,000,000 expended for the national program of the C.W.A. the taxpayers of New York State will have to pay $231,000,000. To be more specific, the taxpayers of New York State will be called upon to pay $231,000,000 taxes, of which only $75,000,000 has been allocated to and spent in New York State.

Administrator Davis also pointed out that up to March 1, 1934, $49,000,000 had been granted to New York State from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. He did not tell the farmers that of the $401,000,000 for the relief of the Nation, the taxpayers of New York State will have to pay over $133,000,000 and receive back only $49,000,000.

Whatever the Government spends under any of the alphabetical organizations for the 48 States, the taxpayers of New York State will pay one third of the whole sum.

It would have been more to the point for Administrator Davis to explain to the farm organizations that if the A.A.A. is rigidly enforced the farmers of New York State who continue to raise, kill and market their own hogs will pay a processing tax amounting in the aggregate to $700,000 annually.

The farmers, of course, many of them, will go out of the business of raising hogs, except for their own use, rather than go through the red tape of keeping complicated books, reporting to the revenue collector, and then run the risk of being fined and imprisoned for some inadvertent mistake that may be construed as an attempt to evade the processing tax.

Mr. Speaker, the difficulty does not end there. Telegrams are pouring in here now, from the small processor of the State of New York who cannot pass the processing tax along to the consumer. It means their ruination. It means that 29,000 farmers who raise hogs to pay their taxes in the fall must, if they continue to do so, pay a processing tax amounting to $700,000; or if they attempt to sell their hogs alive to escape the tax they may find that the market for live hogs will have been destroyed.

CODE OF FAIR COMPETITION FOR PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 364 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment is made.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to investigate the administration of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry and such other person or persons as may have information pertaining thereto on practices obtaining in the petroleum industry as defined in such code, and on prices and production quotas effective since the approval of such code, with a view to ascertaining whether any such practice, price, or quota is unjust and inequitable to any interest involved and, if so, whether further legislation is necessary for the protection of such interest. The administrator of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry is requested to cooperate with the committee in carrying out the purposes of this resolution.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report to the House during the present session of Congress the results of its (consulations and) investigations, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present session of Congress in the District of Columbia, as a whole or by subcommittee, at such times, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary.

The chairman of the committee or any subcommittee thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Page 2, lines 9 and 13, after the word "present" where it occurs in both places, strike out the words "session of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by agreement the debate on this resolution has been limited to 30 minutes, 15 minutes of which time I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], to be yielded by him as he may see fit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the .gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple resolution reported by the Rules Committee to authorize a select committee of five to investigate the administration of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry. There is nothing secret or unusual about it, and it has been introduced because officials of the State of Texas, which, of course, is very vitally interested in the production and sale of petroleum and its products, are anxious to know certain facts and figures on which the petroleum administrative board has determined the allocation of production and refinery capacity throughout the United States.

The committee, of course, will have no power to report favorably or unfavorably upon any bill. It has no power to take any action in the premises other than to report the results of its investigation.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Are any of the other oil-producing States asking for this resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. I cannot answer the question of the gentleman, because I do not know. I think not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Was the question whether other States were interested?

Mr. BAILEY. Whether other States had asked for the investigation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. A great many of them have, Wyoming, Oklahoma, and others have asked for this investigation. There are some 19 States. Of course, the consumers on the Atlantic seaboard are very much interested.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman stated that there is nothing unusual about this resolution. Will the gentleman tell the House when a resolution of this character was ever introduced or ever considered by the House before this time?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. I think they are considered very frequently. This is a resolution to investigate certain matters; of course the codes are new but investigations are not.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This is a resolution to investigate the code of fair competition of an industry. The first of its kind ever called up here.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not to investigate the code.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does the code grow out of the N.R.A.?

Mr. BAILEY. This resolution is to investigate the administration of the code of fair competition.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That grows out of the N.R.A.?

Mr. BAILEY. This power under which it is exercised grows out of a particular section of the Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Has the industry exhausted its means before the National Recovery Administration?

Mr. BAILEY. This is not a request from any industry. This request comes from the representatives of some of the sovereign States seeking the investigation. We are not representing any part of the industry or any part of the people engaged in the business. We simply want to see what facts, figures, information, and calculations the Petroleum Administrative Board have used in the allocation of production and refining capacity in the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If it is sound for the Congress to embark upon an investigation of this character with reference to the petroleum industry, there is nothing to prevent the Congress from investigating the code of fair competition of every industry? To me it is rather an unusual resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. So far as I am concerned, no. There is no objection to any investigation of any industry or the code for any industry.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If the Congress should be impressed with the fact that injustices were being worked out as a result of the administration of any code, would not the gentleman think that Congress should make an investigation?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman from Texas will yield to me to answer the question, I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that I have received protests in reference to several of the codes, but I did not think I would be justified in introducing a resolution calling upon the Congress to make the investigation when we have an organization set up by law which I think is capable of making the investigation.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think that Congress has abrogated its right to make investigations?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No. Now let me ask, what is the cost of this investigation going to be?

Mr. BAILEY. Nothing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman is asking for no money?

Mr. BAILEY. No.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman expect to accomplish when he gets this resolution through. I am really interested in the resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. May I say in answer to the gentleman that we are not seeking to benefit, to protect, to aid, or to hurt industry. This resolution is introduced on behalf of the State of Texas and all other States producing oil, not because we want to benefit an industry, but because the State regulatory body wants to know the information upon which these rules are based.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I can add anything to what my colleague has already said about this resolution. I think I would be justified in saying that there are some irregularities that we have been unable to adjust without the authority of Congress to go into this investigation.

As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has stated, we are not here in the interest of any certain State. We are here in the interest of the oil business generally and 120,000,000 consumers of oil products. We want to know why gas can be sold for 16 cents in one State and just across the line in another State sold for 12 cents, and so on down the line. I could stand here and take an hour to tell you what we are trying to do by this resolution. May I say that we are not here to do an injustice to anyone or any certain locality but are seeking to secure the whole truth about the oil situation in order that all the people of the Nation may receive exact justice.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not a fact that under the code the States producing oil have been limited to a certain number of thousand barrels per day or per month, and in addition to that and in spite of the curbing of the industry we are getting oil in here from foreign countries at the present time?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Yes; that is a fact.

Mr. DONDERO. We want to find out about that situation?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There must be something wrong or why would the gentleman want this resolution? Can the gentleman tell me what is wrong with the Code Authority? General Johnson knows everything; does he not know about that?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman that we can produce enough oil in Texas in 10 days to last the world for an entire year. The production in Texas is reduced to less than one half of 1 percent. They are shipping oil from other countries into Texas all the time while we have been cut down to less than one half of 1 percent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What does General Johnson say about it? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. He does not administer the oil code.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. He does not say anything.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. That is the reason we want this committee appointed.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. You have never been able to get him to crack down on the right spot—is that it?

Mr. CARTER of California. What means have you taken to get an answer from General Johnson?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. We have written to the oil administrator and we have gone down there in person.

Mr. CARTER of California. You must have had some answer.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. Just a minute; as I understand, the gentleman has yielded to me, and I should like to have my question answered if the gentleman desires to answer it.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. We have asked the Department why they are shipping 81,000 barrels a day from California around through the Panama Canal, right by our front door, up the Atlantic seacoast.

Mr. CARTER of California. That is being done under the direction of the Oil Administrator, is it not?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. We have asked why they are allowing that. Before the Oil Administrator was appointed the shipments amounted to 46,000 barrels a day. Since the Oil Administrator has been appointed these shipments have practically doubled, and they are shipping the oil more than 5,000 miles around through the Panama Canal at a cost of 55 cents a barrel, when Texas can ship it less than 2,000 miles at a cost of 19 cents a barrel.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. In just a moment. We have discussed this matter with several of the Members from California, and we understand each other, and they know who is doing this and we know who is doing it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Who are the Members from California?

Mrs. KAHN. May I say to the gentleman that I am one Member from California who does not know all about it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. KAHN. From what the gentleman has just said, what they fear is California competition, and it cannot be possible that the gentleman is not satisfied with the administration of the oil code by Secretary Ickes, who is the real administrator.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. No; we are not afraid of competition; all we want is the same treatment to all the people.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Has the gentleman made any statement to the House as to whether there has been received a report from the Secretary of the Interior as to the necessity for the establishment of such a committee? In other words, has the committee or the gentleman received any communication from the Secretary of the Interior giving any light upon this particular proposal?

Mr. STRONG of Texas. I am going to be perfectly candid; the information we have received from the Interior Department does not agree with the information we get from the officials of the different States.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman will recall that in the revenue bill we placed two sections which make it possible to earmark every barrel of crude oil and every gallon of gasoline in such a way as to prevent the running of illegal oil, it being remembered that illegal oil was being run as high as 135,000 barrels per day up to last week in the gentleman's State and that some 28 or 30 refineries were closed down by order of the code authorities. The revenue bill should become a law today, and it is my opinion that it contains sufficient authority to regulate the overproduction of oil in such a way as to protect the entire industry throughout the Nation.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. The State officials of Texas are looking after the illegal production of oil, and the law is being enforced. The object of this resolution is to ascertain why the production of oil in Texas under the code should be reduced to less than one half of 1 percent of the possible production, while more than 100,000 barrels of oil per day are allowed to be imported into this counutry, and 81,000 barrels per day shipped from California through the Panama Canal to Gulf ports and Atlantic ports, right by Texas ports, the freight on these California shipments being 55 cents per barrel to Atlantic ports, while Texas can make same shipments at 19 cents per barrel. Further, information would like to be obtained as to why gasoline shipped from California to New York sold in New York at 12½ cents per gallon after being shipped about 6,000 miles when gasoline shipped from the same California oil fields sold in the States of Oregon and Washington, only a few hundred miles away, at 16 cents per gallon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised to find a gentleman on the Democratic side, a gentleman who, I take it, voted for the legislation creating the Oil Administration, introducing a resolution here that is evidently intended to tear down the work of the Oil Administrator.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman refer to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER of California. No; I refer to the author of the resolution.

Mr. COX. The resolution we are now considering?

Mr. CARTER of California. Yes.

Mr. COX. This resolution was offered by me in behalf of the Rules Committee. This thought did not originate with me, but came from others. It happens I am a Democrat who did not support the National Recovery Act.

Mr. CARTER of California. I was not referring to the gentleman's vote. I thought we were considering the resolution itself and not the rule and my remarks were directed to the author of House Resolution 283 rather than the author of the rule we are now considering.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. I will yield in just a few minutes.

I voted for the legislation creating an Oil Administration and providing for the establishment of other codes, but I did not vote for the legislation with the understanding that every time anyone was dissatisfied with some part of the administration of the act the House of Representatives was going to appoint a committee to go down there and investigate the matter.

The gentleman from Texas, the author of this bill, has an adequate and speedy and substantial remedy if he will only follow it. He has not sent one letter, he has not written one communication to the proper authorities, but he has said that he phoned down to the Administrator's office but did not get the satisfaction he wanted. Undoubtedly they told him they were going to allocate so many barrels to Texas, and he was not satisfied with the allocation. But he has not exercised his present remedy properly, and this he should do before asking for this investigation.

I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that I have supported this administration in its recovery program of relief whenever I conscientiously could do so. I propose to follow this course in the future. [Applause.] Now, I am not going to abandon that program by establishing a committee to go down and make this investigation.

(The time of Mr. CARTER of California having expired, he was given 3 minutes more.)

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. I will.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Do I understand that the gentleman says he has supported the administration?

Mr. CARTER of California. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the gentleman says that he is doing it now?

Mr. CARTER of California. Yes; I am. Opposing this resolution is supporting the President's program.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Is there anything in the resolution that will furnish a criticism of the administration?

Mr. CARTER of California. Yes; it is criticizing the administration when you set up a code authority and then appoint a committee to hinder and destroy the usefulness of that code.

Mr. BAILEY. Where is the clause in the resolution that hinders the code?

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman from California yield to me?

Mr. CARTER of California. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I call attention to the language of the resolution, "together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable." That is what they are going to do to the code.

Mr. CARTER of California. I want to say to the House that, in my opinion, this is an attempt to tear down the recovery program. If the gentleman from Texas is not in favor of the program, if he is not willing to stand by the recovery policy, stand by the President of the United States, if he desires to say that the President of the United States is wrong, that is one thing; but, unless he is willing to assume that attitude and say the President's program has been a failure and that we should try something else, then I say that he and the rest of us should vote against this resolution.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. The resolution says that "the committee is authorized and directed to investigate the administration of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry." We only investigate when we desire to find fault.

Mr. CARTER of California. We would not have a resolution for an investigation if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STRONG] had pursued his remedy. I think, gentlemen, the adoption of this rule would be a very serious mistake, and I trust that the Membership of this House will not be led into anything of this kind.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of California. I will.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How can the gentleman square himself as supporting the administration and opposing this resolution, which comes from the Democratic Rules Committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit me, perhaps he thinks the Democratic Rules Committee is not in step with the administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER of California. That may be; but I am not offering any suggestion of that kind at the present time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am not in sympathy with this resolution. Next to agriculture the oil industry is the most important in my State of Oklahoma. Before the House adjourned last night I made inquiry as to what would be the business before the House today, and I had no notice that such a resolution as this was pending or that it would be brought up for consideration this morning. We were notified that the Johnson bill (S. 752) would be brought up this morning for consideration, and I warn the Members of this House that this is an effort to embarrass the administration of the oil code, and those who vote for this resolution will find hereafter that they will be rightly accused of embarrassing the administration of this code.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course the gentleman will permit me to direct attention to the first part of his remarks. The resolution was brought up at the request of my colleague and myself because of a particular condition which we did not think necessary to bring to the attention of the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why?

Mr. BAILEY. Because it is not a matter to which Oklahoma ought not to be or would be opposed.

Mr. HASTINGS. The State of Oklahoma is vitally interested in the oil industry. Without going into details, the oil men of my State of Oklahoma have been at cross-purposes with the administration of the oil industry in the State of Texas.

Let us examine the resolution a little more closely. It was reported April 30. None of the Members representing the oil-producing States, including Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, or California, were notified when the hearings were held upon it before the Rules Committee. We were not notified that it was to be called up for consideration today.

The resolution is unusual in that it calls for an investigation by a special committee. Why should not the investigation, if one is necessary, be made by one of the regular committees of the House.

Then it will be noted that it is proposed to eliminate in line 9 the words " session of " and the same words in lines 13 and 14, so that the investigation may continue and be held as a club over the administrator of the oil code from now until the new Congress convenes on January 3, 1935, and in the event that the administrator does not yield to those claiming to represent the Texas oil industry, he would be threatened and embarrassed during the remaining months of the life of the present Congress or until January 3, 1935, because section 4 authorizes the committee to sit and act during the present Congress, as a whole or by subcommittee, whether or not the House is sitting or has recessed or adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary.

The only purpose of this resolution is to embarrass the present administrator of the oil code. Let no one be deceived by it. If this resolution passes, it will set a most important precedent, and it will be seized upon during the remaining days of this session of Congress by those not in sympathy with the administration of the many codes that have been adopted, and similar resolutions will be day after day presented and urged for consideration upon the Members of the House.

The question is clear cut. Those who favor the administration of the code of fair competition for the petroleum industry will vote against this resolution. In the event this resolution passes it will be carried in the headlines of every newspaper throughout the country that Congress has lost confidence in the codes adopted, and particularly in the administration of them.

I am not satisfied with the explanation why no members of the oil industry from the States other than Texas were not notified. Neither am I satisfied with the explanation why this resolution was called up this morning when it was expected that the Johnson bill would be considered.

I repeat that those favoring the administration will join in a record vote in defeating this resolution and give those in charge of the administration of the oil code a fair chance to administer it without the interference of an investigation by a congressional committee.

In my judgment a vote for this resolution will be interpreted by the people throughout the country, and so stated in the press, as being a vote against the administration. What is there mysterious about it? Why not frankly and openly state the reasons for the investigation? Why was the administrator of the oil code not summoned before the committee and given an opportunity to explain the matters complained of? The oil men of Oklahoma and other States are not asking for this investigation. They are satisfied with pressing their complaints, if they have any, before those charged with the responsibility of administering the oil code.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the two gentleman from Texas, I cannot see where there is any injustice or embarrassment in voting favorably on this resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why not investigate every other code?

Mr. BRITTEN. When an oil-producing State has had its production capacity cut down by the code authorities to one half of 1 percent, at a time when foreign oil is coming into that particular State, I think it might be reasonable to investigate the manner in which the allotment has been arrived at. Surely no harm can come from a fact-finding investigation, particularly when the investigation is to be made right here on Capitol Hill, at no expense to the Treasury. This resolution is undoubtedly presented in good faith. The State of Texas is entitled and the country is entitled to know the basis of the figures upon which any of these allotment regulations are made. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has said that this may bring about another investigation. Suppose it does. The resolution ought to be passed without delay and the investigation concluded at once. My young colleague Mr. BAILEY is entitled to a lot of credit for his presentation of the facts as they affect his State of Texas.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, Michigan is vitally interested in this matter. We have now become the fourth State in the Union in the production of oil. We use about 80,000 barrels a day, and I understand that our allotment is about 26,000 barrels a day. We in Michigan should like to know—as you of Texas would like to know, if California is sending oil past your front door—why the South and Southwest are piping 10,000 barrels of oil per day past our back door when we have plenty of oil in Michigan with no market for it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does the gentleman realize that today a new law goes into effect—I think the President signed the revenue bill today—and that in that law there are some eight or nine pages which give sufficient authority and jurisdiction to handle every phase of this particular situation?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the reduction and plowing under of crops such as cotton and wheat and to the birth control of pigs. I just noticed in the newspaper that a Duroc sow gave birth the other day to 23 little pigs—in utter disregard of the A.A.A. program.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FISH. Oh, I made that statement for the gentleman's benefit.

Mr. TRUAX. A sow that gives birth to any such litter as that usually does not live.

Mr. FISH. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in spending millions and millions of dollars to destroy pigs and cotton and various other crops, but I do believe in limiting and conserving oil. I believe it is the best thing that Secretary Ickes has done—conserving the oil industry in Texas and Oklahoma and other oil States. I believe the oil producers are satisfied in most of the oil-producing States and getting a fair price for the first time in years.

I see no reason why there should be an investigation or why Mr. Ickes should be investigated for applying common sense regulations to limiting the overproduction of oil and conserving our natural resources.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I cannot see why the Congress, having created this agency, should not, upon a proper case shown, investigate such an agency. Such an investigation would have an added advantage and I hope that the committee will remember it, because the investigating committee can ask General Johnson to explain his very comprehensive and significant remark: "You ain't seen nothin' yet." [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much interested in this resolution. Of course, it was expected that when it was brought on the floor, California would rise en bloc and oppose it, because the facts as presented to the Rules Committee were that California was getting the best of all this allocation by about 3 to 1. It is a beautiful State—atmospherically—I admit, but there are 47 others in the Union.

This complaint is not local to Texas. I do not recall the exact figures, but I am sure there are about 19 States which are interested in the allocations made. I am sure Oklahoma is one of the protesting States, although the Members from that State do not seem to know it. I recently saw a letter from the Governor of Wyoming, vehemently protesting against the action of the Board. Michigan is one of the many protesting States.

All this resolution does is to authorize an investigation of the real bases upon which these allocations were made, whereby production in Texas, for instance, and in the other States, is reduced to a minimum, thereby putting the independents out of business, and the great operators in California and elsewhere are building up a monopoly. To my knowledge, facts were presented to Mr. Margold and Mr. Ickes by responsible authorities—and I have been quoted in the newspapers before to this effect—which clearly demonstrated that if the administration of this act is carried on as it has been in the past, it would inevitably lead to a monopoly of the oil industry in three or four big companies, and the independents would be forced out of business.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if anybody from California was invited to appear before the Committee on Rules on this resolution? As one Member from California, and representing an oil territory, I have had no notice whatever of this resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, I do not know as to that.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The worst that Michigan and every other State can hope to get out of the passage of this resolution is a fair deal. I understand all the quota is going to the major companies, and the independents and small producing States do not have a show.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have received letters from gasoline distributors and consumers along the Atlantic seaboard and throughout the country, that they are being forced out of business, and crushed in the interest of the California producers and the big companies, with three times as much oil coming from California through the Panama Canal as came through the Canal in normal times, and selling it at a price on the Atlantic seaboard at less than it sells for in California.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman state who was heard before the Rules Committee in behalf of this resolution? Was there anybody there from the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not that I recall.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield briefly.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The State of Michigan was not heard, but we are in entire accord with the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was brought out after hours of consideration by the Committee on Rules, the last committee in this House which will attack the administration. Why, that committee is an arm of the administration. It is thoughtless and ridiculous to say that this resolution is an attack on the administration. Rather it is an effort to help the administration in the allocation of oil to the different States. I believe it will work beneficially to all the States in the Union. I know that Oklahoma wants it. I know that Oklahoma people are asking for its adoption.

Mr. HASTINGS. How does the gentleman know it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. By countless communications which we have received in the committee.

Mr. HASTINGS. But the gentleman said there was nobody from Oklahoma who appeared before the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But we have certainly heard from Oklahoma.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. If the gentleman from Oklahoma could see the telegrams from the State of Oklahoma——

Mr. HASTINGS. Then why did you not let Oklahoma and all the States interested in this resolution know that it was pending and that hearings were to be had, so that we could communicate and could study it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know nothing about that. Life is too short to notify all of the 435 Members of Congress as to every one of the 15,000 bills and resolutions introduced in each Congress.

I believe this resolution is not harmful to the administration. It is for the benefit of all the people of the country, the producer, the distributor, and the consumer, and I hope the resolution will pass, because a vote against the resolution is a vote in favor of the Standard Oil and its allies, while a vote for the resolution is one in favor of the countless small independent producers, every gasoline station, and every consumer in our country. That is the issue you will presently decide.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a unanimous-consent request. The State of Oklahoma is the second largest in oil production. I have not been able to get any time from the chairman of this side or the gentleman on the other side. I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means on oil. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes, out of order. I know that the Secretary of the Interior and his oil committee has been very diligent in trying to stamp out the bad situation brought about by unethical practices, with respect to the running of hot oil, and before this House votes on such a resolution as is proposed here today it should have facts relating to the new provisions contained in the revenue bill and the penalty for violation of the same. I do not believe that any Member would cast a vote for such a resolution if he knew beforehand that the very evils that are now complained of will be corrected in the future.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were ayes 55 and noes 49.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 178, answered "present" 1, not voting 118, as follows:

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 339

Mr. HASTINGS, Mr. McCLINTIC, and Mr. AYERS of Montana asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD on the resolution.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein House Joint Resolution 339, introduced by me yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced House Joint Resolution 339, which memorializes the States and Territories of the United States to require all teachers, instructors, and employees of the public schools and other public institutions to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

The press this morning reports that 700 teachers, giving names and addresses, refuse in one of our large cities to swear allegiance to the Constitution of their State and the United States.

Communism, facism, nazi-ism, and bolshevism have been charged to many of our teachers and to others in and out of the service of our Government. But the ideals and principles of the American people stand erect and aloft, ever fostered and upheld by the traditions enunciated by the Constitution of the United States.

Congress should send out its message to the States and Territories of the Union that it stands back of them in perpetuating the principles of the Constitution by extending the great privilege of teaching the youth of the Nation and of directing the course of their thought only to such teachers and employees of our public schools as will hold our Constitution sacred, which happily has made possible our great public-school system.

Our children taught its ideals and principles, men and women of the future will cherish and foster them, and our Constitution will be preserved as a blessing to posterity.

Prompt action on the resolution should be forthcoming. It is incorporated below:

House Joint Resolution 339

House joint resolution memorializing the States and Territories of the United States to require the taking of an oath of allegiance to the Constitution of the United States by all teachers of the public schools and other institutions of learning, and for other purposes

Resolved, etc., That it is the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives that each teacher, officer, and employee of every public school or other public educational institution in the United States shall, before assuming the duties of his position or office, be required by law to take substantially the following oath:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

State of ———, county of ———.

I (name in full) having been duly appointed by the board of education of (district, city, or town) an employee of the public schools of the (district, city, or town) do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully discharge the duties of the aforesaid office, and that I have neither promised, nor paid, nor has anyone to my knowledge either promised or paid, any monetary or other valuable consideration to any person for influence or other assistance in securing my appointment or promotion.

PASSING (?) LEGISLATION BY UNANIMOUS CONSENT

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I want to exhibit something of the futility and waste of time involved in undertaking to pass legislation on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which is not only meritorious but which has for a background many precedents.

H.R. 3206, a bill for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado, is merely an extension to the State of Colorado of the same legislative authority to its department of agriculture to exchange lands or timber lying within the existing boundaries of a national forest for lands in private ownership situate within 6 miles of such boundaries, which has heretofore been granted in the case of several States and which in the case of these States has not only proved successful and satisfactory but which has operated without protest or objection from any source. And yet when the bill comes up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, consideration is objected to by some Member, without any satisfactory statement of the grounds of objection or any opportunity afforded the proponent of the bill to properly explain its purposes. If the objector undertook to state his objections or the proponent of the bill undertook to explain its purposes, other Members having bills on the calendar would immediately call for the regular order, cutting off discussion and bringing on the objection.

The following is the record of H.R. 3206 on the Unanimous Consent Calendar during the present session:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 5, p. 6156]

EXCHANGE OF LANDS ADJACENT TO NATIONAL FORESTS IN COLORADO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the operation of this bill, lands outside of the exterior boundaries of national parks may be exchanged for lands within?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; lands lying within 6 miles of the present existing boundaries.

Mr. ELTSE of California. In other words, by this bill you can create a leopard-spot park?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; the real effect of this will be to consolidate existing parks. This bill was introduced in the last Congress by my predecessor. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands and approved by the Department of the Interior and by the Agricultural Department. Upon investigation, I found that a similar bill had been passed in 1929 for the State of Montana, and that since then similar bills have been passed for the forests in Oregon, South Dakota, and New Mexico. I have received many endorsements from county commissioners, chambers of commerce, and other civic bodies.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is it not a fact that one of the difficulties we have had in our national parks has been private holdings within the parks, and we have been trying to get rid of this situation for years? In this bill it is proposed to reverse the situation and exchange lands within the park for lands outside of the park.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am afraid the gentleman is confusing national forests and national parks. May I state to the gentleman how this bill will operate. There is a lot of cut-over stumpage bordering these forests. A lot of this land was in private ownership, and there is a lot of stumpage along the borders of the forests. The Government can take this land in exchange for grazing lands inside the forests or for timber or timberlands and foster new growths on the cut-over lands.

I should like to call the gentleman's attention to this statement from the Forest Service about the operation of similar laws we already have in effect:

"Since the enactment of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922, up to December 31, 1932, 923 of these exchanges have been effected, and through them the Government has acquired 1,395,359 acres in exchange of 432,268 acres, and national-forest stumpage valued at $2,775,357. On the lands acquired there has been stumpage which has exceeded in volume that given in exchange by the Government."

Also the Forest Service, referring to the operation of the acts passed for Montana, Oregon, South Dakota, and New Mexico, says:

"These laws have uniformly been found to operate to the mutual advantage of both the Government and the landowner, and no case has ever arisen giving the slightest cause of criticism. I know of no reason why such a law should not operate with equal success in Colorado."

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say that this is not an innovation. It has been approved by the Department of Agriculture and by the Interior Department, both of which have to O.K. these transfers.

Mr. ELTSE of California. In the next bill the gentleman is asking the same thing with reference to other national parks.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want this bill for my own State. If the other gentlemen do not want the general bill for their States, they may object when we come to it. I found they were doing this piecemeal in other States all over the country, so I conceived the idea of having a general bill, and later I introduced the bill H.R. 5368.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 16, p. 6652]

EXCHANGE OF LANDS ADJACENT TO NATIONAL FORESTS IN COLORADO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I will withhold the objection to allow the gentleman from Colorado to make a statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Apparently some controversy has developed between the Interior Department and the Department of Agriculture over these two bills. I should like to have this bill and the next bill passed over until the next Consent Calendar day to see whether or not they can adjust their differences on this legislation.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman suggests there is some controversy between the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture over these two bills. Both of these bills propose to give the Secretary of Agriculture complete power and authority to trade any piece of Government-owned land for any piece of privately owned land adjoining. Is that not true?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Within 6 miles of the present existing boundaries of the national forests.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROVISIONS OF FOREST EXCHANGE ACT OF MARCH 20, 1922

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5368, to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465).

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make a statement?

Mr. TRUAX. I withhold the objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Interior Department was represented all the time at the hearings before the Committee on the Public Lands when these bills were being considered. They made no objection whatever to these bills. On Saturday morning since these bills were reached the last time on the Consent Calendar, I received a letter transmitted by the Public Lands Committee stating objections which had been cured by amendment in the Committee on the Public Lands. I think the gentleman would be losing no rights to let these bills go over without objection to the next Consent Calendar day.

Mr. TRUAX. I would say that I personally want to stop such legislation that gives such vast power and authority to any official, whether he be a Cabinet official or otherwise.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if he is sure of the grounds on which he is basing his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I am basing my objection on the bill and upon the report attached thereto.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What would be the basis upon which you could ever make any exchange of property?

Mr. TRUAX. You could get the exchange ready for a committee of Congress to consider and have it acted upon.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Oh, that would be impossible.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, it could be done. It was done in Ohio when I was commissioner of public lands.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. On the next call of the Consent Calendar it will require three objections. There will be ample time in the meantime to discuss the matter.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The only comment I shall make on the above objection to the consideration of the bill is that one can well imagine Congress passing on several hundred land exchanges effected by the Department of Agriculture at each succeeding term of Congress. The exchanges would all be dead. Perhaps I may as well interject here the observation that the real objection to the authorization of the Department of Agriculture to make these exchanges is based on the theory that the Department, which functions through the Forest Service in the administration of the forest reserves, will play fast and loose with the interests of the Government, which will always get the worst of the deal. It would probably be an education for a Member of Congress holding this view to make a trade with the Forest Service. I shall show later that the balance in making these trades is on the side of the Government.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN NATIONAL FORESTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Are any private lands involved in this? Do they propose to exchange public lands for private lands?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In connection with all these forest exchange bills now on the statute books, necessarily they involve the right of the Department of Agriculture to exchange forest lands for privately owned lands. There could not be any exchange unless private lands could be exchanged for Government lands. This law has worked satisfactorily in Montana and four other States for the past 5 years. My bill is an exact copy of the Montana bill, which has been in effect for 5 years, without objection whatsoever.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If this bill becomes law and the Government takes over this property, the Government is not going to be required t opay taxes as it did in the Oregon cases, is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This bill is very similar to the bills that we have passed, on the same subject, for other States, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there was one objection to this bill previously, and I think three objections are required.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Three objections are required.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit that to be passed over without prejudice, and perhaps we can look over the matter and agree to it. Otherwise we will have to object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You think you can get three objections today, do you?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; we can get three.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish some gentleman, in addition to objecting to this bill, would say why, and give some substantial reason for objecting.

Mr. TRUAX. I will give the gentleman some reasons.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman is going to give me some experience that he has had, I suppose.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, yes.

Mr. ELANTON. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will consent to the passing over of this bill until one more unanimous-consent call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado, that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

A brief history of the bill itself, following the foregoing treatment of it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, in which nothing shall be said for the bill out of the mouth of its sponsor, will enable an impartial and disinterested person to determine how much of merit there is to the objections recorded above which prevented consideration of the bill. Yes; one thing will be said, and that is, that these objections did not come from Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, or Arizona, which States contain nearly all the forest reserves in the United States.

If this forest-exchange plan is a bad thing, it is singular that none of the Members of Congress from the States to be affected by it are to be found among the objectors to its passage.

The present sponsor of H.R. 3206 did not originate it. It was introduced in the Seventy-second Congress by his predecessor and was reported favorably by the Committee on the Public Lands and was objected off the Consent Calendar by one Member, just as my bill has been.

It was approved by the then Secretary of Agriculture, as shown by the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 24, 1931.

Hon. DON B. COLTON,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. COLTON: Reference is made to your letter of January 17, enclosing copy of H.R. 16156, a bill for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado, and asking for the views of this Department thereon.

The proposed legislation would extend the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465) to privately owned lands within 6 miles of the boundaries of the national forests in the State of Colorado; that is, it would make it possible to exchange national-forest lands or timber in the State of Colorado for privately owned lands within the area described in the bill when such lands are valuable for forestry purposes and can be obtained on the basis of value not less than the value of the publicly owned lands or timber given in exchange therefor.

Your committee, of course, appreciates that before the national forests were established a large area of pubicly owned lands bearing forest cover passed into private ownership; and therefore, when the national forests were created such lands were not included within their boundaries. In most instances the commercial timber has now been removed from these lands, but they contain a young growth of timber which would become increasingly valuable if it were protected and otherwise managed as a forest property. In the judgment of this Department, it is very desirable that lands of this nature be given protection, and it is felt that a law such as is proposed by this bill which would make it possible to acquire such lands by exchange would be in the public interest.

Your committee, of course, is familiar with legislation of like character which has been hitherto enacted in several instances. A measure in almost identical terms was enacted in the last Congress for the State of Montana, and may be found in volume 45, United States Statutes at Large, page 1145.

Sincerely yours,

R. W. DUNLAP, Acting Secretary.

The pending bill was also reported favorably and unanimously, after hearings, and also received the endorsement of the present Secretary of Agriculture, as shown by the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 20, 1934.

Hon. RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. DEROUEN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 10, enclosing copy of H.R. 3206, a bill "for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado", and asking for a report thereon.

The proposed legislation would extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465), to lands in the State of Colorado lying within 6 miles of the boundaries of the national forests in that State. In other words, it would make it possible to exchange privately owned lands located within 6 miles of the boundaries of national forests in Colorado for publicly owned lands or timber within the national forests in that State on the basis of equal value, if the Secretary of Agriculture should find that such privately owned lands were chiefly valuable for forestry purposes.

Your committee, of course, appreciates that when the national forests in Colorado were created, it was the policy of the Government to not include, insofar as possible, privately owned lands. Necessarily, large areas of timber-producing land had passed from the public domain into private ownership before the national forests were created. In most instances the commercial timber has now been removed from these privately owned lands. The lands are timber producing in character and have little value for any other purpose. If they are to produce another crop of timber, they must be managed and protected with that objective in view.

Legislation of the nature proposed by this bill was enacted for the State of Montana by the act of January 30, 1929 (45 Stat. 1145). In the judgment of this Department, permissive legislation of the character proposed would be in the public interest, since it will make it possible from time to time to acquire, by exchange on a fair basis, privately owned lands which unquestionably should be managed as forest properties as a part of the adjoining national forests. The enactment of the legislation would not add to the financial burdens of this Department.

Very sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

The bill, therefore, was considered and reported favorably by the Public Lands Committee of two Congresses and by two Secretaries of Agriculture.

The following paragraph from a letter from the Forest Service to the sponsor of the pending bill sets forth the legislative precedents for the bill, showing the enactment by Congress of similar laws affecting national forests in the States of Montana, Oregon, South Dakota, and New Mexico, so there is nothing novel or experimental in the bill:

APRIL 28, 1933.

Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MARTIN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 26 relating to H.R. 3206, a bill for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

A law practically identical with H.R. 3206 was enacted for the State of Montana January 30, 1929, and may be found in volume 45, United States Statutes at Large, page 1145. The act of February 2, 1922 (42 Stat. 362), extended the exchange authority to any privately owned lands within 6 miles of the Deschutes National Forest in Oregon, and the act of April 23, 1928 (45 Stat. 450), extended it to any privately owned lands within 6 miles of the Crater National Forest, also in Oregon. The act of February 15, 1927 (44 Stat. 1099), extended the exchange authority to any lands within 5 miles of the Black Hills and Harney National Forests in South Dakota and Wyoming. The act of April 16, 1928 (45 Stat. 431), extended the exchange authority to extensive private land grants adjoining the Carson, Manzano, and Santa Fe National Forests in New Mexico. These laws have uniformly been found to operate to the mutual advantage of both the Government and the landowner, and no case has ever arisen giving the slightest cause for criticism. I know of no reason why such a law should not operate with equal success in Colorado.

Very sincerely yours,

E. A. SHERMAN, Acting Forester.

Just what this bill will effect, how it will operate, and the desirable results to be obtained, are shown by the following memorandum prepared by the Forest Service for the sponsor of the bill:

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. MARTIN

Relating to H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to National Forests in Colorado:

This proposed legislation will not of itself add any lands to a national forest. It will extend the Forest Exchange Act to privately owned lands lying within 6 miles of the boundaries of the National Forests in Colorado; that is, it would permit the Government to acquire by exchange privately owned forest lands for national forest land or timber in the same State on the basis of equal value, the exchanges to be approved by the Secretaries of Agriculture and Interior. It should be borne in mind that when the national forests were first established the boundary lines were so drawn as to exclude as far as possible privately owned lands. Adjacent to the national forests are privately owned lands, which at one time contained a valuable stand of timber, which timber has now to a large extent been removed. The lands are primarily valuable for the production of timber. Their management as a forest property is desirable from the public-interest standpoint. In many instances such lands can be obtained by exchange to the benefit of the Government as well as the private owner, since it works toward the consolidation of the holdings of each. Since the enactment of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922, up to December 31, 1932, 923 of these exchanges have been effected, and through them the Government has acquired 1,395,359 acres in exchange for 432,268 acres, and national-forest stumpage valued at $2,775,357. On the lands acquired there has been stumpage which has exceeded in volume that given in exchange by the Government.

Other conditions sought to be effected by the operation of this legislation may be briefly mentioned. There are large areas of naked grazing land, entirely without timber, on the mountain slopes embraced within the boundaries of national forests. These lands will never bear timber. They may be exchanged to stock owners for cut-over timberlands adjacent to the forest boundaries which have little value for grazing. A sawmill owner may have a timber tract miles removed from his mill which he may exchange to the Government for adjacent timber. In making all these exchanges, the Forest Service and the Department of Agriculture work with a view to rounding out and consolidating, as it were, the forest reserves and lands in private ownership, each in their own sphere, the cut-over lands thus acquired to be cared for and retimbered. It does not require very deep reflection to show that this exchange law fills a need. The conditions calling for it existed on the ground, and the law grew out of the conditions.

This bill has been endorsed by various local organizations in the affected areas, chambers of commerce, Izaak Walton leagues, Rotary and other clubs, boards of county commissioners. Is not some weight to be attached to the fact that not a single protest has come from the affected areas?

There is, however, a protest. It comes from the Department of the Interior. Apparently there is some rivalry between two departments of the Government, some jealousy of jurisdiction over land. One thing is obvious, and that is, the land which the Department of Agriculture trades for must be in private ownership, and the land which it trades must be under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. It is difficult to see wherein the legislation treads on the toes of the Department of the Interior, and it is still more difficult to see that its objection should have any weight. Perhaps it has.

It is the opinion of the sponsor of this bill that there should be a general bill applying to all the forest-reserve States. When the sponsor of this bill learned that similar laws affecting the forests in four States had been passed, he introduced a general bill, H.R. 5368. That bill was also reported favorably by the Public Lands Committee of the House, on which there are Members from other forest-land States, and was also endorsed by the Secretary of Agriculture. This is conservation legislation, just as much as the original Forest Reserve Act. It is merely a perfecting of the original legislation and of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922. Under the terms of that act privately owned lands within the boundaries of national forests, if found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for forestry purposes, may be exchanged for an equal value of publicly owned land, or timber, within a national forest in the same State. The pending bill, H.R. 3206, merely extends this authority to lands within 6 miles of the existing boundaries of national forests in the State of Colorado, much of which lands, containing valuable timber, had passed into private ownership and had been cut over prior to the creation of the national forests. They may again become forests under the ministrations of the Forest Service. They are largely worthless for any other purpose. If an objector to this bill could go and look them over, he would laugh at the idea of having objected to their acquisition for forestry purposes. If such legislation could be reached for consideration under any other than a Unanimous Consent or Private Calendar, so that it could be debated on its merits, there would be no question about its passage.

THE CRIME BILLS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bills S. 2080, S. 2249, S. 2252, S. 2253, S. 2575, S. 2841, and S. 2845, the so-called "crime bills", with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the titles of the bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SUMNERS of Texas, MONTAGUE, MCKEOWN, KURTZ, and PERKINS.

PROCEDURE OF PUBLIC UTILITY COMMISSIONS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 350.

The Clerk read the House resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 752, an act to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 5 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from Massachusetts on behalf of the minority wants the usual time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I request the usual 30 minutes. I do not know that I shall use it all, but I should like to have it at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, this is the rule which provides for the consideration of the so-called "Johnson bill." The rule is an open one and provides for 5 hours of general debate.

The Johnson bill, which prevents public utilities from resorting to the Federal courts where no interstate commerce is involved, is a little unusual by reason of the fact that it was amended in the Judiciary Committee. The committee amendment is known as the "Lewis bill." The legislation is thereby left in the situation that those preferring the Johnson bill will vote down the committee amendment known as the "Lewis bill", and those preferring the Lewis bill will vote for the committee amendment.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman refers to LEWIS of the House, and not LEWIS of the Senate?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I refer to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado, Mr. LEWIS, our colleague.

The vote in the Judiciary Committee was particularly close, which also makes the question very interesting. The vote was 11 for the Lewis bill and 10 for the Johnson bill.

So that the House will appreciate the importance of the question I may say that it has been before Congress for many years. The question involves the resort of the utility companies to our Federal courts with the consequent delays and the expense and the alleged abuses to which such resort has given rise. The Johnson bill prevents a resort to the Federal courts unless an interstate question is involved. The Lewis bill gives the utility companies the choice between going into the State courts and the Federal courts, but denies to the utility companies the right they now have, and which it is claimed they have abused, of transferring a case from one jurisdiction to another after they have once selected their tribunal.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Have not the utility companies now the choice of going into a Federal court or a State court?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They have.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And they never choose the State courts, but always go into the Federal courts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know the facts about that, but as to New York State and New York City they have almost invariably resorted to the Federal Courts.

The legislative change sought to be accomplished by each of these bills does not embrace a new idea. I may say that nearly every member of the New York delegation, including myself, for years has attempted to correct what we claimed were the abuses of the utility companies rushing into the Federal courts and taking advantage of what we contend is a foreign jurisdiction. For instance, in New York it has often happened that the utilities commission having held hearings lasting years, and having made a ruling, and having fixed a rate, the utility company not having complied with the rate was thereupon taken into the State courts by the utilities commission; the matter has been heard at great length in the State courts, and then some dark night the utilities company would sneak up to the apartment of a Federal judge who was visiting in New York, from Texas or California, enjoying our sights and night clubs; and the utilities company would get a temporary injunction or restraining order which transferred the case to the Federal courts where it would be heard de novo with additional years and expense consumed in reaching a determination of the case.

That has been the usual situation.

Now, may I take as an example a small town, a little town up-State in New York, for instance. A water company has a dispute with its consumers over the rates to be charged for water. The water company is a New York corporation. All its business is done in New York State and in that town. All its customers live in the town. There is no interstate question involved at all. But under the pretext of a violation of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, the due-process clause, when that utility company sees fit they will rush into a Federal court before a judge who knows nothing about the local conditions and will fight out the issue in the Federal court, when every issue involved is between the residents of that particular town and the residents of the State of New York.

The State courts are plenty good enough for the people of our State. There are a few other persons or corporations who resort to the Federal courts rather than the State courts to determine their peculiarly local or domestic problems.

I am one of those who believe, and I have so stated very often, that there is no necessity for any Federal courts except our Supreme Court. I have stated heretofore that 99 percent of the cases brought in our Federal courts are brought through deceit or trickery, either under the guise of diversity of citizenship or some other alleged Federal question, when that issue could just as well have been tried in the State court.

For instance, we had in the State of New York some years ago an admiralty court which tried all admiralty cases. There was no complaint about the conduct of that court, but the court passed out of existence because the big steamship companies and the big lawyers representing them resorted to the Federal courts in every admiralty case. And so it is with practically every other case in the Federal court. They could just as well and more properly be tried in our State courts.

The Lewis bill, I may say, has another feature in it which will be called to your attention. Of course, I do not pretend to be able to analyze these bills with the same ability as the members of the Judiciary Committee or the distinguished lawyer from Colorado, but this main question has been on the lips of everybody in Congress and out for a great many years, and I am sure that every one here has taken a greater interest in this particular subject than in the ordinary legislation which comes before us.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. ADAMS. Just a few moments ago the gentleman stated something about justice being obtained in State courts. The gentleman undoubtedly recognizes cases where justice would be dealt with better in the Federal courts than in the State courts, where there is no connection whatsover with State utilities on the part of the judiciary, counsel, directors, or the holders of stock.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have greater faith in our State courts and the judges that preside over them than to believe, as the utility companies do today, that because they are elected by the people their reelection will cause them to cater to the clamor—you might call it—of the people who are paying these rates and who feel that they are being unjustly gouged.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Another thing is that the people of the State can get at the State judges, while these Federal judges cannot be removed except by death.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That does not apply in all cases, because in many States the judges are appointed for life. In those States the utility companies would have no cause for fear, and I am confident they will receive justice in the States where the judges are elected.

I believe the Johnson bill presents the proper approach to this question. [Applause.] As a lawyer, I will admit it may be drastic; but I believe that in a scandalous situation, such as we have had, with the arrogance of these utility companies, whose lobbyists right now swarm the lobbies and the galleries of this House, with their arrogance with legislatures and with this Congress, and their ceaseless propagranda, that a little spanking, as it were, such as we indulged in the other day by means of the stock exchange bill, may be the most effective way of bringing these corporations to terms with our people. Of course, they realize that something is going to happen to them; and so rather than take the whole "licking" they are now attempting to lobby through the Lewis bill as a half-way measure or the lesser of two evils, although they are still threatening and fighting to the last ditch to prevent any bill passing.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it not a fact that the arrogance of the public-utilities lobby is matched in many respects by the arrogance of the Federal courts of this country, who are judges, lawmakers, and executioner combined in one without responsibility to anyone?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am glad to have a distinguished Democrat join with me in protesting against even the existence of the lower Federal courts. It always surprises me when anyone from the South, for instance, asks for a new Federal district or for a new Federal judge, because I cannot appreciate how they, of all people, can make the request if they have any knowledge of the history of what these carpetbagging judges have done in that territory and what they have done to us in New York and the rest of the country.

It is almost the invariable rule that all these restraining orders and all these injunctions issued in behalf of the utility companies against the citizens of our States and cities have been issued by a visiting Federal judge spending a joyous vacation in New York and getting the extra $10 a day for the privations he suffers.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman believe that if we could limit the term of office of these Federal judges, requiring them to check in with the people and have the people pass on their qualifications about every 6 years, it might correct the situation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is only a half-way measure like the Lewis bill. Let us have no half-way doings.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that in many instances these utility corporations, when they cannot obtain all they desire from the utility commissions, jump into the Federal courts and go even as far as to demand and secure a receivership for corporations that should not be forced into receivership or bankruptcy, as has been done in several of the cities of the United States?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; and then some relative of the judge is appointed receiver, as has happened so often in Chicago and for which three Federal judges are about to be impeached.

Mr. SABATH. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. O'CONNOR. While I believe the Lewis bill is some improvement over the existing situation, I am primarily convinced that the way to meet this vexatious problem is to go "whole hog" and prevent these utility people from taking purely local questions into the Federal courts, and restrict them to the State courts as our other citizens are restricted.

I believe this House, after consideration of this most important measure, will pass this bill for which we have waited so many years. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman states he thinks the Lewis bill is an improvement over the existing situation. I wonder if he could explain just how it improves the existing situation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, the Lewis bill does this one thing. Once these companies have got into the State court, under the Lewis bill, they cannot then switch to the Federal court as they do now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They can switch now?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. Furthermore, under the Lewis bill the testimony taken before the Utilities Commission is at least prima facie evidence and the court does not have to go into the matter de novo, except for certain language of the Lewis bill which in my opinion would leave the door open for new evidence.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Of course, the gentleman realizes that under the Lewis bill if they have the option of going into the State or Federal courts, they will never go into the State courts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know that. They will always resort to the Federal courts.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Is it not true that the President of the United States favors the original Johnson bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know that.

I believe the way to meet this most important question is for this House to pass the Johnson bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting this rule. I voted for it in the Committee on Rules and I favor the passage of the Johnson bill, as distinguished from the Lewis substitute, after the rule is adopted.

This legislation, in one form or another, has been pending in Congress for a great many years. The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] introduced a bill, not in the same language, but to accomplish the same result, as far back as 1922, or 12 years ago.

The Senate bill which this rule seeks to make in order, introduced by Senator JOHNSON, of California, is sponsored by the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners. The chairman of the legislative committee of that organization is a former member of the Michigan State utility commission and a resident of the State of Michigan. That association sponsors the Johnson bill and is opposed to the Lewis substitute. That association says it is necessary to pass some such legislation as the Johnson bill to enable the State commissions, or to put it in another way, to enable the States to function properly and effectively in the control and regulation of rates within their boundaries. It, of course, only applies to intrastate rates. The scope of the bill is expressly limited to rates that do not interfere with interstate commerce.

It seems to me that there has been a great deal of false emphasis, or that the emphasis has been put in the wrong place, in the consideration of this legislation in the past few years, and one thing that has been falsely emphasized in the consideration of the matter is the question of diverse citizenship. The public-utility commissions attach little weight to the diverse-citizenship phase of the legislation. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts in rate cases is not dependent upon the diverse citizenship of the parties, but on the claim that the rates are confiscatory, and upon that ground or allegation the Federal courts have jurisdiction regardless of the citizenship of the parties. In other words, as I understand the decisions and the law, when confiscation is alleged by affidavits in Federal court it is the duty of the court to grant an interlocutory injunction.

This proposed legislation does not deprive anyone of due process of law. It does not deprive anyone of his day in court. There is no constitutional right involved. Congress has exclusive power to fix the jurisdiction of all inferior courts of the United States. Congress by law gave the lower Federal courts whatever jurisdiction they have in rate cases and it can by law take that jurisdiction away if it thinks it advisable to do so.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Something was said in my presence not long ago to the effect that if the Johnson bill were adopted, the right of appeal to the Supreme Court might be in doubt.

Mr. MAPES. There is no question as to that. I was going to bring that out later, but I will discuss it now. The Supreme Court of the United States will have the same right to review rate cases and to take into consideration the same questions after the passage of the Johnson bill as it has under existing law. The only difference will be that the appeal in all cases will be from the supreme or highest courts of the different States instead of some of them coming up through the lower Federal courts as is the case now. I do not think there is any dispute about that proposition at all.

It seems to me, too, that there has been a tendency in the consideration of this legislation to put a false emphasis upon the rights of the utilities and to ignore the rights of the States. The passage of the Johnson bill does not involve any question for or against utilities. It is simply a question as to whether or not States are going to be allowed to perform their proper functions in the supervision and fixing of rates, without interference of Federal law. It is a question as to whether or not Congress is going to continue to permit the utilities in important cases to thwart the will of the States and the State authorities.

The fixing of rates is distinctly a legislative matter, delegated by legislative bodies to commissions created for that purpose after adequate hearings have been had. It is in no sense a judicial function.

It was not so many years ago that the legislatures fixed rates themselves without delegating the power to the commissions, as, for example, the 2-cent-fare legislation on railroads. Subsequently this legislative duty was delegated to the commissions for action after full and complete hearings.

Under existing procedure, by virtue of Federal law, after full and complete hearings before a State commission, a public utility, if it is dissatisfied with the order of the commission fixing rates, has the choice of applying either to the State or to the Federal courts for an injunction to restrain the commission from putting its order into effect upon the ground that the rates would be confiscatory. If the utility chooses to bring such action in the lower Federal courts, such courts are authorized by Federal law to try the case de novo and to substitute their judgment, both on the facts and the law, for the judgment of the State commissions. This procedure not only causes great expense and delay but permits the courts to perform a legislative function instead of the commissions.

I quote from the hearings:

> The Federal Government does not subject its own regulatory agencies to the absurdity of a trial de novo for a judicial review of their own orders.

And again:

> It will thus appear that out of 47 States which have State commissions a review of a State commission order is now upon the record made before the commission in at least 43 of the States.

There is no question involved as to the superiority of Federal courts as against the State courts, or their inferiority. I have faith in both our Federal and State courts as a whole. I believe that State courts will adequately protect the rights of all litigants who come before them, and, of course, counsel for the utilities will see that their cases are properly tried. I do not join the opponents of this legislation in their criticism of the State courts in defense of their position.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I prefer to proceed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman this question: Do not the utility companies purposely go into the State courts and delay as long as possible, and then, just before the decision, go to the Federal court by way of dilatory tactics?

Mr. MAPES. That may have occurred in some instances. I do not think the State utilities commissions base their advocacy of the Johnson bill on that theory, however. They object to the procedure in the Federal courts because of the great expense involved and the delay in reaching a decision in the more important cases. Take the Illinois telephone case recently decided by the Supreme Court, for example. The case was started in 1923 and was finally passed upon by the Supreme Court on April 30, 1934. It may be that an order fixing rates made in 1923 would be entirely inapplicable in 1934 with changing economic conditions. The long delay in reaching an ultimate decision in any given case practically nullifies the work of the commission. One of the purposes of the Johnson bill is to prevent such delays.

Mr. BECK. Does the gentleman seriously contend that when the regulation of rates reaches the point of confiscation, it is not a judicial question?

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he reaches any such conclusion as his question intimates from what I have said, has misinterpreted what I have been trying to say.

Mr. BECK. I just happened to come in, and I heard the last part of the gentleman's statement that it was not a judicial question but a legislative one.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman does not dispute that?

Mr. BECK. No. But when it reaches confiscation they have their day in court.

Mr. MAPES. This bill does not take away their day in court at all. The utilities will have an opportunity to take their case into the State courts and test the question as to whether or not the rates are confiscatory after the passage of this bill, and if they are dissatisfied after the case has gone through the State courts they can appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. This bill will only deprive the lower Federal courts of the jurisdiction they now have over rate cases.

I think that no one will seriously question the delays and the expense of prosecuting cases through the Federal courts. If he does, I think one sentence of the opinion of the Chief Justice in the Illinois Telephone case a week ago—to which I have referred—might well be called to his attention, to wit:

Elaborate calculations which are at war with realities are of no avail.

I ought to say, in fairness to the Lewis substitute, that that is an improvement over existing law, but the public-utilities commissioners of the States oppose it and are in favor of the passage of the Johnson bill as it came over from the Senate. They do not want any half-way measure, and it seems to me that their position in that respect is perfectly sound. They ought to be given the assistance which this legislation will give them to make their work effective.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, there is one phase of this matter that has been called to my attention which I think at this stage of the proceedings, before we vote on the adoption of the resolution, should be called to the attention particularly of members of the Committee on the Judiciary. A rather unusual situation was presented before our committee on the application for a rule for the consideration of this bill, in that the Lewis substitute was favored by a majority of the committee, by a very small majority, and we had to prepare a rule which we thought would give to the House a fair opportunity to consider upon their merits both the original Johnson bill and the Lewis substitute, which was the majority report of the Committee on the Judiciary. With that understanding, and in order that there might be a very full and fair and free discussion of the merits of these two propositions, both of which have strong support among the Membership of the House, the committee decided to grant 5 hours of general debate upon the bill on the merits of these two respective contentions. Since we came into the House this morning I have heard it intimated that when we get into the Committee of the Whole, after exhausting the 5 hours of general debate on the merits of the proposition, it was possible that a point of order might be raised against the Lewis substitute upon the ground that it is not germane to the original Johnson bill. It will be recalled that the Committee on the Judiciary struck out all of the provisions of the Johnson bill after the enacting clause and substituted the Lewis substitute as an amendment. It seems to me, in all candor and as a matter of absolute good faith and fair dealing, that the original intention of giving both sides of this controversy a fair opportunity to have their views presented and a fair opportunity for a vote on the merits of the different propositions should be carried into effect, and the members of the Committee on the Judiciary ought to be willing that this rule be amended so that it would waive points of order against the substitute. I trust the chairman of the committee, who is really in the minority on this question, will agree to that proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And it is fair to assume that the Committee on Rules probably would not have given the rule to a minority of the committee. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I said, it was a very unusual proposition that was submitted to us and I would say to the gentleman that both sides were anxious to have this matter tried out on the floor of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman never knew of a rule being granted to the minority of any House committee, did he?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is correct in the statement that both the minority and majority desired to have a rule, an open rule, which would test the judgment of the House on this measure. Insofar as the chairman is concerned, and I trust insofar as we are all concerned, while the question of the making of a point of order, or whether or not a point of order would be made, has been informally discussed among some members of the committee, I know of no determination to make the point of order, and the chairman is very much in hopes that nobody will make the point, and that the House will have an opportunity to express its judgment with regard to these two propositions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With that assurance, which is characteristic of the gentleman from Texas always, I assume there will be no objection to amending the resolution before it is adopted, waiving points of order against the rule.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], in charge of the rule before moving the previous question, will offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 1, line 7, after the word "boards", insert "and all points of order against said bill and committee amendments are hereby waived."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 752, with Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special rule the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 2½ hours.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, under the arrangement effected between the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], whose amendment prevailed in the committee, and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], is to control one half of the 2½ hours which under the rule are allotted to the chairman of the committee.

I presume at this time it will be in order for me to yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] 1 hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, one half of the time is to be given to the proponents of the Lewis bill and the other half to the opponents of it and those in favor of the Johnson bill. I therefore yield one half of the 2½ hours allotted to me to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER]. Mr. GUYER is for the Johnson bill and against the Lewis bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 hour and 15 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I wish first to make a rather detailed statement concerning this bill. May I ask, please, that Members do not request me to yield until I complete my statement, which will probably answer some of the questions which at the outset may be asked?

At the outset I wish to say that our very good friend, Mr. EMANUEL CELLER, of New York, was to have opened the statement on behalf of the committee, as the ranking member of those who joined in the majority report. Unfortunately the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has been ill, as you know from the several permissions given for his absence, and he is now recuperating in a hospital. He telegraphed me as follows:

HOT SPRINGS, VA., May 7, 1934.

Congressman LAWRENCE LEWIS,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Gladly give you permission to use my name in any way to support your bill in opposition to Johnson bill. Regret illness precludes my active help.

Congressman E. CELLER.

Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter of governmental policy, as has been indicated not only by my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], but also by my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. It is not a partisan question at all. It is a question of how we look at a high and important problem of government. The statements made by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan are, of course, accurate as to the differences between the provisions of these two bills.

The Committee on the Judiciary devoted 3 full days, February 27 and 28 and March 1, 1934, to the hearings on this question. Many witnesses were heard, their statements taken under oath, and numerous briefs filed. All this matter is included in the printed transcript of the hearings. Thereafter the committee had extended conferences in executive sessions. I am sure all members of the committee have no other motive than to do what is best for the country.

It is with that thought that these extended hearings and discussions were had. It was with that thought that this substitute was offered to the so-called "Johnson bill." My friends who have preceded me have made it unnecessary to enter into an elaborate statement of the abuses which were developed in the hearings, which were shown to exist in the present Federal procedure in rate cases.

The statement by the majority of the committee summarizes the situation.

STATEMENT ACCOMPANYING MAJORITY REPORT

The Johnson bill (S. 752) seeks to withdraw completely from the district courts of the United States all jurisdiction in suits relating to orders of State administrative boards or commissions affecting rates chargeable by public utilities. The majority of the Committee on the Judiciary believe the bill presented corrects all present evils without wholly divesting the Federal district courts of all jurisdiction in rate cases.

Hearings were conducted by the committee throughout 3 days. The evidence at these hearings tended to establish that, under the present procedure in the Federal courts, grave abuses have arisen in some cases where utility corporations have sought injunctive relief from orders by State boards or commissions fixing rates. Out of the total number of rate cases considered, the percentage of those taken to Federal courts is extremely small but the abuses which have arisen in some of these cases appear sufficiently serious to require immediate correction. These abuses are chargeable not to any fault of Federal courts or Federal judges but to defects in the Federal Judicial Code. The responsibility and remedy is in the Congress.

The abuses complained of are as follows:

First. Under the present practice, after a full hearing on rates has been had before the State administrative board or commission, the utility may and sometimes has applied to the United States district court for an injunction, alleging that rates fixed by the State board or commission are confiscatory, that is to say that such rates deprive the utility of its property without due process of law in violation of the guarantees of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In the Federal Judicial Code, as it now stands, there is no express provision under which, except by consent of all parties, the United States court can consider the transcript of the proceedings before the State board or commission. Consequently, under the present practice, the evidence taken before the board or commission is generally disregarded and it is necessary to take all the evidence over again at very great expense in time and money.

Citizens complaining of rates alleged to be excessive have sometimes been unable, because of limited funds, properly to present their case a second time in the United States court after having already presented it once fully before the board or commission, with the result, so it is claimed, that efforts to secure relief from extortionate rates have had to be abandoned. The mere threat by the utility company that it would seek an injunction in a United States court, involving the prospect of great additional expense and delay, has sometimes been sufficient to force a compromise unfavorable to the public interest. Even if ratepayers or public regulatory bodies were supplied with sufficient funds to carry on expensive litigation, the procedure of adducing the same evidence twice—once before the board or commission and again before the United States court—is wasteful of time as well as of money. Justice delayed is justice denied.

Second. Under the laws of every State provision is made for some sort of a review of the orders of the State regulatory board or commission in the courts of the State. In some few cases it appears that, after the hearing before the board or commission, the utility company instituted proceedings in the State courts and, after these had been carried to a point short of final judgment, the utility dismissed these proceedings in the courts of the State, and sought and secured an injunction in the District Court of the United States. Clearly any such procedure tends to defeat the ends of justice by increasing expense and delay. Furthermore, a litigant should be bound by its election of the forum in which it shall proceed. It should not be permitted to speculate upon what may appear to be the favorable or unfavorable attitude of a tribunal. If it starts in a State court, it should be required to pursue its remedy to the highest court of the State, reserving always its right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Other defects in the present Federal procedure were pointed out, but they are technical, minor in character, and can easily be corrected, and have been so corrected in the bill presented herewith. The serious defects in the present procedure are the two above explained, viz, (1) that the evidence taken before the State board or commission is not used in the United States court, and (2) that the utility company is not bound by its election of forums if it starts proceedings in the courts of the State but may later go into a District Court of the United States.

In the Johnson bill the remedy for these abuses is sought by abolishing altogether the jurisdiction of the District Courts of the United States in rate cases, reserving to the utility company only an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

A majority of the Committee on the Judiciary are of the opinion that such drastic action as withdrawing altogether from the District Courts of the United States all jurisdiction in rate cases is both unnecessary and unwise.

The majority regards such action unnecessary because, as is demonstrated herein below, every abuse in the present procedure can be corrected and every injustice obviated by amending the Judicial Code as provided in the proposed substitute for the Johnson bill.

The majority regards it unwise because—

(1) It is discriminatory, in that it would single out one class of litigants (viz, public utilities) and deny to them the right, which all other classes of litigants would continue to enjoy, to resort to the United States courts in controversies which arise "under the Constitution or laws of the United States" (par. 1, sec. 24, Judicial Code).

(2) It is a step toward abolition of the District Courts of the United States.

(3) Although the right of ultimate appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States is retained in the Johnson bill, it would deny to a public utility any effective review of the facts by a United States court in that the Supreme Court is not equipped to examine the facts—and the facts are of the essence of a rate case. As was said by Mr. Justice Holmes in Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line (211 U.S. 210, 228), a case involving rates of a railroad:

"If the railroads were required to take no active steps until they could bring a writ of error from this court to the Supreme Court of Appeals after a final judgment, they would come here with the facts already found against them. But the determination as to their rights turns almost wholly upon the facts to be found. Whether their property was taken unconstitutionally depends upon the valuation of the property, the income to be derived from the proposed rate, and the proportion between the two—pure matters of fact. When those are settled, the law is tolerably plain. All their constitutional rights, we repeat, depend upon what the facts are found to be."

(4) Controversies affecting rates chargeable by a public utility are, from their very nature, such as are liable to be affected by local prejudice. They are precisely the kind of controversies for the adjudication of which the First Congress created, under the mandate of the Constitution, the District Courts of the United States.

(5) In every rate case there are two groups of citizens, the ratepayers and the owners of the securities of the utility corporation. On the one hand the ratepayers constitute a compact local group. They should be guaranteed prompt relief from excessive rates. On the other hand, the owners of the securities of a utility are frequently scattered throughout the Nation. They are entitled under the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States, to a fair and impartial trial on the facts as well as on the law before a tribunal free from local bias.

Accordingly, the majority of the committee is reporting, as a substitute for the Johnson bill (S. 752), a new bill which amends the Judicial Code by adding a new section designated as section 266 A, the effect of which is as follows:

After the hearing before the State administrative board or commission, if the utility asserts that the rates fixed are confiscatory, the utility may seek its judicial review either in the State court or in the District Court of the United States, but if it elects to go into the State court, it may not thereafter seek a remedy by injunction in the Federal court, but it must pursue its remedy in the courts of the State, reserving only its right of an ultimate appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill provides that the District Court of the United States—"shall not have jurisdiction if the complainant (or, in case the complainant is a partnership, association, or corporation, if the complainant or a member or stockholder of the complainant) has theretofore commenced suit in a State court having jurisdiction thereof to contest the validity of such order on any ground whatsoever."

If the utility elects to seek in the District Court of the United States a review of the order of the State board or commission, the hearing and determination in the United States court shall be on—

"a transcript of the record of the proceedings, including evidence taken, before the board or commission with respect to such order, prepared at the expense of the complainant and certified to the court by the board or commission in accordance with the law or practice of the State, except that upon application of any party, the court may take additional evidence if material and competent and the court is satisfied that such party was by the board or commission denied an opportunity to adduce it, and in case no record was kept or the board or commission fails or refuses to certify such record, the court may take such evidence as it deems necessary."

Provisions in the present law (sec. 266 of Judicial Code) are retained providing for the hearing of such cases by a "three-judge court", of which at least one of the judges must be a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States or a judge of the circuit court of appeals; for notice of hearing; for temporary restraining orders; for precedence and expedition of hearings, whether an interlocutory or merely a permanent injunction is sought; for the right of direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and for a stay of proceedings in the United States court, if before the final hearing of the application for an injunction, a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State to enforce such order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such order pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State.

For purposes of convenient reference, section 24 of the Judicial Code, which the Johnson bill seeks to amend, and section 266 of the Judicial Code, as it now reads, are set forth hereinbelow.

Judicial Code, section 24: The district courts shall have original jurisdiction as follows:

(1) Of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, brought by the United States, or by any officer thereof authorized by law to sue, or between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants from different States; or, where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $3,000, and (a) arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or (b) is between citizens of different States, or (c) is between citizens of a State and foreign States, citizens, or subjects. No district court shall have cognizance of any suit (except upon foreign bills of exchange) to recover upon any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder if such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover upon said note or other chose in action if no assignment had been made. The foregoing provision as to the sum or value of the matter in controversy shall not be construed to apply to any of the cases mentioned in the succeeding paragraphs of this section.

Judicial Code, section 266, amended: No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any District Court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. Whenever such application as aforesaid is presented to a Justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a Justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least 5 days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Governor and to the attorney general of the State, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any Justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case. It is further provided that if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing, and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith. The requirement respecting the presence of three judges shall also apply to the final hearing in such suit in the district court; and a direct appeal to the Supreme Court may be taken from a final decree granting or denying a permanent injunction in such suit.

I have never been in a rate case. I never represented a utility in my life, not because I have not had the opportunity but because I did not like some of the methods used by some utilities. We want to be fair here, Mr. Chairman, and we want to look at the best interests of the country. We do not wish to impair the integrity or the symmetry of our Federal judicial system simply to get at evils or abuses which have arisen in some cases. It is not necessary to burn down a barn in order to kill the rats.

The statistics showed that abuses existed in only a very small percentage of the total number of cases which have gone through the courts. But I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the old Latin expression usually translated as "The exception proves the rule" should be translated more accurately, "The exception tests the rule." The point is that these exceptional cases test the present procedure. Is the present procedure adequate? Is it fair? It is only the exceptional case which enables us to find out.

So I say it makes no difference that there are only a few of these cases; the point is that the present procedure is abused. The abuse must stop. The Judiciary Committee is unanimous on this point. Both those who favor the Johnson bill and those who favor the committee substitute—which my friends, to flatter me, have called by my name—both groups are agreed that these abuses must and will be corrected.

What are these abuses? Very briefly I shall outline them. A proceeding is brought before a utilities commission and extended hearings are had at great expense both to the utility involved and to the public. These hearings may extend over months and may cost thousands or even tens of thousands, perhaps even hundreds of thousands, of dollars. After the hearings are concluded an order is entered by the commission. Then in these probably exceptional cases the utility, according to the evidence before the committee, has sometimes adopted one of two courses—it has gone into the State or into the United States court. In some cases the utility has gone first into the State courts, and when the case has proceeded some distance short of final judgment the utility has dismissed the case in the State court and gone into the Federal court. While this cannot be done in my State, I understand it can be done in some States. You cannot dismiss without prejudice in my State. But it was stated before the committee that in those States where a litigant can dismiss a case without prejudice the utilities sometimes have gone into the Federal court and built up an entirely new record beside, and in addition to, that which was built up before the State commission and after protracted proceedings in the State court. No provision is made in the Federal Judicial Code for the utilization of the evidence compiled at great expense for the hearing before the commission. So it cannot be used except by consent of all parties in the United States court. This is not the fault of the Federal courts or the Federal judges. It is the fault of the Congress. Of course, this is an absurdity; it is a waste of time and money; and it impedes the ends of justice. As my own personal friend Senator JOHNSON said, "Justice delayed is justice denied."

The two evils are then: First, permitting the utility to speculate upon what may appear to be the favorable or unfavorable attitude of a State court and of a Federal court and of not requiring it to be bound by its election of tribunals. Second, in not requiring the trial in the United States to be upon the evidence adduced before the State administrative board or commission. Both these evils arise from defects in the Federal procedure.

What does this substitute bill do? It puts a stop to both these evils. All the witnesses before the committee, every last one, said these were the two evils to which they objected.

This substitute bill was adopted in the Judiciary Committee by the very narrow margin of 1 vote. It provides that the utility may go into either the Federal court or the State court but, having made its election, must stand by it. If it goes into the State court it cannot dismiss and go over into the Federal court. On the other hand, if it goes into the Federal court the trial of the case in the Federal court must be on the record taken before the utility commission. In other words, the bill reported by the majority of the committee does away with the two evils which are referred to in the hearings as "the two bites at a cherry", and "throwing the record taken before the utility commission into the waste basket." Both these things are out of the way.

One objection has been made which will be considered when we read the bill under the 5-minute rule. The objection is directed at certain language in the committee bill. The committee bill is not long; I shall read it.

That the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding after section 266 thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 266A. In the case of any suit brought in a United States district court to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of an administrative board or commission of any State or any political subdivision thereof."

I call attention to the fact that this bill includes a board or commission not only of a State but such board of "any political subdivision of a State." In this respect I feel it is better than the Johnson bill.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the Lewis bill prohibit Federal courts from taking jurisdiction in suits brought to restrain the assessment and collection of State taxes?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It does not; neither does the Johnson bill. I am coming to that a little later.

"or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with such order, where (1) such order affects rates chargeable by a public utility, does not interfere with interstate commerce, and was made after reasonable notice and hearing, and (2) jurisdiction of such suit is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or of the repugnance of such order, or of the law or ordinance under which such order was made, to the Constitution of the United States, or solely upon any combination of such grounds—

"(a) The provisions of section 266, as amended, which relate to hearings and determinations by three judges, to the right of direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to a stay of proceedings, and to precedence and expedition of hearings, shall apply, whether or not an interlocutory injunction is sought in such suit; and, when an interlocutory injunction is sought, the provisions of such section relating to notice of hearing and to temporary restraining orders shall apply;

"(b) The hearings and determinations shall be on a transcript of the record of the proceedings, including evidence taken, before such administrative board or commission with respect to such order, prepared at the expense of the complainant, and certified to the court by the board or commission in accordance with the law or practice of the State, except that (1) upon application of any party the court may take additional evidence if it is material and competent and the court is satisfied that such party was by the board or commission denied an opportunity to adduce it."

I take it that is the general law anyway, that if a litigant is denied the opportunity of adducing evidence he can always put it in on a review.

"(2) In case no record was kept or the board or commission fails or refuses to certify such record, the court may take such evidence as it deems necessary;

"(c) The court shall not have jurisdiction if the complainant (or, in case the complainant is a partnership, association, or corporation, if the complainant or a member or stockholder of the complainant) has theretofore commenced suit in a State court having jurisdiction thereof to contest the validity of such order on any ground whatsoever."

Then follows section 2. This is the saving clause which is contained in the Johnson Act to the effect that it does not apply to pending litigation.

I think it is generally conceded that all of the evils of which any of these witnesses complained have been cured in this bill. Certainly such was the intention of the majority of the committee.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I yield to my esteemed colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman feels that his bill removes the evils complained of by President Roosevelt when he was Governor of New York, when he said in a message to the legislature of that State:

The special master becomes the rate maker; the public-service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy. This power of the Federal court must be abrogated.

Does the gentleman's bill comply with the President's views on that point?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I think it does.

Mr. TARVER. Does the gentleman think it abrogates the power of the Federal court when it retains its powers under this bill?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I insist this meets all of the complaints made at the hearings.

I may say that this bill was drawn by the legislative counsel of the House of Representatives. They worked on it for about a week, and I urged upon them the necessity of making this airtight in order to meet all of the evils that have been complained of and which were spoken of in the hearings. They have produced, I believe, a good bill. I suppose no bill is perfect, but I believe this bill cures all of the evils which were complained of by the various witnesses and commissions appearing before the committee. If I had the time I could go into the testimony and show that all of those complaints have been met.

What is the difference between this bill and the Johnson bill? I think it has been very clearly stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. The Johnson bill absolutely abolishes the jurisdiction of the United States courts in rate cases, and in rate cases only. That answers one of the questions that was asked me awhile ago. Neither bill abolishes the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to restrain any other order by any administrative board other than one fixing rates for a public utility.

At this point I may well pause to indicate that the jurisdiction in these cases, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], is not dependent upon diversity of citizenship. It is dependent upon an alleged violation of the Federal Constitution. In other words, the utility comes in and says that the rates which the commission has put into effect or is about to put into effect yield such a small amount that they are confiscatory—that they deprive the utility of its property without due process of law. That contention and not the diversity clause is the basis of jurisdiction.

Some of the advocates of the Johnson bill have stated that utility companies have a special advantage over all other litigants, that they can go in and claim that their property is being confiscated by the rates fixed by the commission, that they can get an injunction under such circumstances and that this is a right enjoyed by no other litigant. Mr. Chairman, that, of course, is absolutely incorrect. I shall place in the RECORD at this point just a few of some 50 or 60 cases which I examined hurriedly yesterday afternoon in which various litigants, not nonresidents, but residents of a State, have gone into the Federal court—and in one or two cases where they have been nonresidents—and have asserted that a certain order entered by the administrative board of a State deprived them of their property without due process, or that it violated some other provision of our Federal Constitution, and hence was void. The Federal court upheld the contention. These cases went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and, of course, were affirmed.

In the following cases litigants not public utilities secured injunctions in the District Courts of the United States against orders of State administrative commissions on the ground that the orders were in violation of the Constitution of the United States. These injunctions were sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases cited:

Childers v. Beaver (1925) (270 U.S. 555). (Oklahoma: To restrain State auditor and attorney general from collection of an inheritance tax against the estate of an Indian.)

Sterling v. Constantin (1932) (287 U.S. 378). (Texas: Orders of railroad commission, Governor, and military officials limiting production of oil; fourteenth amendment.)

Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Tafoya (1926) (270 U.S. 426). (New Mexico: To restrain the State corporation commission from suspending plaintiff's right to do business in the State; nonresident relying on fourteenth amendment.)

In the following cases, litigants who were not public utilities secured in the District Courts of the United States injunctions against State officials from enforcing State statutes for the reason that said statutes were in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

These injunctions were sustained by the United States Supreme Court in the cases cited.

Adams v. Tanner (1916) (244 U.S. 590). Employment agency law, State of Washington. Attorney general and prosecuting attorney enjoined. Fourteenth amendment.

Air-Way Electric Appliance Corporation v. Day (1924) (266 U.S. 71). Tax statute of Ohio. Delaware corporation in Ohio. Tax statute violated commerce clause and fourteenth amendment.

Askren v. Continental Oil Co. (1920) (252 U.S. 444). Tax statute of New Mexico. Enjoined because burden on interstate commerce.

Shafer v. Farmers Grain Co. (1925) (268 U.S. 189). North Dakota grain grading act. Burden on interstate commerce.

Pierce v. Society of Sisters (1925) (268 U.S. 510). Oregon compulsory education act. Fourteenth amendment.

Phipps v. Cleveland Refining Co. (1923) (261 U.S. 449). Ohio tax law. Burden on interstate commerce.

Truax v. Raich (1915) (239 U.S. 33). Arizona; employment of aliens. Injunction, fourteenth amendment.

Tyson & Bro. v. Banton (1927) (273 U.S. 418). New York; resale price of theater tickets. Injunction, fourteenth amendment.

Weaver v. Palmer Bros. Co. (1926) (270 U.S. 402). Pennsylvania; forbidding use of shoddy in bedding. Fourteenth amendment.

Looney v. Crane Co. (1917) (245 U.S. 178). Texas; tax on foreign corporations. Foreign corporation, fourteenth amendment, and burden on interstate commerce.

Connally v. General Construction Co. (1926) (269 U.S. 385). Oklahoma minimum wage law. Fourteenth amendment.

Bowman v. Continental Oil Co. (1921) (256 U.S. 642). New Mexico gasoline tax. Burden on interstate commerce.

The point I wish to make is that this is not a special privilege accorded to utility companies. It is a right of any citizen or person in a State to assert that a public official of a State has violated, by his action or threatened action, a right guaranteed to such citizen or person under the Constitution of the United States. The courts have repeatedly enjoined the enforcement of a statute for this very reason, not dependent upon diversity of citizenship, but upon violation of the constitutional rights of a person, natural or corporate. So that instead of taking the utilities out of a supposedly favored class you will, if you pass the Johnson bill, put them in a special proscribed class by themselves. If you pass the Johnson bill you will deny to public utilities in rate cases access to the Federal courts, which will remain open to every other class of citizens to assert that some administrative act of a public official, or some act by the legislature of a State has violated, or is threatening to violate the constitutional rights of such individual.

Something has been said about an ultimate appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Of course, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is correct—the Johnson bill does not deprive the utility of that right of review. But, as pointed out by Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the extract printed in the statement by the majority of the committee and already quoted, such right of appeal is of doubtful value in a rate case where the facts are of the essence—and the Supreme Court of the United States is not equipped to examine the facts.

In this substitute bill, the right of appeal direct to the United States Supreme Court from orders granting or denying an interlocutory injunction is retained. It is already granted by section 266 of the Judicial Code.

What does this discussion all simmer down to? It simmers down to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] said: Do you want to retain the Federal courts other than the Supreme Court, or do you not? The gentleman from New York was most candid, as he always is, when he said he would like to abolish all the Federal courts except the United States Supreme Court. I would not. I believe there are a majority of the Members in the House and an overwhelming majority of the people of this country, if I may hazard the statement, who do not want to abolish the inferior Federal courts. In spite of their mistakes they have been, in many, many cases throughout the 145 years since their establishment the bulwark of our liberties.

I believe we should not do away with what the First Congress established under the mandate of the Constitution. To pass the Johnson bill would, in my opinion, be the first step toward the abolition of the inferior Federal courts.

I personally have tried cases in the State courts in California, in New York, in my own State, and in between, and I have never had the slightest cause for complaint in the State courts in any State where I have appeared. All the judges in my State are my personal friends, and I have the utmost respect for their ability, their honesty, their courage, and their integrity. But I have never tried a rate case.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. May I assume that the Johnson bill takes away from a litigant, by an act of Congress, a constitutional right?

Mr. COX. It is not a constitutional right.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Just a minute; I am asking the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It attempts to deprive utilities of their present right to go into the Federal court to review rate cases.

Mr. REED of New York and Mr. DUNN rose.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I yield first to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Which of these two drafts has the approval of the American Bar Association, if either of them has such approval?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Earle W. Evans, president of the American Bar Association, has telegraphed me, and I have here a sheaf of telegrams and letters from various bar associations and lawyers, approving the committee substitute and disapproving the Johnson bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the argument made by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS]. The gentleman is very studious and is a man who is motivated by a desire to do what he thinks is for the best interest of this country. The two questions that are presented by the original Johnson bill and the substitute that was reported by a majority of the committee, are not questions that are new in this body at all.

The first bill that was passed by this body affecting the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, after the passage of the act of 1875, was passed in 1880. This House, on three different occasions, has passed a bill under which it completely divested the Federal court of jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship. That great Texan, Culbertson, was the first man who started the agitation in the House. Since then the question has been before the House repeatedly in various forms. It now comes before the House in the form of the Johnson bill, which simply provides that the Federal courts shall not have jurisdiction to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement of any order of an administrative board or commission of a State, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with such order, where the jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or where jurisdiction is claimed on an alleged repugnance of such order of such board to the Constitution of the United States, and where such order affects the rates chargeable by public utility, does not interfere with interstate commerce, and has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy is provided by the laws of the State.

It has been argued by the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], and may be argued by others that we can go too far and have an unconstitutional act. The inference being that the Johnson bill is unconstitutional.

That is the first such contention I have heard. I do not think anybody can successfully contend that the Johnson bill is unconstitutional. Mind you, the jurisdiction that is conferred on the inferior Federal courts in this country is statutory and not constitutional. There is only one constitutional court, and that is the Supreme Court.

The Congress is at liberty to add to or take from the jurisdiction of the lower Federal courts in this country at any time.

This question has been settled by the decision in Fishbeck v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (161 U.S., p. 96). That ought to and does dispose of the contention as to the constitutionality of this provision.

The next proposition they argue is this: That we do not want to destroy the symmetry of our judicial system. The symmetry has already been destroyed by judicial interpretation and by judicial legislation until we have today the public utilities of this country enjoying rights that are not enjoyed by the average ordinary citizen. It will be argued to you that this trouble can be remedied by the passage in the various States of laws requiring the corporation to be recreated in the States where it does business. That is not an answer to the proposition at all, because the business engaged in by utilities is that of a public nature. It is not like a private business. It is a public business, and a business in which the public is interested. It is nothing more than right that when they engage in business in any State they should come into the State under the same rules and with the same restrictions that any other citizen of the State enjoys, no more and no less.

It would be argued to you, and very logically so, that the provision of the Johnson bill for an appeal from the judgment of the highest court in the State is an illusion; that the appeal is not effective, because the United States Supreme Court cannot or will not examine into the facts. Such an argument is not sound and is not supported by the law.

I want to call your attention to the words of Chief Justice Taft in answering that very question in the case of Truax v. Corrigan (157 U.S. 312, 324). He said:

> In cases brought to this Court from State courts for review on the ground that a Federal right set up in the State court has been wrongly denied, and in which the State court has put the decision on a finding that the asserted Federal right has no basis in point of fact, or has been waived or lost, this Court, as an incident of its power to determine whether a Federal right has been wrongly denied, may go behind the finding to see whether it is without substantial support. If the rule were otherwise, it almost always would be within the power of a State court practically to prevent a review here (citing many cases).

That was an appeal from the Supreme Court of Arizona. In other words, the argument will be made that if you destroy the jurisdiction of the Federal court the utility companies will appeal from the highest court of the State upon a finding of fact that is adverse to them, and the Supreme Court will adopt that finding of fact and will not go behind it.

The Chief Justice further said in the same case:

> Another class of cases in which this Court will review the findings of the court as to the facts is when the conclusion of law and findings of fact are so intermingled as to make it necessary, in order to pass upon the question, to analyze the facts.

So you are not depriving any litigant of a single constitutional right that he has to have his case passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States when any constitutional question is involved, and the Court may and will in a proper case examine the facts.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose the case going to the Supreme Court does not involve a question of diversity of citizenship, or a point in which the Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction, can it be raised after it passes the court of last resort in a State where the suit was first brought?

Mr. MILLER. No; it would have to be raised in the lower court, of course, but if there was no constitutional question involved such as the allegation of confiscation of property, or that the rates were confiscatory, which is always the contention of the utility company, or if some other alleged right guaranteed by the Constitution was not involved, of course the Supreme Court properly would not have jurisdiction.

Another proposition that the learned gentleman from Colorado advocated was that the substitute cures the objections made to the present law and procedure. I call your attention to the substitute and say this with all due deference to the advocates of it. It is nothing more than a snare and a delusion. I wish gentlemen would refer to provision (b) of the substitute. It provides that the—

> Hearings and determinations shall be on a transcript of the record of the proceedings, including evidence taken, before such administrative board or commission with respect to such order, prepared at the expense of the complainant—

And so forth. That is the provision which they contend cures the admitted injustices in the present law.

I call attention to the hearings on page 28, in which the attention of Mr. Reis was called to that specific question. He said that that would go a long way, provided the law was that the records made before the commission constituted prima facie evidence. This substitute means nothing. The court is at liberty to pay whatever attention he may desire to the transcript made before the commission, and there is no provision in the law to prevent the taking of additional testimony. In fact it provides for the taking of additional testimony. There you are confronted with a mute, silent record as against an array of witnesses which may be introduced by the utility company in the court. It will amount to nothing in the practical application of the law and we should not be misled.

Another thing my friend said is that he did not want us to get away from the original act of Congress. I do not, either. I would like to have you go back to the original Judiciary Act of 1789, which was Senate bill no. 1, and was passed September 4, 1789. In reading the history of that act you will find that no thought ever entered the minds of the Congress at that time that the Federal courts would be obtaining jurisdiction——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. There was no thought in the minds of the framers of the original judiciary act that a corporation domiciled and chartered in one State would be able to go into another State and remove a cause to the Federal court under that act. In fact Mr. Justice Iredale in 1797 rendered an opinion on that very point, and the history of the act shows conclusively that it was not the intention that diversity of citizenship should be created by a fiction. Two States—New York and Maryland—proposed amendments to specifically prevent just such a thing happening. The debates on the bill show conclusively that it was never the intention under the original judiciary act to have any such thing happen.

It was the thought of the framers of the original Judiciary Act that the Federal courts would administer the State law and the State law only; and to make it perfectly certain that the Federal courts were simply to administer State law, section 34 was put into the act, and that remained the law until 1842, when Justice Story rendered that famous decision of his and construed the word "law" not to include the common law of a State. Then it was that a distinct Federal system of laws began to grow up, and we have now a distinct and separate set of laws which are administered largely through the Federal courts, which govern in the case of corporations, whereas the State laws govern the average citizen. Instead of discrimination being against the corporation, the public utilities, the discrimination is decidedly in their favor. Time will not permit me to quote from the history of that act and the history of the development of the judicial decisions of this country, but let me give you one quotation from the article of Hon. Charles Warren in the Harvard Law Review of November 1923. He said:

That Judge Story's views as to the imperative Federal jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts did not prevail was extremely fortunate for the United States. Conditions did not require in 1789, nor do they at present require, the vesting in the Federal courts of the full scope of jurisdiction authorized by the Constitution. In fact, it would probably now be better that the present broad jurisdiction granted by the act of 1875 should be abrogated, and that the State courts should be left to a greater extent with jurisdiction, in the first instance, of cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, Federal rights being amply safeguarded by right of appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

That is exactly what this original bill does.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, it is an accepted practice and we are in full accord with the principle that each sovereign State has a responsibility of regulating the utilities that operate within its borders. Over a long period of years the State of Wisconsin, which I represent, has functioned to these controls through a commission established by the laws of the State. Under these laws the utilities of Wisconsin have received fair and just consideration and treatment. We grant such utilities a certificate of convenience and necessity which is referred to in our State as an indeterminate permit, what is in effect a permanent franchise, without competition, thus creating in their behalf practically a monopoly. Under these laws the utilities have prospered; they have received adequate protection and just regulation. The truth of this is registered in their growth and development, their returns and their earnings; and the value of their stocks and bonds will reflect that condition. The only exception to this rule applies to such companies as have been swindled by holding organizations, stock jobbers, and promoters. Our utilities in the main are satisfied and approve of our regulation. In view of this fair and just treatment, and the prosperity that attends their service, we feel, in Wisconsin, that our utilities should submit to this regulation and not seek to handicap the efficiency of our commission by delay, obstruction, and defeat. For a number of years our commission has been so handicapped by appeals made by the regulated utilities to the Federal courts. These appeals have been frequent and are so extended and exercised as to cripple, and in many cases to paralyze, the functions of the public-service commission. Temporary restraining orders and temporary injunctions obtained in the lower Federal courts to restrain the enforcement of State commission rate orders have contributed to this condition and defeated the purpose of our commission. It is vitally important, I believe, that a State in its governmental proceedings, in these controls, be free from interference from the Federal Government upon the grounds of violation of the provisions of the Federal Constitution until the final action of the State, through its highest judicial tribunal, demonstrates an appeal to Federal power for the protection of a constitutional right is necessary.

The Johnson bill is a measure planned and designed to serve with justice and to expedite action in these matters of utility control—to eliminate long delay and postponement, and the waste and expense and the obstruction it develops. Legislation of this nature is important and vital in the affairs of the State and the Nation.

Forty-five of the forty-eight State utility commissions have very definitely approved the Johnson bill.

In frequent conferences held by this group, where practically every State in the Union was represented, where open discussion and debate was encouraged, the need and necessity of this legislation was urged and recommended. The Johnson bill as submitted meets the demands and requirements and will correct and eliminate the abuses that delay, handicapy, obstruct, and frequently defeat the efforts and the purpose of these important commissions.

The State utility commissions have been created to serve the best interests of the citizens of our States and to act in justice and equity to all concerned. Men qualified by character and ability, knowledge and experience, serve as members of these boards. It is their duty and responsibility to serve with integrity, intelligence, and efficiency, and as citizens we hold them to that obligation.

In view of these facts, I hold to the opinion that it falls upon us as Members of Congress to extend to them the necessary legislation for prompt and effective administration. [Applause.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman and my colleague, "come, let us reason together." Fortunately we can do so because this is not a party question. Of the 11 members of the Judiciary Committee who, after listening with great interest and patience to the testimony of witnesses for and against the Johnson bill, reported the Lewis substitute, a majority were Democrats. Both in respect to this measure and in respect to any measure that has come before the Judiciary Committee since I have been a member, there has generally been no politics. Ordinarily we delight to follow our distinguished chairman, for whom we have not only great admiration, but a real feeling of affection. In this matter, deeply as he was interested in it, he obliged me by adjourning the hearings for some time so that I, an opponent of the Johnson measure, could be present. I want to take this occasion to recognize his great courtesy to me, which he would freely extend to any member of the committee, whether he were a Republican or a Democrat.

Therefore, without any consideration of party politics, we can reason this thing out calmly.

The House has before it two proposals.

One is a constructive proposal, of which it can be said in entire good faith that it meets every criticism and remedies every evil that was developed in the hearings before the committee.

The other is a destructive proposal, which seeks to tear up by the roots the sturdy oak of the Federal judiciary, under which any American citizen, rich or poor, high or low, can be protected in his right under the Constitution of the United States to a fair return on his investments in utility securities. The destructive proposal has added significance because it is apparent from the passionate quality of some of the speeches that have been made not only here but in previous discussions of this question, that this is the entering wedge to the destruction of the power of the United States courts.

I hear it assumed in the debate, and I think it was in the able address of the gentleman from Arkansas, that the Supreme Court of the United States stands like a Gibraltar, against which no possible legislative waves of destruction could prevail; but that is a great mistake. While the Supreme Court is authorized and created by the Constitution, it is only a little less subject to the will of Congress than the inferior courts, because the Congress could pass a law tomorrow that the Supreme Court could meet only once in 10 years. What would then become of the administration of justice? Congress could pass a law that no one should have any right of appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States unless the subject matter of the controversy exceeded $10,000,000. There would then result the exclusion of nearly all litigation. The Congress could refuse appropriations to the Court. The common notion that the Supreme Court of the United States has a peculiar position of power and independence that the Congress could not threaten is a mistake. It shares with the inferior courts of the country the possibility of destructive legislation by Congress.

In considering this question of whether inferior Federal courts should be destroyed, let me first suggest to you what those courts are. A reference has been made in the course of the debates to a "foreign jurisdiction", meaning the Federal courts. Federal courts are American courts. Who created them? The American people. How did the American people create them? It created them through Congress. Why were they created? To effectuate the purposes of the Constitution. What was the mandate of the Congress when it created the inferior courts of the United States and even determined the limits and boundaries of the Supreme Court of the United States itself? What was the mandate?

The men who framed the Constitution said, and they wrote it into the Constitution, that in respect to any assertion of a right under the Constitution there ought to be an independent tribunal, so that these rights under the Constitution could be determined by an impartial court of the Federal Government. You may quarrel with that. You may say the local courts would have answered every purpose. They would not at the time the Constitution was adopted. That is perfectly clear, because of the intense jealousy and fear of a central government that then prevailed.

At all events, the Constitution vested the judicial power in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress from time to time might ordain and establish. In my judgment, that imposed a political mandate of a moral nature upon the Congress to create those inferior courts to make possible a judicial ascertainment in national tribunals of rights existing by virtue of the Constitution of the United States.

I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who made, if he will allow me to say so, an able argument. I agree with him that no juridical question is involved if the Congress does not carry out this moral mandate. The Congress can destroy every inferior Federal court. It can "crib, cabin, and confine" the Supreme Court itself until, like Prometheus, it would be chained upon the top of another Mount Ida, and be largely impotent to carry out the great functions entrusted to it by the Constitution.

No court could say it nay. Congress could refuse to pass any appropriation bill whatever for the executive branch of the Government, and thereupon the wheels of our Government would come to a stop; that would be the end of government, but no court could say Congress nay. Therefore, as I have taken occasion in previous debates to emphasize to my indulgent colleagues of the House, there is a difference between a thing being politically anticonstitutional and one juridically unconstitutional. It is juridically unconstitutional when a court can say of a given act of Congress, "We will disregard it because it is null and void", but a thing can be politically anticonstitutional when a branch of the Government fails to carry out any mandate of the Constitution.

As a mere matter of moral obligation, I therefore contend that we have no right to take from utility corporations the right to assert a constitutional right in an appropriate court. If we refuse to do so, as we have in respect to any subject matter of controversy that is less than $3,000, then the action of Congress is final; and, in the sense that the gentleman from Arkansas meant it, no constitutional question can arise.

This being so, let us come down to the heart of the problem; and I venture to say I surprise the Members of the House by stating a fact which has not yet been emphasized. If it was emphasized I did not hear it. In my humble judgment it is a complete answer to the rather impassioned speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] in opening this debate when he said that he favored the abolition of the inferior Federal courts altogether.

I ask you to remember this if you forget everything else I say, and I do not doubt you will forget my words because everything in this House in the way of debate is as evanescent as a child's footprints upon the sands of the sea.

No utility corporation can go into the Federal court to assert its constitutional rights except by the permission and sufferance of the State authorities. This sounds like a very sweeping statement. I am talking now of existing law, not of the Johnson bill. I am referring to section 266. Why? Because section 266, which this Congress passed about the year 1916, I think, says that if the State authorities do not wish a utility corporation to go into the Federal courts all they have to do is to proceed in their own courts and grant a stay until their own courts have passed upon it. All the public-utilities commission or the Attorney General, or the appropriate officer of the States has to do is to go into the State court and mandamus the utility corporation to obey the utility commission. All that is asked of them is that they must grant a stay. When this fact was brought out it was said: "Why should they grant a stay?" I will tell you why, and it ought to appeal to the Members of this House, two thirds of whom are members of the bar.

What is a public-utility commission? It is a body of men, either elected or appointed. They are sometimes members of the bar and sometimes not members of the bar; they are sometimes politically ambitious and sometimes they are not. Sometimes they have been elected with a distinct pledge that they would reduce rates. At other times they are elected upon the ticket of a party which has pledged an immediate reduction of rates. These officials are not a court of record; they are not a judicial body. When you come before a State public-utility commission you have not had your day in court; you have simply appeared before some bureaucrats, very necessary bureaucrats, but they are bureaucrats. Very well; you appear before them, and they grant a hearing. They hear what they care to hear. I am reminded by these bureaucrats of the familiar lines of Shakespeare:

> But man, proud man,
> Drest in a little brief authority,
> Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
> His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
> Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
> As make the angels weep.

Why, gentlemen, I can not understand what has come over the character of our people that there is not a revolt against this ever-rising tide of bureaucracy. I am not referring now to the past 12 months but also to the past 25 years—this rising tide of allowing a few officials, appointed or otherwise, to determine the most sacred rights, to be prosecuting attorney, when they institute the inquiry, to be jury to determine the facts, to be judge to pass upon them, and then finally to be the public executioner, unless a court will stay their hands. Therefore, when that kind of a body, not a court, says to a public-utility corporation. "Your rates must come down", it may or may not involve confiscation. We must all admit the possibility of confiscation.

Why, then, should they not grant a stay until their own courts could pass upon it? and when their own courts have passed upon it, that is the end of the controversy with the exception of an appeal by the utility corporation to the Supreme Court.

So you see the proponents of the Johnson bill—and I do not mean the minority of the Judiciary Committee; I am referring to those who brought it into the Judiciary Committee; I am referring to the distinguished Senator, who gave his name to the bill, who appeared before us as a witness and as to whose testimony I am free to comment. His manner seemed to imply: "Sign on the dotted line and do not delay it."

I respect the Judiciary Committee in its control of this matter. Without respect to any demand from any source that we should pass this and pass it quickly without omitting the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i", our committee gave a most patient examination to all that could be said. We divided as reasonable men might, almost evenly, and you have the choice of remedy.

I said a moment ago, and I have diverged for the moment, that these Federal courts were called a "foreign jurisdiction." As I said, they were created by the American people under at least a moral mandate of the Constitution, and now I pause to ask: What kind of judges have the Federal courts had that the finger of scorn should be now pointed at them? What kind of judges are they?

Who appoints them?

The President of the United States as the representative of all the American people. Does he appoint them alone? No; he appoints them by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and when so selected they are upon the whole so fine a body of men that if there be one favorable comparison with the judiciary of England, which in many ways is one of the noblest body of public magistrates in the world, it is our Federal judiciary.

I know something about them. Last April it was 50 years since I was called to the historic bar of Philadelphia. If I had been simply a practitioner at that bar my knowledge might be no more than that of the immediate locality of Philadelphia. It was my rare good fortune to become Assistant Attorney General under President McKinley and the first President Roosevelt, later to become Solicitor General under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, and as a practicing lawyer in New York for 17 years my practice was almost entirely in the Federal courts. This experience has taken me from one end of the country to the other, and may I say to you that with very few exceptions my fellow lawyers of all localities have only had for the Federal courts great respect.

In the 145 years which have passed since the Federal Judiciary Act was passed, I am told that only three Federal judges have ever been impeached. One judge of the United States Supreme Court was impeached, not on account of any charge involving his integrity but because he was regarded as unduly partisan. I refer to Justice Chase. But the Federal judges, certainly until recent years, have been without a stain, and their reputation is one in which Americans can take great pride. The Judiciary Act of 1789 was the first and in some respects, when you measure its tremendous influence, the greatest constructive piece of work of the first Congress.

I have in my home library, and I wish sometime that you were not so numerous that I could invite you all to it, a collection of autographed letters of signers of the Constitution of the United States, and also of great men like Clay, Calhoun, Andrew Jackson, Daniel Webster, and others who were concerned with the development of the Constitution. There must be 60 letters in all. Among the most valued of those letters is a four-page letter of James Madison, then the leader of this House, who had the responsibility of passing the Judiciary Act of 1789 through this Chamber, whereby the Federal courts obtained the power to vindicate the constitutional rights of the American, no matter whence he came. It is my impression that he himself did not draft it. I think it was drafted by Ellsworth, although I may be mistaken about that. At all events, that was a great constructive piece of legislation which has worked well for nearly a century and a half.

It is said, and said with a certain amount of force, that while the Judiciary Act of 1789, though somewhat amended, is in substance not yet repealed, it never contemplated the power of the Federal courts to assert a constitutional right in respect to the action of a State in regulating rates of securities. That is a half truth. Of course they contemplated in that act, because they were carrying out the Constitution, that any American citizen that asserted a right under the Constitution of the United States should have an independent Federal tribunal to determine that right. Therefore, that was inclusive of any classes of cases that might arise in the future. I recognize that corporations were few and far between in 1789.

I think the gentleman from Arkansas was correct in complaining in respect to corporations of the diversity of citizenship feature of the act of 1789, because a corporation has only a fictitious citizenship. If this bill were limited to the remedy that no corporation could invoke the power of a Federal court on the ground of diversity on the theory that it was a citizen of the State of its incorporation, I am disposed to think I would vote for that bill and remove the mere fiction that because a group of men go down to Delaware and put a dollar in a slot and draw out a charter, that, therefore, they are citizens of Delaware. It is an absurd fiction. I have no sympathy with it.

But these utility cases do not turn upon diversity of citizenship. They turn upon confiscation and confiscation alone. Federal courts do not fix rates. They cannot fix rates. All they can do is to say that the rate which the State establishes under the testimony, in their judgment, is a confiscation of earning power and, therefore, a violation of the fourteenth amendment.

What was the fourteenth amendment? What was the expression "due process of law"? It was our modern paraphrase of the term in Magna Carta "by the law of the land." And what did it mean? It meant there were some rights of property which could not be taken even by a State authority where they violated fundamental rights and took from the mouth of labor, whether it were the labor of the hand or the labor of the brain, to use Jefferson's phrase "the bread it has earned."

I said a great deal as to why I am opposed to the Johnson bill. Let us address ourselves a moment to the Lewis bill. If we have the Lewis bill, what will we have? If it proves by the test of experience not to have met any reasonable evil, then Congress can legislate again if necessary. Under existing law no utility corporation can get into a Federal court if the State will only be decent enough, when its little commission of bureaucrats have lowered the rates, to proceed in their own courts and grant a stay until a court of justice of the State has passed upon the matter. You have this by existing law, but it had one defect that, if there were any recourse to the Federal courts, if the State courts will not grant the stay, then all the testimony was taken a second time. This meant delay and expense.

A majority of our committee has met this situation in this way: We have said that the testimony taken before the utility commission shall be the basis of the decision of the Federal court if, under the circumstances, recourse is had to the Federal court.

We have said more. We did appreciate, as my brother from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] so well said, that it is an unfair thing for a utility corporation to go, first, into a State court and then, when it sees it is going to have an adverse decision, resort to a Federal court. So our Lewis amendment provides that, once they have made their election, they are precluded. If they go into the State court, they can never thereafter go into the Federal court.

Mr. FORD. Did the gentleman write the amendment?

Mr. BECK. No; I did not.

Mr. FORD. The gentleman said "our amendment."

Mr. BECK. I meant we of the majority. I did, however, write one amendment to which reference may be made in my absence and to which I am going to refer for a moment. I did add this, or at least I offered it to my colleagues of the majority of the committee, and they accepted it. While the testimony before the utility commission should be the testimony before the Federal court and no more, yet there was one exception, that if the utility company had offered before the utility commission testimony that was competent and relevant and the utility commission refused to take the testimony, then and then only should the Federal court hear what the State utility commission ought to have heard.

This seems to me just common fairness; and if it be not common fairness, if that were the sole obstacle to the Lewis bill, I would rather it be dropped, and then the bill would provide that the Federal court can only take the testimony before the State utility commission and pass upon that and nothing else.

If this is not cutting Federal jurisdiction to the very bone, then I do not understand the meaning of the expression.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. SIROVICH. Why does the gentleman make his amendment apply only to the utilities themselves? Why not give the State the same privilege?

Mr. BECK. The State has that privilege. The language is, as I recall it, "upon the application of any party." Of course, I was speaking of it in that way, because the utility company would be the one that would probably appeal.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. I yield.

Mr. COLE. In case additional testimony is taken of the character the gentleman has discussed, is that to be referred in any way to the commission in fairness to the commission?

Mr. BECK. I think it ought to be.

Mr. COLE. But not under this amendment.

Mr. BECK. If the Lewis amendment is adopted and anyone proposes an amendment that before the Federal court passes on the matter they should refer back any new testimony to the utility commission, I think that would be manifestly fair. I am sorry it did not occur to us.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one or two questions?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania 10 additional minutes.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. When the rates are made by a State commission affecting intrastate shipments, upon what ground does the Federal court get jurisdiction?

Mr. BECK. Under the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Yes; if they get jurisdiction under the fourteenth amendment, why can they not wait until the supreme court of the State passes on it and then go to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BECK. That is precisely what I have said the State courts or the State authorities can do. If they will simply stay the imposition of the rates until their own courts have passed upon the matter, the Federal courts cannot act.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not true that they get around that provision?

Mr. BECK. I do not know how they get around it.

Mr. PIERCE. They certainly get around it in Oregon.

Mr. BECK. I do not know how.

Mr. PIERCE. I do not know the way they do it, but they get around it and throw the matter squarely into the Federal court.

Mr. BECK. The fact is the State authorities have not taken advantage of section 266.

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman know of any place where that right has been exercised, and where Federal action has been stayed in that way?

Mr. BECK. Oh, yes; in Wisconsin and, I think, in other cases. I have not been, in 20 years, in a utility case nor in 20 years have I represented a utility corporation. I am not an expert, and cannot answer the question with knowledge.

Mr. PIERCE. I know we tried to exercise that right in the Northwest and we failed.

Mr. BECK. The language is so explicit that he who runs may read it. The Federal court has no discretion. They are bound to stop the moment the State court will stay the order until they can pass upon it.

Mr. SIROVICH. If the gentleman will permit, according to the Lewis amendment every public utility that is doing an intrastate business would have an opportunity either to go to the State supreme court or to the Federal courts. Is that right?

Mr. BECK. They have to make their election.

Mr. SIROVICH. And once they make the choice they have got to stick to it.

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is it not a violation of States rights to give an intrastate public-utility corporation the right to go into the Federal court instead of the State court?

Mr. BECK. No; because it proceeds upon the theory of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. SIROVICH. Suppose the fourteenth amendment is not involved?

Mr. BECK. If the fourteenth amendment is not involved and there is no diversity of citizenship, there is no Federal jurisdiction.

Do not believe that the fact that there is an appeal from the highest court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States, that this is any adequate protection, because it is not.

The Supreme Court of the United States generally accepts the facts found by the State court or the State utility boards, and does so because as a practical matter it cannot go into the facts effectively.

As proof of that, you gentlemen know, as I do, that the Justice of the Supreme Court of our day and generation who, with the possible exception of Justice Brandeis, has the reputation of being the most advanced "liberal" was our venerable Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, "nomen praeclarum et venerabile." In the Atlantic Coast Line case (211 U.S., 210), in a case involving rates of a railroad, Justice Holmes said for the Supreme Court:

> If the railroads were required to take no active steps until they could bring a writ of error from this court to the Supreme Court of Appeals after a final judgment, they would come here with the facts already found against them. But the determination as to their rights turns almost wholly upon the facts to be found. Whether their property was taken unconstitutionally depends upon the valuation of the property, the income to be derived from the proposed rate, and the proportion between the two—pure matters of fact. When those are settled, the law is tolerably plain. All their constitutional rights, we repeat, depend upon what the facts are found to be.

When you take the responsibility of destroying the inferior Federal courts you destroy them in a class of cases where their protection is most needed.

One of the profoundest students of government was Sir Henry Maine, and, referring to the beneficent prospects of America, he said:

> All this beneficent prosperity reposes on the sacredness of contract and the stability of private property, the first the employment and the last the reward of success in the universal competition.

He adds that this has been the—

> Bulwark of American individualism against democratic impatience and socialist fantasy.

So much for his estimate as to the beneficence of our Constitution.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. I appreciate what the gentleman has said and his explanation of the law and the Constitution, but what I am interested in is the people of the United States. In the gentleman's opinion, which of the two bills is going to benefit the people of the United States?

Mr. BECK. I would say without hesitation the Lewis bill; first, because it corrects every evil, and if there be any remaining evil, the powers of the Congress are not exhausted; and, in the second place, it does not drive the entering wedge into the destruction of the courts of the United States, and that is what is back of this proposal on the part of many people.

I quote now what is very familiar to many of us, but never did the significance of what I am about to read come to many thoughtful Americans as it has since 1928.

Macaulay, in his famous letter to the biographer of Thomas Jefferson, after predicting that when our country had exhausted its resources of arable lands that then the real test of our institutions would come, said:

> On one side is a statesman teaching patience, respect for vested rights, strict observance of public faith. On the other is a demagogue ranting about the tyranny of capitalists and usurists * * * I seriously apprehend that you will in some such season of adversity as I have described, do things that will prevent prosperity from returning; that you will act like people who in a year of scarcity devour all the seed corn, and thus make the next year, not of scarcity but of absolute famine. There will be, I fear, spoliation. The spoliation will increase distress. The distress will increase fresh spoliation. There is nothing to stop you. Your Constitution is all sail and no anchor. As I have said before, when a society has entered on this downward progress either civilization or liberty must perish.

That was said by a great Whig statesman, and one of the most brilliant students of history, and it was in reference to our country.

I say to you in all solemnity, my colleagues of the House, this is but a skirmish. No one can mistake what the Johnson proposal means.

Adopt the Lewis amendment, and you have not affronted the Federal courts, you have not put an unjustified stigma upon them, you have not torn up their power by the roots.

Pass the Johnson bill, and it may be the beginning of the end of the beneficent power of the inferior Federal courts, which has been exercised in this country for 145 years to the honor of our judiciary and the welfare of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] with reference to Senator JOHNSON'S statement before the Committee on the Judiciary when this bill was under consideration, no doubt, would leave a false impression with the members of the committee. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that Senator JOHNSON'S statement before the Judiciary Committee be published in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. HIRAM W. JOHNSON, A SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

Senator JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this measure (S. 752) for some time has been pending, and it becomes increasingly important as the days go by.

It was presented originally at the instance of the Railroad Commission of the State of California, which is the regulatory body of our State.

It has met with the approval of the regulatory bodies of nearly all of the States of this Union that have bodies of that character. It may be that one has expressed its disapproval. But I think, of the twenty-and-odd States that today endeavor to regulate the charges of public utilities and the like, all are in agreement in very strongly presenting this bill and very earnestly asking its passage, save, possibly, two—no more than two, I know.

And so the bill comes here with the approval and endorsement and the prayer of some twenty-odd States of the Union.

The design of the measure is to limit the jurisdiction of the Federal district courts in matters pertaining to the determinations that have been rendered by public-service organizations charged with the duty, under State laws, of determining what should be the course to be pursued with public utility actions and rates. It seeks to deprive the public-utility corporation whose case has been tried before the State regulatory commission of no real right. It permits that public-utility corporation, after there has been a decision, to carry its case, if it desires, through all of the State courts and subsequently to the United States Supreme Court. It seeks only to limit the authority of the public-utility corporation to delay, hinder, and impede the States in their regulatory actions, by precluding that public-utility corporation from having more than one opportunity for the determination of the litigation respecting the action of the State's governmental body.

Today the course is not uncommon for a public utility whose rates have been fixed by a State utility regulatory body to proceed, if it desires, within the State court, obtain its injunction, try its case up to a certain point, and then, with the power that is given it under the diversity of the citizenship clause, take its case into the Federal district court as well, and there interminably delay the matter.

We seek to prevent that kind of thing—not to deny either their day in court in the first instance, or in the last instance, of the public-utility corporation.

And, taking a concrete instance so that perhaps we may better explain the purpose of this bill, it will be obvious to you, if you are familiar with what the State bodies have endeavored to do, that there ought to be a rule whereby there should be a speedy determination of what may have been done by the public regulatory body and a sudden determination by that body, with a proper review, of course, ultimately by the court; and if there is neither speedy nor a sudden determination, why, of course, there is no such thing as justice in that regard, for justice delayed is justice denied. And it is that sort of thing that we are seeking to prevent, that has occurred so often in the past.

For instance, take the case of this sort: The largest utility corporation in the State of California is what is called the "P. G. & E.", that is, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. Recently there has been a trial before our railroad commission, a railroad commission of which Californians are very proud, and which has done a remarkably excellent work, and in its early stages a work under very great difficulty. There has been a trial there of the rates that have been fixed. The trial has lasted between 1 and 2 years, I think. Upon both sides there has been an immense amount of testimony taken before the Railroad Commission of the State of California. On the testimony taken, the expert witnesses, money has been expended to a very, very large extent, both by the State and, legitimately, by the utility.

The case finally is determined. The railroad commission decides what rates it believes to be just. Not content with the remedy that is accorded by the State court; not content with their act, its ultimate appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the utility goes into the Federal district court, and the three-judge district court, when its next term meets, grants an injunction against the acts of the railroad commission, appoints a master—and this is the course, in general, of this sort of procedure. That master is now about to begin to take the testimony that has been taken before the railroad commission; and there again, de novo, as the order appointing him says, upon that testimony, and perhaps other testimony that may be presented to him, finally a decision may be rendered.

It is unjust and it is unfair that that should be so; and where the remedy rests with the courts of the State, with an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, that ought to be ample for the utility corporation. There is another phase of it, and that is worse yet: Not only delay results; not only a justice denied; but the expense to which the State is put in twice presenting its expert testimony and twice engaging in the trial that is protracted and that is bitterly contested—but the State pays through its citizens both sides; because after the long contest the expenses indulged by the public-utilities corporation are charged to operating expenses, and the result is that we literally picked our pockets in order to pay the expenses of the public-utilities corporation, as well as the expenses that are rendered necessary by the action of our State. And paying both sides, we pay one legitimately, by appropriations; we pay the other illegitimately, in the increased rates of a double attempt, or a twofold attempt by the utility company to obtain a decision that will be favorable to it. All of the utility expenses are reflected ultimately in its charges to its consumers. So that we want to put an end if we can to this intolerable situation. And the only way that we have seen that it was possible to do so was in the fashion that I have indicated.

It is intolerable from the standpoint of speedy, sudden determinations. It is intolerable, because there is not any logical reason on the face of the earth why a public-utility corporation, that may be incorporated in the State of Delaware, should have two opportunities to try its case in a State where the citizen of the State has but one. It is intolerable, too, because we have no such rule relating to human beings, or the trial of a human being, even for his life. He must be content with the courts of his State, with his ultimate appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

What reason is there that a public utility that may choose to incorporate itself in a State was removed, where it has neither property nor interests, should then be permitted to go to our State court and our Federal courts—when it is never denied the right to go to the United States Supreme Court?

And thus it is that these regulatory bodies throughout the country have found that it was necessary for them to have some relief; and so it is that this bill has been presented.

Now, this bill has not been presented in a haphazard fashion, by any means. It has come to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, considered by that committee; a subcommittee has been appointed; before the subcommittee elaborate hearings have been held, in which every interest that sought to be heard have been heard courteously and at length. It has gone back to the full Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Another subcommittee was appointed, at the instance of somebody who said he did not have the opportunity to be heard in the first instance. And again full hearings have been had.

And the hearings that were taken before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate show exactly the position taken by various individuals and various gentlemen and various meticulous lawyers, perhaps, in endeavoring to defeat this measure—with the design—I will not say all of them had the design, but the design at times was apparent to some of us, that there should be a great delay.

And they did delay—for two different sessions—this measure, by taking it back and having hearings, and then taking it back again—until finally the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate took the matter in hand and sent the bill upon the floor of the Senate; and upon the floor of the Senate it was overwhelmingly passed.

I ask, therefore, that this measure may be submitted at the earliest possible time; that, in one fashion or another, a determination may be had, either upon its merits or its demerits, and that it should not be permitted to rest for any great period.

The objections to the bill are—I anticipate but one or two—that a privilege has been accorded to these corporations, as their advocates say. And that privilege they do not want to relinquish. I do not blame them. It is perfectly natural that a utility corporation wants to take two bites at a cherry, where every other individual on the face of the earth is permitted but one. But I do not blame them for wanting the privilege of two opportunities to do as they please. The only thing I object to is that the rest of us, who are not connected with public-utility corporations, should want to give them two opportunities to do what no citizen is permitted ordinarily to do.

It is objected on some hands that the bill is unconstitutional. In the record of the hearings that were held before the Senate committee, the cases are cited that determine exactly what the rights of Congress are in relation to the jurisdiction that may be conferred upon the Federal courts.

The leading case is the Kline case, which is cited in the very elaborate majority views of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in its report on this bill.

And the Kline case determines, of course—as a reading of the Constitution will demonstrate that it ought to determine—that Congress has the right, with the inferior Federal courts, to determine exactly what they shall hear and what they shall determine, and their jurisdiction generally.

The only constitutional court is the Supreme Court of the United States. The others are subject to the determination of Congress as to their jurisdiction, and the like. And I think that if an opportunity presents itself to you gentlemen, a reading of the brief that was presented by the attorneys for the Railroad Commission of the State of California will illuminate this particular subject.

That brief, too, traces the evolution of the decisions of the Supreme Court in regard to matters of this sort, and cognate matters. I deem it not only an excellent brief, but one which is quite convincing.

(The brief referred to appears in appendix I of these hearings.)

Then there are letters which I have had from the various States on the question of the agitation of this particular subject; and I have listed the States from which they were received; but I presume those can be better presented by those who will follow me today. But from New York and continuing clear to the Pacific coast, the public regulatory bodies are practically united in asking for this legislation.

Not only that, but we have as well the very highest authority with respect to this particular measure, that emanated from New York State, when the present illustrious President of the United States was Governor of that State. He then found exactly the situation which I have been inveighing against—not harshly, because there are so many things that might be said about this kind of jurisdiction that I hate to take the time of the committee to call attention to them. But the then Governor of New York State found that they are just what I found when I was Governor of the State of California, and just what every other man has found that holds a public position in a State and tries to render and perform his duty unto the people of the State, rather than unto its corporations. And the Governor of New York found that situation confronting him, and in no uncertain tones he expressed himself. It was in 1930 that he said, in a message to the legislature:

"The recent decision of the Federal Court in the Southern District of New York, permitting the New York Telephone Co. drastically to raise its telephone rates, brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States court with the regulatory powers of our Public Service Commission. * * *

"It means that hearings and trials which rightfully should be held before our Public Service Commission or before State courts are, by a scratch of the pen, transferred to special master appointed by the Federal court. The State regulatory body * * * is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master, who is unequipped by experience and training, as well as by staff and assistants, to pursue that searching inquiry into the claims of the property which the consuming public is entitled to demand. The special master becomes the rate maker; the Public Service Commission becomes a mere legal fantasy. This power of the Federal court must be abrogated."

This is the language of the President when he was Governor of New York and he expresses very much better than most of us can express, exactly how the iron has entered the soul of every man who, within his State, endeavors, with that State power, to give the remedy and relief to its people from extortionate, outrageous, and shameful rates charged by a public utility. He expresses it so well that I am very glad to adopt his language; and I wish it were possible for me to express myself with equal facility on this occasion:

"This power of the Federal court must be abrogated. Only the Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose. * * * I recommend to your honorable bodies that you memorialize the Congress to pass this legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. Senator JOHNSON, may I be excused? I would like to hear the remainder of your statement, but I have an appointment that I must keep.

Senator JOHNSON. Certainly; thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I have just one other word to say in this connection: Legislation in which I am interested, and which I endeavor to present—generally speaking, without asking the aid of anybody in its behalf—but I cannot tell you how happy I was made last week when, without solicitation or suggestion on my part, when this bill had passed the Senate and was here before you gentlemen, to have the President in his press conference, suddenly refer to it. He and I have not talked about it for a great many years—or at least, for a long period of time—but he suddenly referred to it and expressed himself as absolutely in favor of that kind of legislation last week at the press conference. The newspaper articles I have before me. You gentlemen doubtless observed them. If you did not, a mere query to any member of the press would give you the facts.

Now, just one other word: I understand the opposition to this bill, and I understand it full well. I am not critical of it, because I recognize the fact that when one has something that gives him a little the better of his fellows, he wants to hang on to it, and he will go to extremes in order to hang on to the benefits that have been accorded him, or to the privileges that he believes are his, and that are different from the privileges accorded to others. I do not criticize. I say to you, therefore, that the public-service corporations, in coming here and in endeavoring to retain the power that thus far they have had to go into two jurisdictions, or two sets of courts, will hinder, delay, impede, and prevent the public-utility regulatory bodies from giving effect to their rates, and the States from carrying out the purposes for which they, in reality, are organized—to give relief to their people; but granting that, nevertheless I recognize the power that these gentlemen have. I recognize that they come full-panoplied with the briefs that have been written by the legal departments of the various power companies, and present them elaborately. I do not want that they shall be permitted to delay action; because I had rather have action against than no action at all upon a measure of this sort.

And I do hope that it may be possible, therefore, that a measure of this sort, with the single design of enabling States to govern themselves—enabling the regulatory bodies within States to do their duty; enabling the regulatory bodies and State governments to afford relief that is necessary to consumers of that which may be handled by public-utility corporations—that the regulatory bodies may be permitted to go on their way and do their duty in their respective jurisdictions, and that the public utilities shall be deprived of no right of contest, no right of appearance, no right of going to the court, no right of going to the Supreme Court of the United States—but that they shall be compelled to take one course within the State, and then go, if they desire, to the United States Supreme Court.

And I submit the case to you upon that basis.

Mr. CONDON. May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman, of Senator JOHNSON?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CONDON. Do you know, Senator JOHNSON, how the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate voted on the bill when it reported it to the Senate?

Senator JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONDON. Was there a definite division of the committee?

Senator JOHNSON. Yes; there were 3 votes against.

Mr. CONDON. Of the whole membership of the Committee on the Judiciary, there were 3 votes against it?

Senator JOHNSON. Yes; and if you want to know, I shall be glad to tell you who they were.

Mr. CONDON. No.

Senator JOHNSON. There was a majority and a minority report; and both the majority and minority reports are at your disposal if you wish.

Mr. MCKEOWN (acting chairman). I thank you very much, Senator.

Senator JOHNSON. I thank you for your courtesy, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen. I appreciate the opportunity to be before you here. It is not often my privilege to come before a committee of the House in this fashion, and I assure you that I welcome the opportunity and I thank you for giving it to me.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Senator JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. How many cases of this sort have there been in recent years?

Senator JOHNSON. Well, there were some statistics given by the power companies that would indicate that the number of them has not been very large. But the quality of them was important—just like the New York Telephone case and like the P.G.E. case in California. They are the big cases that take in the great mass of subscribers, and that is the thing that is important, the particular kind of case and the number of people they affect; that is much more important than the number of cases which have been brought.

Mr. LEWIS. Will those statistics be placed in the record?

Senator JOHNSON. Well, I think there are about 11,453 power representatives here against this bill; and I have no doubt that some of them will present the statistics. If that is not done, I shall be very glad to furnish you the testimony that was taken before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, wherein those statistics were given.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, most assuredly it is embarrassing for one of my limitations to follow the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] and discuss any matter on constitutional grounds. I listened with great interest to the remarks of this distinguished lawyer. It is beyond me to understand wherein the passage of the Johnson bill does violence to the Constitution. The Johnson bill leaves with the utility every right that such an institution had the day the Constitution was written. The Constitution as such creates only one Federal court and that is the Supreme Court. Section 1 of article III reads:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

The day that the First Congress convened, a utility, if one had existed then, would have enjoyed the same identical rights that it will enjoy after the Johnson bill is enacted, namely, it could seek its redress in the State courts, and if, indeed, the State courts had not extended to it every constitutional right, it could appeal from the State supreme court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

If the utilities have any particular vested right in the inferior Federal courts, to wit, the district courts and the circuit courts, it is a right which has been given to them by the mandate of Congress, not by the Constitution.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I yield.

Mr. BECK. The gentleman did not understand that I said anything contrary, did he? I agree with the gentleman that the Congress had complete power.

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes; but I do not see wherein we are taking any constitutional privilege away from those companies. The question resolves itself down to this: Which court is going to protect these companies in the first instance, the State court or the Federal court? Both courts are bound by the Constitution of the United States to respect every constitutional right of the utilities. The obligation is just as great upon a State court, be it a trial court or the State supreme court, to respect the constitutional rights of the utilities as is the obligation upon the Federal courts. Article VI:

> This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

To follow to its logical conclusion the position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, namely, that if we pass the Johnson bill, property rights of these utilities will be destroyed, we must take the position that we do not believe that the State courts will meet their binding constitutional obligations to respect the constitutional rights of these companies. We have not taken a single right away from those companies by the enactment of the Johnson bill. We have simply transferred jurisdiction to the State courts from the local Federal courts. The same constitutional obligation is upon both courts to protect the rights of these companies. My distinguished friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania quotes Lord Macauley's prophecy of the ultimate downfall of our Republic. For us to assume that this bill fulfills the prophecy of Lord Macauley, that in some day of depression the American Congress will surrender the rights of property, then it must follow that we believe that State courts will betray their duty and have no regard for property rights. The enactment of this bill cannot mark the beginning of the downfall of the Republic unless indeed we must take the position that State courts are absolutely not dependable. If the passage of the Johnson bill is an expression of lack of confidence on the part of the Federal courts by the Congress, then I say to you that the defeat of the Johnson bill marks lack of confidence on the part of Congress in the State courts of this country. For my part, I am yet a believer in the sovereignty of the State, not that that sovereignty means the right to secede, but that that sovereignty means the right of a State to be the master of its own household.

There is not a utility doing business in a single State of this Union except that it went into that State of its own free will and accord. If that utility cannot trust the laws of that State and the courts of that State, then it should not have gone into that State and entered into business. In actual practice this is what has happened: The utilities have gone into the various States and set up business; but from the very beginning, in most instances, they did not have enough respect for that State to take out a corporation charter in that State. They went into the State with their fingers crossed, and did as the gentleman said—went down to Delaware or some other State and obtained a corporation charter, and did it for the avowed purpose of ignoring and escaping the jurisdiction of the courts of the State in which they chose to do business.

In other words, they go into the States to enjoy all the blessings, but wanting at all times to be in the position of saying, "No; we are not responsible to you."

Another thing, the Johnson bill simply provides that after the State utilities commissions have established their rates, judicial appeals must first be taken to the courts of the State. Then, upon final decision by the supreme court of the State, if they have been denied their constitutional rights, they have their right to appeal to the only Federal Court created by the Constitution, to wit, the Supreme Court of the United States.

This Congress has an equal right to limit the jurisdiction of these inferior courts that some other Congress had to create them in the first instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] has expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. In actual practice, when the Johnson bill is enacted into law, not a single constitutional right or privilege will be taken away from a single utility. What will be taken away from the utilities is a sort of special privilege which they gain for themselves by an abuse of their opportunity to invoke the jurisdiction of local Federal courts. Invoking that jurisdiction, not so much for the purpose of obtaining justice or redressing a wrong but for the primary purpose of gaining delay, which is in no sense justice in and of itself.

Speaking of our Federal judiciary, when the Johnson bill is enacted it will go a long way toward restoring the utmost respect for the Federal courts.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I cannot yield because my time is very limited. I am sorry. At least, the utilities will cease to be so much interested in the appointment of local Federal judges. If local Federal courts have lost public confidence, I say to you there has not been one single thing more responsible for it than the undue activity of the utilities when it came to appointing Federal judges. The people firmly believe that their activity was not based primarily upon obtaining competent men to be Federal judges, but primarily upon picking men whose viewpoint would at least be friendly.

That is a cold fact, not a radical statement, just the truth. Everyone knows if there is anything wrong with the Johnson bill no one is to blame save the utilities themselves. They have brought this upon themselves by abusing their opportunity to invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, invoking that jurisdiction not for the primary purpose of redressing a wrong or obtaining justice but primarily for the purpose of obtaining delay. They have brought it upon themselves for the further reason that they have made themselves obnoxious in the matter of the appointment of local Federal judges. If the Federal judiciary is in any disrepute, it is largely because the people believe that the utilities have unduly used the local Federal courts as a means to an end which they did not deserve.

I am going to support the Johnson amendment not alone because I believe it is right, but I am going to support it for another reason: I believe it is beneath the dignity of a sovereign State that its courts and its executive branch may be set aside and ignored by any power less than the Supreme Court of the United States, a power created by the Constitution itself. If a sovereign State's executive and judiciary are to be ignored and overridden by injunction and other orders from inferior Federal courts, then the sovereignty of the States is a myth.

It is singular that Congress should here today be called upon to take so much interest in protecting the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Let me tell you when Congress would better be thinking about the jurisdiction it is taking away from Federal courts; not today when we are merely leaving specific jurisdiction in the State courts which are under the same constitutional obligations as the Federal courts; but rather when we sit here day by day establishing governmental bureaus which take unto themselves jurisdiction which should be retained by the courts.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. It is bureaucracy which is destroying the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The time for Congress to think of the dignity of the Federal courts is when Congress sits here day by day and establishes governmental bureaus which in the end become tyrannical and destroy the liberties of our citizens. I would be opposed to this bill if it took from the judiciary the liberties of the American citizen and heaped those liberties into the lap of a bureaucracy; but that is not this bill. This bill declares only that the judiciary which will have jurisdiction in a given matter is the State judiciary, where American citizens will certainly have their day in court.

As for my own part, I am not afraid to trust the State judiciary. Maybe some local judge will be reelection minded, but, if so, he only befouls his own decision. There is, however, a State supreme court which will pass upon his decision; and it is beyond my belief that the supreme court of any State in the Union is deliberately going to sustain a political finding of a State utilities commission which political finding actually confiscates the property of any utility doing business in that State. If that should happen, the utility may still have its appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, if the House desires to pass any legislation of this type, it had better pass the Johnson bill without amendment of any kind or character. The adoption of any sort of amendment, in my judgment, will jeopardize the enactment of legislation dealing with this subject. I make this statement advisedly. I make it from an observation of the history and course of this proposed legislation.

The influences behind the opposition to this bill—and in making this statement I exclude my colleagues who oppose its passage—are of the most powerful character. They do not work in the open, and they have at their command some of the shrewdest and most capable men in this country. As an evidence of this fact they have not only prevented the consideration of legislation of this kind during the several preceding Congresses during which it has been pending, but during the present session of Congress with a President who is earnestly in favor of the passage of the bill, with all of the public-utility commissions of the country except one or two endorsing it, with a tremendous public sentiment behind it and with, as I earnestly believe, the approval of a majority of the Membership of this House behind it, they have been able to postpone its consideration in the committee and in the House and to dilly-dally with it and finally to substitute an amendment which destroys the purposes of the original bill. The adoption by this body of any sort of an amendment to the Senate measure would simply play into the hands of the utilities and allow further opportunity for delay.

This bill passed the Senate on the 14th day of February. It has been pending before the Judiciary Committee for almost 3 months; and despite the fact that the chairman of the committee was earnestly in favor of its consideration and its being reported out, we have had to delay for this long period of time before having an opportunity in the closing days of the session to present it for the consideration of the House.

The Johnson bill contains but one substantive proposition, and that is to divest the district courts of the United States of jurisdiction in public-utility rate cases of an intrastate character where—and I call attention particularly to these features of the bill—a fair hearing after notice has been had before the State public utility commission and where an adequate remedy for any wrong is provided in the courts of law and equity of that State. Now, it ought not to take any committee 3 months to pass upon this proposition. Were I to undertake to detail some of the apparently innocent causes that brought about this long and inexcusable delay, such detail would make quite an interesting story in itself. Why, Mr. Chairman, some of the men who have been supporting this Lewis substitute, who have been urging it as a remedy for the evils which they recognize exist, after its adoption was secured in committee appeared before the Rules Committee of this House and urged that no rule be granted even for its consideration, although they had previously given it their approval. Forces of the opposition, again excluding my colleagues, do not want anything except delay, delay which means death, death to this legislation or to any other legislation which really corrects the evils complained of.

I think there is something innate in human nature that recognizes the justice of the proposition that a public-utility corporation created by a State, owing its very life to the exercise of the powers of that State, owing its franchises to State power or the power of some subdivision of a State, should be willing to submit its rights to adjudication by the courts of that State.

Its incorporators had no reason to apprehend injustices from the courts of the State. They had no reason to apprehend the oppressive use of power by the officials of the State. If they had, they would not have invested their money within the borders of that State.

Mr. Chairman, they do not fear injustice from the State courts. In the hearings before the committee those opposing the passage of the original Johnson bill were repeatedly challenged to point out one single instance where an injustice had come to a public utility corporation through the action of a State court, and they were unable to do so. On the other hand, numerous instances were pointed out where long delays of 10 years or more and large losses in money had been incurred by the patrons of these public utilities, and many other injustices had resulted from the exercise of Federal court jurisdiction. There was absolutely nothing proven in this record, and I challenge those who are supporting the Lewis substitute to find anything to the contrary of the statement, showing that any injustice has resulted in public-utility cases in which resort was had to State tribunals. Numerous instances were disclosed by the record where severe and tremendous injustices resulted because of resort to Federal tribunals. Is it not perfectly evident that the desire of these public-utility corporations to continue to go to the Federal courts is a desire not to seek justice, but to have injustice done?

It developed in the hearings before the committee that the case known as the "New York Telephone case" had remained pending for some 10 or 12 years. The amount collected by the telephone company over and above what was allowed by the public service commission was deposited in the chancery of the court. After the telephone company finally lost the case they were directed to refund the money to the patrons, but they were not able to refund $600,000 because in this long interval of time a sufficient number of patrons to be entitled to that sum of money had moved away, had died, or had become otherwise inaccessible, and, so far as the record discloses, the $600,000 was converted into the treasury of the telephone company, money to which it was not entitled, but which it was enabled to secure through this Federal court procedure.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I would prefer to finish my statement first.

On the 30th of April of this year the Supreme Court, after 11 years' delay, reversed the case of Lindheimer and others against Illinois Bell Telephone Co., a case that has been pending since 1923. In that case, according to newspaper accounts, $20,000,000 has accumulated in the chancery of the court. This $20,000,000 was collected in excess of the rates allowed by the Public Service Commission of the State of Illinois, an amount which, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, they were not entitled to collect and which must now be refunded to the patrons who were required illegally to pay it in, and in the distribution of this sum it is fair to conclude that perhaps a million dollars or more, judging by the precedent established in the New York Telephone case, will remain in the coffers of the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. and will never reach the people to whom it belongs.

I have not any prejudice against public-service corporations. I know that they are owned by citizens who are just as much entitled to have their legal rights respected as are citizens who do not own stock in such corporations. I would stand here just as strongly as any man in this House against any measure which would deprive them of their proper protection by law, but I insist that they are not entitled to rights and privileges which are not accorded to ordinary citizens of our country.

It is useless to paw over the ashes of the Constitutional Convention and try to find some shred of debate or expression upon which to hang the contention that the makers of the Constitution intended to have Federal courts established with jurisdiction of this character. There is but one Court whose establishment was mandatory under the Constitution—the Supreme Court. Congress, having created the district courts, unquestionably has power to fix their jurisdiction. Those statements require no debate. The amendment of the Constitution under which Federal district courts assume jurisdiction in most rate cases was not adopted for three quarters of a century after the Constitutional Convention. I am referring to the "due process of law" clause in the fourteenth amendment, a limitation of the power of the States and not to the limitation upon Federal power in similar language contained in the fifth amendment.

What is "due process of law"? Many definitions have been given for it. "Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice", says Story. I prefer that given in the decision in Hurtado v. California (110 U.S. 516):

> Any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age or custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice.

Talk about due process of law. When a public-service commission hears a case after notice and renders a fair decision, is that not due process of law? It is to the citizen. He has to abide by it. Why should not the power company and the gas company or the telephone company abide by the same decision? If an injustice is done, if property is sought to be confiscated by the rate which is being promulgated, they have a right to resort to the tribunals of the State, and from there appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Can there be confiscation of property under a procedure of that sort?

Let me call your attention to the fact that this clause in the fourteenth amendment, upon which the public utility corporations rely in going into the Federal courts, covers life and liberty as well as property, and yet whoever heard of a Federal court undertaking to interfere in the administration of State criminal court affairs, even to save the life or the liberty of a citizen where the State courts were proceeding according to law?

Is it right to accord to these public utility corporations in the protection of property under the fourteenth amendment, the due-process clause, rights, and privileges which are not accorded to the ordinary citizen when he may undertake to resort to them for the protection of his life or his liberty?

Some reference was made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] in the course of his speech to certain occurrences in the State of Georgia. I want to briefly refer to the matter. I do not know what the facts of the various rate cases pending at this time in the State of Georgia are, but I do know that the public-service corporations who claim to have been ill-treated could have received justice had they resorted to the tribunals of our State. I know that among the public-service corporations which have appealed to the Federal courts are 10 independent telephone companies, 1 in my own town of 10,000 people. The owners of that company are my neighbors. They are good people. Everyone in our section of the country likes them. There was no need to appeal to the Federal courts in order to secure justice, but they did appeal to the three-judge Federal court.

A hearing was set down at New Orleans, seven or eight hundred miles away. Of course, there was no one in my town who was sufficiently interested in the matter to pay the expenses of a trip to New Orleans, not to speak of paying attorney fees and otherwise undertaking to resist their action, and in times like these it is very difficult for private citizens to raise by private contribution sufficient money for purposes of that kind, and no public money was available, and the the result was that the case before the three-judge court went practically by default. May I ask whether or not it would have been a hardship in that case to have required these people, good citizens, well liked by everybody in my county and in my section of the State, to submit their case to our own State tribunal?

They say that the Governor of Georgia ran for office upon a certain platform having to do with utility rates. The exact facts of the matter were not correctly quoted by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS]. It is true that he suspended the public-service commission of my State and appointed a new commission. He had the right under the laws of Georgia to suspend the public-service commission. His action in so doing is to be reviewed by the next legislature that meets in that State and to be reviewed also by the people of that State, because he is a candidate for reelection in the election which is pending at this time. If he has done any injustice to any public-service corporation of the State, if he has done an injustice to any public official of the State, you may rest assured that the people of Georgia will correct that injustice. The State courts of Georgia will also, if appealed to, correct any injustice which may have been done to any public-service corporation of that State.

What we are objecting to, Mr. Chairman, and what I feel we are justified in objecting to, is having the Federal courts of this country pass upon either political or judicial questions properly within State court jurisdiction, for the people of the State of Georgia, for example, who are perfectly competent to pass upon their own political questions and whose courts are perfectly competent, as they have one of the finest arrays of judges in the whole country, to pass upon the rights of their citizens in a judicial way.

Now, let me call attention, in conclusion, again to the statement of President Roosevelt, made when he was Governor of the State of New York, in a message to the legislature of that State, and I ask unanimous consent to insert his entire remarks, which are only some 10 or 12 lines in length, in the course of my speech.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PEYSER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. I call your attention to this. He says:

> The recent decision of the Federal court in the southern district of New York, permitting the New York Telephone Co. drastically to raise its telephone rates, brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States court with the regulatory powers of our public-service commission. * * *
> It means that hearings and trials which rightfully should be held before our public-service commission or before State courts are, by a scratch of the pen, transferred to a special master appointed by the Federal court. The State regulatory body * * * is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master, who is unequipped by experience and training, as well as by staff and assistants, to pursue that searching inquiry into the claims of the company which the consuming public is entitled to demand. The special master becomes the ratemaker; the public-service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy. This power of the Federal court must be abrogated.

Now, if you are in agreement with the views of the President of the United States as expressed in this message, you are bound to conclude that the innocuous provisions of the Lewis substitute would simply defeat the purposes of this legislation. It would not abrogate the powers of the Federal courts. It would simply regulate procedure in the Federal courts and the right to resort to the Federal courts and to use them as instruments of delay over long periods of years, as has been done in so many instances heretofore, would still remain.

I now yield to my friend from Colorado, who indicated a few minutes ago he wished to interrogate me.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Perhaps I misunderstood my colleague, but he certainly knows, does he not, that the chairman of the committee, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, and I appeared before the Rules Committee and urged the committee to grant the rule on this matter?

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman certainly did and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas did, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], who made such an able argument a few minutes ago in favor of the gentleman's substitute, also appeared before the Rules Committee and urged the committee not to grant a rule for the consideration of this legislation. That is true, is it not, may I ask my colleague?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I do not know as to the second statement, but I know as to my own position.

Mr. TARVER. Does the gentleman not know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] appeared before the Rules Committee in opposition to the granting of this rule?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I do not so understand. I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made that statement to the Chairman of the Rules Committee in the presence both of the gentleman and myself and I thought he had heard the remark.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. No.

Mr. TARVER. And the gentleman also made a speech before the committee, which I heard, and I was under the impression the gentleman heard, in which he urged the committee, on account of what he referred to as the economic conditions at this particular time, not to grant any rule for the consideration of the bill at all.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I desire to ask the gentleman if I did not insist upon this rule being granted.

Mr. TARVER. I have already stated that the gentleman did so insist, but I am surprised that the gentleman did not hear the equally earnest insistence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the rule should not be granted.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I did not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am not one who is willing to concede that the courts of my State are not so constituted that they are unable to handle State affairs without interference from the Federal courts. If a foreign corporation desires to enter my State it should be willing to abide by the laws of my State and bow to the decisions of its regulatory commissions and its courts. So far as I am aware, no influence was brought to bear that resulted in foreign corporations setting up public utilities in Missouri. They came of their own accord. The experience of the present Chief Executive of the Nation when Governor of New York cited in the committee report is in itself sufficient to warrant us to vote down the proposed substitute and enact the Johnson bill. Permit me to quote his special message to the New York Legislature in January 1930. It follows:

> The recent decision of the Federal court in the southern district of New York, permitting the New York Telephone Co. drastically to raise its telephone rates, brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States courts with the regulatory powers of our public-service commission. * * *
> It means that hearings and trials which rightfully should be held before our public-service commission or before State courts are, by a scratch of the pen, transferred to a special master appointed by the Federal court. The State regulatory body * * * is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master, who is unequipped by experience and training, as well as by staff and assistants, to pursue that searching inquiry into the claims of the company which the consuming public is entitled to demand. The special master becomes the rate maker; the public-service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy.
>
> This power of the Federal court must be abrogated. Only the Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose. * * * I recommend to your honorable bodies that you memorialize the Congress to pass this legislation.

The Johnson bill is the legislation he referred to.

The regulatory powers of a State public-service commission will not be subject to the jurisdiction of the district Federal court if we enact the Johnson bill. In doing so we are not denying the utilities any of their constitutional rights, because if a proper showing can be made, say if the rate in question was a violation of the provision in the Constitution against the confiscation of property without due process of law, then an appeal to the United States Supreme Court would be in order. Can you conceive of anything more fair? Can anyone deny that this avenue is open to the corporations?

State rights have been preached in this hall since the first day that the Congress assembled. Where is the advocate of State rights who is willing now to vote for a measure which in effect says your State courts will not decide the issue—it will be left to the Federal court?

Your legislature has created your public-utilities commission, due to the demand of the citizens of the State. The officials are answerable to the people of the State. After thorough investigation the commission renders its decision. If you pass the Senate bill you say to the commission, The courts of your State will hear the complaint, and then if the corporation is not satisfied you can appeal to the highest court in the land. I submit nothing could be more fair.

I say to the foreign corporation that if you do not propose to be satisfied with the acts of the utilities commission of a State you should not enter, or, if doing business in the State, you should get out.

The inspired propaganda in opposition to the Senate bill has reached my office. Some very good friends of mine have petitioned me to support the Lewis substitute, but I cannot follow their suggestion and at the same time properly protect the interests of the people I represent. Of course the propaganda is one-sided. The masses of the people whose interest we should protect probably have never heard of the bill now before us. So long as we do nothing that can be classed as unfair to foreign corporations in denying them the right to take their cases to Federal courts there should be no complaint.

The report carries a table showing the civil cases filed in Federal courts during the calendar year 1929. Take the Federal district in which I reside, the eastern district of Missouri. During that period 446 cases were filed, and the diversity-of-citizenship clause accounts for 243. In other words, if the Senate bill now before us was a law in 1929, 243 of the cases would have been tried in the State courts rather than in the Federal courts. Consider, if you please, the amount that this law cost the people of my community. It costs much more to enter the Federal courts than the State courts.

The Senate bill seeks to take from the corporations a special privilege they now enjoy. It denies the right of a corporation, incorporated in a foreign State, to come into my State and do business and then say, although I insist upon the right to do business in your State, I refuse to submit to the courts of your State or accept the decisions of your regulatory commissions.

Fear not about the constitutionality of the pending bill. If it were not constitutional the large corporations would not be opposing it. That is sufficient to settle the question of constitutionality so far as I am concerned.

Pass the Senate bill and you will place human rights above property rights. The House substitute would place property rights above human rights.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I am going to address myself to the practical effects of the substitute bill as I view it. I do not want to seem to treat a serious subject lightly, but to my mind the arguments that have been addressed to the Committee by some of the proponents of this committee amendment strike me as almost humorous. I was entertained by the charm of manner of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], and yet those of us on the committee know it to be a fact that the gentleman has never been in favor of this amendment.

I have long admired his learning and his political sagacity, but I cannot always agree with his political philosophy.

As a matter of fact, this particular amendment was conceived in the fertile brain of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He suggested the able member of the committee who should write the substitute amendment.

For the purpose of having the amendment enacted into law? Oh, not at all, but for the purpose of defeating the Johnson bill.

Let it be understood that what I am about to say is half facetious and half serious, and let it be understood, too, that I entertain for the gentleman from Colorado the highest respect, and I know that his sincerity and good faith are not open to question or criticism. He is honest and sincere in the position he has taken, but I do believe that his judgment as to the practical effect of this amendment is ill-considered. Proceeding again facetiously, permit me to suggest that we have a strange child among us in the form of this substitute amendment. The gentleman from Colorado stands in loco parentis, and is going to have to legally support the child. Proper filiation proceedings, I am sure, would safeguard the rights which justly belong to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

I think I do not go too far afield when I suggest that this brain child is sired by reaction and damned by everybody. [Laughter.]

What is the real purpose of it? Let us go back a moment in the history of this legislation. The Seventy-second Congress held hearings before the Senate committee for 3 or 4 days. Everybody was heard who wanted to be heard; everybody had an opportunity to address his arguments to that committee. After they were concluded the subcommittee made its report to the full committee. Then the opponents of the bill came in and said that they wanted a further hearing. So the matter was again recommitted to the subcommittee. The same gentlemen came in, made the same arguments, and were heard for 3 or 4 days again. Then the subcommittee reported to the full committee and the full committee reported out the legislation.

But here is the joke of it. The Seventy-second Congress was by this time drawing to a close, and it was too late to get the legislation through. The same situation prevails here today. Generally speaking, nobody wants the Lewis amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, according to his own words, is not going to be here to vote for it. He appeared before the Rules Committee and objected to its being heard on the floor. The Lewis substitute is desired for the purpose of killing the Johnson bill.

The opponents of any legislation of this character know and I know and you know that the Senate is not going to be satisfied with this Lewis substitute, and is not going to accept it. As a matter of fact, I may say in passing, that the Lewis substitute was never seriously considered by the committee. It was never read in committee, it was never discussed in committee, it was never open for amendment in committee. It is simply an attempt to defeat the Johnson bill. Here is what they expect to happen—here is what will happen if you adopt this substitute: It will go over to the Senate, the Senate will refuse to concur, and the result will be that no legislation will pass, and that is exactly what they want and what they expect.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. KURTZ. To ask the gentleman whether or not I appeared before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. LLOYD. I understand not. There is only one question here and it is well defined and clear. Either you will pass this Johnson bill as written, or you will not pass any legislation at all. The only thing that I am concerned in, and the big question before you is, whether or not the sovereign States of this country shall be accorded the opportunity and the right, free and untrammeled from the interference of a foreign jurisdiction and foreign power, to deal with their citizens and the property of their citizens as they do in other cases. If you believe there are abuses that demand correction at the hands of this Congress, let me urge upon you that you vote down this amendment and pass the Johnson bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer and, therefore, not competent to discuss the strictly technical side of this question. There are, however, practical implications flowing from the existing situation, which the Johnson bill, which I am in favor of, will correct. These implications appeal to me as being worthy of very careful consideration. They should, I believe, command the vote of every Member of this House who believes that the people of a State, when they grant to a corporation a franchise to do business within that State, should have the right to govern the actions of that corporation within its borders. We have heard a great deal here about confiscation by reason of lowered rates. The confiscation they talk about is based on a fiction. Let that sink in. These corporations go before a State commission and make a showing on their capital structure which has been watered from 3 to 10 times, and ask that commission to order the people of that State to pay rates that would warrant dividends on stocks of various classes that have no basic value at all. They go before the commission with a battery of high-priced lawyers and rate experts, and they undertake to justify these rates by presenting a mass of highly technical engineering and other facts. And after they have built up a record that would almost break the ordinary city treasury to have it printed, they let the case drag along until it begins to look bad, then stop and jump into the Federal courts. That record is dead, and they build up another one, and the result is that the ordinary community has not the financial capacity to follow those fellows through all of the courts and ultimately get justice for their people. Where it is a small city case the people are helpless. We will take the case in Illinois that was closed the other day. That case has been in court 11 years. The newspapers pointed out that $20,000,000 was going to be given back to the people.

The gentleman who spoke before me referred to the fact that at least a million of it would not reach the people entitled to it. Mr. Chairman, if the people of Chicago, Ill., get $6,000,000 out of that $20,000,000, they will get a lot, because people move in and move out and move away. In California we had a similar thing, and I venture to say that not over 50 percent of the amount granted got back to the people to whom it belonged. That has been their play—delay. What has that delay meant? It has meant injustice for every man and woman in the State who paid their rates and who depended on their State authorities to check the highway robbery being practiced on them, and then when they got a decision from their State body these fellows slid out from under and went to a Federal court. And for the purposes of the people of the State, their case did go to a foreign jurisdiction. And I say it is the duty of this Congress to say to every public utility, "When you go into a State and collect money and operate under a franchise from that State, it is your duty to be governed by the laws of that State." That is the question that we are discussing here, not some film of technicality which talks about the various amendments to the Constitution and the due-process clause and all the honeyed and stately phrases of the law on the floor of this House. Confiscation as they claim it is nothing but a fiction, based on watered stock and pyramided holding companies of the character that we hear so much about, and which have been so thoroughly exposed in the Insull and other cases. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CARPENTER] such time as he desires.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I wish to have the privilege of making a statement in favor of the original Senate bill (S. 752), introduced in the Senate by Senator JOHNSON, of California, and passed by that body on February 6, 1934, and which is now about to be considered by the House of Representatives. The question is whether or not the House will accept the original bill introduced in the Senate, or the bill as it was amended in the House Judiciary Committee. To me, this is the real test of the true friends of honest utility regulation. A vote in favor of the amended Senate bill is a vote in favor of the continuation of the prolonged advantage that the public-utility companies have had in the past. Such companies have successfully defeated the efforts of consumers, State utility commissions, and municipalities in their fight for reasonable rates. A vote in favor of the original Senate bill is a vote to expedite the course of justice and fair dealing and the securing of reasonable rates.

In order to be entirely specific, I am herewith stating the original Senate bill, which I favor:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, no district court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of an administrative board or commission of a State, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with any such order, where jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States, where such order (1) affects rates chargeable by a public utility, (2) does not interfere with interstate commerce, and (3) has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State."

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not affect suits commenced in the district courts, either originally or by removal, prior to its passage; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

In order to show the attitude of the administration and of the President of the United States on this legislation, I am also inserting a copy of a message President Roosevelt sent to the State Legislature of New York when he was Governor of that great State:

The recent decision of the Federal Court in the Southern District of New York permitting the New York Telephone Co. drastically to raise its telephone rates brings to the fore in a striking way the whole question of interference by the United States courts with the regulatory powers of our Public Service Commission.

It means that hearings and trials which rightfully should be held before our public-service commission or before State courts are, by a scratch of the pen, transferred to a special master appointed by the Federal court. The State regulatory body * * * is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master, who is unequipped by experience and training, as well as by staff and assistants, to pursue that searching inquiry into the claims of the company which the consuming public is entitled to demand. The special master becomes the rate maker; the public-service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy. .

This power of the Federal court must be abrogated.

This is the language of President Roosevelt:

Only Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose. * * * I recommend to your honorable bodies that you memorialize the Congress to pass this legislation.

If this bill should be enacted into law, the effect of it would be to take away the jurisdiction of the United States district court to issue an injunction against putting into effect any order of a State commission having charge of public-utility matters where the jurisdiction is claimed by reason of diverse citizenship. It will take away jurisdiction from the Federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship to issue an injunction restraining the enforcement of a rate or order made by a State public-utility commission. It will also take away the jurisdiction of the Federal court to issue an injunction on other grounds if the State, where the order is made by the State commission, has provided for a remedy of appeal by which any party to the suit can pass to the supreme court of the State, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States.

All this talk about taking away the rights of individuals disappears. There is no one, not even a widow or orphan, who will be deprived of her or its day in court if this bill passes. The savings banks of the country which have invested their property in public-utility bonds or stocks will not be deprived of the right to go into court and eventually to reach the Supreme Court of the United States.

At the present time most of the public utilities, in one way or another, are subsidiary to some corporation, sometimes in the fourth, fifth, or sixth degree, and are organized in some State where they do not do business, where they have no property, where none of their officials live. That seems clear. There is but one object: it is in order to let them come into the Federal courts instead of the State courts in case they are sued or in case they sue anybody else. In other words, the corporation is always a resident of a State other than the State in which it does business. This is a suspicious circumstance to begin with. That on the face of it does not look right.

Let me tell the House of an instance that happened, as related by Senator NORRIS. The Nebraska Power Co. supplies Omaha and several surrounding cities in Nebraska with electric lights. It is incorporated in the State of Maine. It has no property in the State of Maine. It does not do any business in the State of Maine. The people who own the company and own its stock are not citizens of the State of Maine. Why is the company incorporated in the State of Maine? To give it an advantage under our law. When it is sued in the courts of Nebraska, it can stay in the State courts, go clear through to the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska, and if it is finally defeated in the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska, before the edict or the order of the supreme court can be sent down to the lower court, before that court can take it up and render a judgment according to the decision of the supreme court, the company can dismiss the suit, and no final judgment has been rendered.

The next day or the same day the company can commence another suit in the Federal court, get an injunction on the allegation that the corporation is a citizen of the State of Maine, and consequently, under the laws of Congress has a right to go in the Federal court. Having lost out all the way along through the State courts, being dissatisfied, it commences at the bottom of the ladder in the Federal district court, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States.

This is a right given to no citizen of a State. The citizen has to commence his action and maintain his rights in the courts of his State. But here is a concern doing business of, perhaps, the same nature as that of the citizen—in the same State but incorporated in the State of Maine—and it has the choice of going into either the State court or the Federal court under our law.

Is it an injustice to compel the Nebraska Power Co. to resort, if it has any difficulty, to the courts of Nebraska? They do not have to be in Nebraska. They voluntarily located there and they are doing business under a Nebraska law. Yet a Federal court is their haven of refuge—I will not say it is so considered because they get more favorable consideration there—I will say it is because they have the Federal courts to go to, and they have the opportunity to go into either one of two courts to try one for a while, and if they do not like it, to stop there and commence in the other court, an advantage that the citizen of the State does not possess.

In order to show why it is necessary for these utility companies to charge outrageous rates I am inserting the results of an investigation into the affairs and methods of the Nebraska Power Co., located in Omaha, and showing conclusively the methods of conducting their affairs and why such organizations are now doing their utmost to defeat the purposes of the legislation coming before the House.

When we get to Nebraska the first thing we run up against is the Nebraska Power Co. It is the great representative there of the Electric Bond & Share Co., of Wall Street, New York. The Nebraska Power Co. was developed from the systems of the Omaha Electric Light & Power Co. and the Citizens' Gas & Electric Co., of Council Bluffs, which was a subsidiary of the Omaha company. The Council Bluffs company, now a subsidiary of the Nebraska Power Co., is known today as the Citizens' Power & Light Co. The Omaha and Council Bluffs companies together serve a population of about 214,000 in Omaha and 42,000 in Council Bluffs, and operate also in about 40 towns and rural territories within a radius of 50 miles of Omaha and within a radius of 25 miles of Council Bluffs in Iowa.

As a foundation for the financial manipulation which took place in the transfer of 1917 and since there are the extraordinary growth and the ample and sustained earning power of these Omaha and Council Bluffs utilities. The Nebraska

Power Co. itself has acknowledged that its steady growth and financial success has been due in a considerable part to the foodstuffs industries in and about Omaha, which show a steady growth without violent fluctuations in periods of inflation or deflation. This is shown from a transcript of the Federal Trade Commission hearings, March 9, 1932, at page 19578.

In the 1917 transfer the value of the properties was written up overnight by more than 100 percent. To get the full significance of this write-up it is necessary to go back some years into the early history of the Omaha utilities. Now, overnight—and this is from the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission—the capitalization had pumped into it 100 percent of water and the next morning that was gold. When we go back we find that the writing up of the assets and the issuing of watered stock began very early, so that the inflated financial structure of 1917 was reared not upon a solid foundation of property or value but in large part upon water that had been pumped earlier into the old companies, as well as the new companies, which the Omaha council has imputed is "a most profligate issuing of stocks and bonds that represented no investment whatever."

Here is a sketch of what happened. The original electric plant was built in Omaha in 1885. It changed hands in 1889 and again in 1903. When the second transfer took place in 1903 an inventory was prepared indicating that the utility company itself valued its properties at that time at $794,000. Yet these properties changed hands with a capitalization of $1,201,000, as they passed out of the control of the old owners, and with a capitalization of $3,831,000 as they came into the control of the new owners. Just get that picture. In the first place, they themselves admitted that the total valuation was only $794,000 when the original company sold it, but they sold it at a value of $1,201,000—quite a profit that was for one day—they sold it to another corporation, and the next day on the books of the new company the valuation was $3,831,000, showing that overnight two transactions of converting water into gold had taken place.

It was the conviction of Omaha's mayor and city council, expressed in a rate decision years later, that even the $1,201,000 exceeded the value of the property; and these officials found that when the capitalization was boosted to $3,831,000, or more than 200 percent, in 1903, not a stick nor a stone of property was added; not a single thing of value was added except 200 percent of water. The additional securities were water. A utility baron of that city took them for his own when he acquired the control of an old company and transferred its properties to a new one headed by himself. His little deal was exceedingly profitable, for in later years, between 1903 and 1917, the new company's common stock, all "water", paid dividends as high as $600,000 a year—$600,000 annually for nothing. In those days even utility barons rated that as a pretty fair profit (Ex. 5038, app. 10, sheet 5, of the Federal Trade Commission).

At the same time that the fixed capital was written up and the watered stock was issued, apparently, the public-utility franchise which one of the old companies had obtained from the city of Omaha was put on the book as an asset having a value of $2,055,000, or more than three times the value of the company's tangible property as shown by its inventory, as shown by its own books. The franchise was greater in value than all the property they owned, as shown by their books; a franchise that, of course, did not cost a cent, a franchise that, as a matter of truth and honesty, belonged to the people of Omaha and not to the corporation.

The franchise was being carried on the books at this value when the Omaha system next changed hands in 1917.

When this transfer in 1917 took place the Omaha utility purported to have assets of $6,432,000, but, with the franchise value eliminated, the amount of the assets was only $4,377,000. It is by no means certain that they were worth even that much, because, as we have seen, the Omaha City Council believed that even before the franchise value was assigned in 1903 the utility's assets were overvalued, and the old inventory bears this out. But the power barons who took hold in 1917 were not concerned with pools of "water" behind; their eyes were glued upon the rivers of "water" and the floods of profits ahead. They hurdled clear over the $4,377,000 assets value without the franchise, and the $6,432,000 assets value with the franchise, and set up a new value of $13,500,000.

That is "going some." The mighty Electric Bond & Share Co. controlled by J. P. Morgan & Co. had taken charge. The whole of the transfer deal of 1917 was engineered by this company, which controls one of the greatest of all the power systems in the country, and has been in the forefront of every conflict between the Government and the power industry for years past.

The Electric Bond & Share Co. wished to obtain control of the power system centering around Omaha and to make this system a part of its own much greater system. This it accomplished, first, by buying up the common and preferred stocks of the Omaha Electric Light & Power Co. For those securities it paid, in one form or another, a total of $4,633,000. Then it took these same securities and sold them to one of its own subholding companies, the American Power & Light Co., for $5,865,000, netting a profit in cash and stock of $1,232,000. There was not any property added, it was the same property; they merely sold it to themselves and increased its value.

This sale need not be regarded very seriously as the American Power & Light Co. is, in fact, a sort of "paper" company, which is virtually identical with the Electric Bond & Share Co. itself; that is to say, it is staffed and officered by Electric Bond & Share Co., much of its controlling stock is held by Electric Bond & Share, and there are various other devices which make the union extraordinarily close. The American Power & Light Co., at any rate, paid the Electric Bond & Share for the Omaha securities by issuing demand notes and securities of its own and delivering them to the Electric Bond & Share Co. Then, being possessed of the securities of the old Omaha Co., the American Power & Light Co. turned them over to its new Nebraska Power Co. through a "dummy" and recapitalized the properties. In doing so it disregarded entirely the $4,377,000 which, be it remembered, was the amount of the assets with the franchise eliminated. It disregarded also the $4,633,000 which the Electric Bond & Share Co. had paid for the Omaha properties, the $5,865,000 which American Power & Light had paid to Electric Bond & Share for them, and the $6,432,000 purported fixed capital which appeared on the books of the old company. Instead of heeding any of these figures, it caused the new company to enter upon its books as fixed capital $13,500,000, and to issue its securities accordingly. This was accomplished merely by writing a new set of figures on the books.

The report of Examiner J. W. Adams, of the Federal Trade Commission, states explicitly that there was no change whatever in the amount or the character of the properties. All that happened was that the Omaha Electric Light & Power Co. closed its books on May 31, 1917, with a fixed capital of $6,432,000, and the Nebraska Power Co. opened its books the next day showing a fixed capital of $13,500,000. The difference, or write-up, was $7,068,000. Adding some write-up for the Council Bluffs subsidiary, there was a total write-up of $7,387,000. On the 31st day of May 1917, the corporation holding these properties in Omaha and vicinity was turned over to another corporation, and in the transaction, all of which was completed between the closing of one day's work and the opening of the next day's work, there was $7,387,000 of water pumped into the capitalization of that company, upon which the people of Omaha and vicinity will be paying revenue through all time unless some remedy in some way may be provided to rectify the condition.

The whole procedure was not only unsupported by any additions to plants or equipment, but it appears to have been entirely arbitrary. As in many other such deals, the Commission found no record of any appraisal of the properities. They did not even pretend to have an excuse; they just wrote that much water in the valuation on their books the next morning after the transfer had been made.

Against the "paper" addition to assets of $7,387,000, the promoters wrote up the company's surplus $177,000. Substantially all the rest of the increase was made on the basis for securities. Where $3,789,600 securities had been outstanding, exclusive of the big bond issues, the new company issued $10,999,500. (Transcript, Mar. 10, p. 19693.)

Substantially all these securities were delivered to the American Power & Light Co. A large portion of them was handed on by this company to the public. From $5,500,000 of the Nebraska Power Co. securities, the American Power & Light Co. realized at the time of the transfer, or thereafter more than $5,000,000. It took for itself $5,000,000 of the Nebraska Power Co.'s common stock. Since it paid for the Omaha properties, technically, the $5,865,000, and got back more than $5,000,000 of this through the sale of securities, the American Co.'s books should indicate cost to it, for the Nebraska Co.'s common stock, of about $766,000, but what the books show here is not the real truth.

The technical cost to the American Co. of the Omaha properties, $5,865,000, included the profit of $1,232,000 to the Electric Bond & Share Co., and the deal which gave rise to this profit was merely one between the left hand and the right hand.

The deal which gave rise to this profit was one merely between the right hand and the left hand. The Electric Bond & Share Co., the American Power & Light Co., and the Nebraska Power Co. were, for all practical purposes, a single entity. Their real nature is best illustrated by the fact that a law firm in Augusta, Maine, which looks after the incorporation of Electric Bond & Share enterprises and votes their stock by proxy, voted all the stock of all three companies at each stockholders' meeting.

We must remember they are incorporated over in Maine to do business in Nebraska.

When we eliminate the $1,232,000 profit to the Electric Bond & Share Co. on the sale of the Omaha properties to its own subholding company their cost was only $4,633,000. Then, since the American Power & Light Co. realized more than $5,000,000 from its security sales, it actually profited by approximately $466,000 besides retaining for itself the $5,000,000 of common stock at no cost. (Transcript, Mar. 10, p. 19702.)

The results were:

First, the expenses of the Omaha acquisition were paid.

Second, the Electric Bond & Share took a profit of $1,232,000 upon the sale of the Omaha properties to its subholding company, the American Power & Light Co.

Third, over and above these expenses and this profit there was an excess capitalization of $5,000,000 or more, which was utilized for the issuance of a huge block of common stock to the American Power & Light Co. at no cost, and in fact with a cash profit to that company on the side.

It is this huge block of common stock which has brought the greatest profit to the controlling interests, and which has chiefly served to drain off the excess earnings of the Omaha property, which means its excess collections from the consumers. This is clearly shown in the dividend records of the Nebraska Power Co. during the 12 years from 1917 to 1928.

In these 12 years there was paid in dividends a total of $7,663,000. Of this total, $4,075,000 was paid in dividends on the common stock alone, and virtually all of this common stock was held by the American Power & Light Co., which, as I have pointed out, is all but identical with the Electric Bond & Share Co. Therefore, say the Trade Commission's reports, the indications are that "practically all the $4,075,000 paid went to the American Power & Light Co." (exhibit 5038, p. 194). And remember that all these dividends were paid as a return on a supposed investment which was in reality no investment at all.

The holding company's pickings have grown richer from year to year. In 1924 these common-stock dividends amounted to only $367,000 a year; but by 1927 they had grown to $741,000, and by 1930 to $1,200,000 a year.

It may be wondered how profits so extravagant can be piled up on stock which is nothing but water. There are several very compelling reasons for this.

In the first place, there is the part played by the investor who is permitted by the promoting and controlling interests to put up all or nearly all of the money which is actually needed, either to take over properties or to expand them.

A second factor in making possible the huge profits is the phenomenal increase in the use of electricity. Between 1918 and 1930, the Nebraska Power Co.'s production increased about 325 percent. Thus, even if the cost of producing electricity had remained the same, the company could have made larger and larger profits from year to year.

But the cost, in fact, went down sharply, thus providing a third factor leading to increase of profits. In the same period, from 1918 to 1930, the average generating cost declined from approximately three quarters of a cent per kilowatt-hour to a little more than a third of a cent per kilowatt-hour (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19617).

Other costs also declined. The total expense per kilowatt-hour for both generation and distribution, including taxes and depreciation as well as uncollected bills, dropped from 2.23 cents in 1920 to 1.24 cents in 1930.

The reason for this sharp decline in costs were several. Because of the increased production there was a more continuous utilization of equipment. The equipment itself became more efficient. Accordingly the consumption of coal per kilowatt-hour was cut in half. The price of coal declined sharply, and likewise the prices of supplies needed for the power plants. Then the new machinery proved so efficient that instead of using more labor as the production increased the company actually used less labor. During the period from 1920 to 1930 for example, when production increased 180 percent the number of employees declined 5.6 percent, or from 124 to 117.

The vast savings which were made possible by all the factors were not, of course, monopolized entirely by the power company. It was necessary to reduce rates somewhat, although some of the reductions were made by the company against its will. At any rate, when the total expense of generation and distribution was declining from 2.23 cents to 1.24 cents per kilowatt-hour between 1920 and 1930, the average selling price of current to all classes of consumers dropped from 2.90 cents to 2.27 cents.

The Trade Commission's examiners even concede that by and large the savings in production and distribution costs were passed on to the consumers, but they point out that there were further large savings in financing which were not passed on at all. These savings were made possible by the financing of new construction, made necessary by the big increase in production and sales, by means of bonds and preferred stocks which carried moderate rates of interest.

The effect of these savings, due to declining costs and financing at low rates of interest, and the failure of the company to pass on more than a limited part of these savings to the consumers is more clearly shown in an analysis the Commission has made of the distribution of the consumer's dollar. Since the reorganization of 1917, the proportion of this dollar absorbed by production and distribution expenses, by interest, and by dividends on preferred stock has shown a marked decrease. During the same time there has been a marked increase in the portion of this consumer's dollar going into common-stock dividends and surplus. The result is that whereas in 1918 common-stock dividends and surplus absorbed only 3.58 cents of each dollar, by 1930 they were absorbing 22.77 cents, or nearly a fourth of every dollar the consumer paid in.

In newspaper accounts of the Trade Commission hearings there were cited rates of return on the common stock held by the holding company ranging up to 338 percent. Such a rate of return appears fantastic, but a close examination of the Commission's reports shows that even this figure is in a sense an understatement. To compute the rate of return it was necessary to credit the holding company with an equity in the common stock; and, although the company has such an equity from the accounting standpoint, this equity results entirely from an accumulation of the company's surplus earnings. It does not represent money which the holding company itself has furnished but money which consumers have paid in and which the company has permitted to remain in the enterprise over and above the amount it has drawn out in common-stock dividends.

From 1917 to 1926 there was no equity whatever behind the common stock, according to the Commission's studies. Since then, as the accountants put it, "the entire common-stock equity has been built up from earnings carried to surplus" (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19638).

Now, turning from the returns on the common stock to the return on the actual investment in the property, so far as this investment could be computed by the Trade Commission, we find that between 1923 and 1928 the total investment ranged from $12,500,000 to $18,500,000. In not one of these years from 1923 to 1928 was the return on investment less than 12 percent. In 1928 it rose to 13.4 percent (exhibit 5038, p. 237).

These percentages appear conservative because, while the Commission in computing investment excluded the write-up of 1917, it had no means of determining accurately the investment in early years and therefore was compelled to accept certain book figures.

The power companies gave no help in digging deeper for facts. Both at Omaha and in New York, Commission examiners were told that records of the predecessor company had been misplaced or destroyed, although the company produced them in Omaha in 1920 when they were needed to further its application for an increase in rates (transcript Mar. 10, pp. 19684–19685 and exhibit 5038, p. 172).

The probable truth is, that the figures I have given are much too conservative. The facts are that the Federal Trade Commission have never been able to get to the bottom of it. They do not know themselves, from their investigations, all of the write-ups. They cannot tell, from their investigations, how much water has been in these securities in the past.

The power companies say that the books are lost, that they are not able to find the records. They evidently have been destroyed, although when they wanted to use them for their own purposes in 1920, they found no difficulty in finding them.

Now, about the fees.

The approximately $4,000,000 which the Electric Bond & Share interests have taken out of the Nebraska Power Co. in common-stock dividends without making an investment do not represent all the profit accruing to these interests. They have profited also through fees imposed upon the local company by the Electric Bond & Share Co., and by commissions on the sale of the local company's securities. From 1918 to 1930, these fees and commissions amounted to $1,431,000. The fees were imposed for supervision of operations and of management, for financing, for construction work, and for special services. The construction fees the commission has already found to be practically clear profit.

The collecting of them is scarcely more than a racket for bringing additional profits into the holding company's treasury. As to the fees as a whole, there is less known, but the commission has established that there is a big profit in them without being able to determine its exact extent. When the Trade Commission made its first power investigation half a dozen years ago, the Electric Bond & Share Co. assured the Trade Commission that these fees were non-profit making. The Commission has stated that this claim is false and that there is a substantial profit in fees. But when the Commission sought to examine the records which would show the extent of the profit, the Electric Bond & Share Co. refused to yield access to these records. Its attorney stated that they would not disclose matters which were "wholly private and confidential." It has tied up the Trade Commission in the courts for 3 years. The Commission is about to get a decision in this case, and probably to get the records also, if it is allowed sufficient funds to complete its investigation.

The fees paid to the Electric Bond & Share Co. by local companies are provided for in contracts which must be approved by the local companies' directors. For this and other financial reasons, and for political reasons as well, the directorships are important.

For its Nebraska Power Co. directorate, the Electric Bond & Share interests have installed not only a half dozen of their men, who quite evidently run the local company under directions from New York, but nine of the most prominent business men in Omaha. These local business men may not have much work to do, because a majority of the officers, and two out of three members of the executive committee are connected with Electric Bond & Share interests higher up. But they are securely tied to the company and, along with them, all the influence they command in Omaha and the surrounding country.

Listen to this, speaking of the Nebraska Power Co.: Each of these local men is permitted to buy 5,000 shares of Nebraska Power Co. stock at 50 cents a share. On his $2,500 investment each one of these men collects dividends amounting to from $6,000 to $6,500 a year.

That ought to keep them sweet. That ought to keep the local fellows good to the foreign companies in this great concern doing business in Omaha. That means from 240 to 260 percent on the investment. Each time one of them attends a directors' meeting he is paid $30. When he retires his stock is repurchased at a price 150 percent in excess of cost, which nets him a parting profit of $3,750.

I wonder whether the people of Omaha and Nebraska comprehend really what that all means, how a few of their prominent citizens are given directorships where they have nothing to do except to say "amen" to what the bosses in New York tell them. All the thing is for is to sweeten the corporation in the eyes of the great consuming public in Nebraska, who have to pay the bills, and the prominent men are given these important positions in order that their influence may go out over the country and the surrounding towns and keep the people quiet. Each one of them is permitted to purchase this stock at 50 cents a share, and when they retire it is repurchased at $1.50 a share. That makes a clear profit of $3,750. In the meantime, when they meet with the board of directors and are given a few high-priced cigars to smoke, and perhaps something else, they get $30. On the investment they have been permitted to make they get a rate of return of from 240 to 260 percent.

Dividends netting a return of 160 percent on the cost of the stock were paid in the years 1927 and 1928, after smaller but handsome and constantly increasing dividends had been paid to local directors in earlier years. The Commission listed as directors in 1928 Joseph Barker, Thomas B. Coleman, Harley G. Conant, Gould Dietz, A. W. Gordon, Dan A. Johnson, John W. Welch, Glen C. Wharton, and Fred E. Hovey, president of the Stockyards National Bank.

The six directors belonging more particularly to the Electric Bond & Share wing were: W. W. Head, chairman of the Nebraska Power Co. and chairman of the Omaha National Bank; James E. Davidson, president of the Nebraska Power Co.; Roy Page, then assistant general manager of the company and now its vice president and general manager; J. A. C. Kennedy, company counsel; A. S. Grenier; and C. E. Groesbeck. Grenier is an Electric Bond & Share Co. man, and Groesbeck was then an officer and director of Electric Bond & Share and American Power & Light, and is now president of the Electric Bond & Share Co.

Not all of these more active directors figured in the stock ownership plan in which the local business men were allowed participation. Two company officers, who may have been directors, held similar blocks of stock in 1929 and 1930. Four directors of the Council Bluffs subsidiary also were let in (transcript, Mar. 22, p. 20220).

Mr. Davidson has come to the Commission's attention before. Prior to scrutinizing high finance as it has been practiced in the Nebraska Power Co., the Commission learned how the power magnates doctored schoolbooks and wrote new ones of their own. This Mr. Davidson, who is president of the Nebraska Power Co., is also one of the gentlemen who wants to alter our educational system. He says it is not fair. A few years ago, when he was president of the National Electric Light Association, he wrote a friendly little letter, telling just what he thought. It reads:

NATIONAL ELECTRIC LIGHT ASSOCIATION,
Omaha, Nebr., August 15, 1925.

MR. FRED R. JENKINS,
Chairman Educational Committee,
National Electric Light Association, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. JENKINS: I have read with a great deal of interest your letter of July 1, and also those of August 11 and 12 to Mr. Aylesworth about the work of the educational committee, doing everything possible to right the unfortunate situation that now exists in having textbooks that are in the hands of pupils of the schools containing erroneous and unfair information about the economics of our business and particularly those pertaining to electric light and power companies, their financial matters, operations, and policies.

I was very much surprised when I read Mr. Gilchrist's report on this condition. I think your idea is very good of having Dean Heilman handle this matter. It is fortunate, too, that Mr. Mullaney will also help.

You have my very best wishes for a successful result in the very important work which you are undertaking.

Very truly yours,

J. E. DAVIDSON, President.

(P. 4, Ex. No. 2540, p. 912.)

This letter is only a part of the great propaganda that was undertaken by the Power Trust to change the textbooks in our public schools, under the guise of some other reason, to get their agents to become friendly with the Boy Scouts, to get into the schools, to have things taught in the schools that would be friendly toward the idea held by the great Power Trust.

I remember that it was shown in the investigation that they circulated in some of the schools of New England a catechism, working carefully, through various ingenious means, teaching the school children that they must look with horror upon any such thing as public ownership of a public utility like an electric-light plant; lecturers telling the children, and telling the teachers, some of whom were employed on the side at salaries paid by the power company, to put the poison of the electric-power influences into the minds of the growing children of the United States.

This letter of Mr. Davidson is simply a part of the program. He says that the textbooks in the hands of the pupils contain erroneous information. Of course, they give that as a reason. The real reason is that they want to write the textbooks for the children, as the evidence developed by the Federal Trade Commission, that if they could get their influence into the minds of the young, while they were forming their minds, while they were schoolboys and schoolgirls, they would grow up to be men and women friendly to the ideas of the Power Trust.

I remember that in that investigation something happened in regard to the secretary of a State press association who was doing a lot of work quietly for the Power Trust, sending out letters on which they paid the postage, for which they paid the expense, trying to poison the minds of the people against municipally owned electric light plants. This Davidson letter is a part of it all.

Walter W. Head financed the senatorial survey of 1930 and got a slice of the big profits of the Electric Bond & Share people provided by it for local directors during both 1929 and 1930. As a director of the Nebraska Power Co. he held 5,000 shares of the Nebraska Power Co. stock, which he had been permitted to buy for $2,500—50 cents a share. His dividend on this $2,500 investment amounted to $6,500 in 1929 and $6,000 in 1930. The official statement of this profit is given in testimony of Examiner Meleen before the Trade Commission of March 22, 1932. Here is a quotation from his testimony:

In 1929 dividends were paid of $1.30 per share, which, in the case of 5,000 shares, amounts to $6,500, a return of 260 percent. In 1930 dividends were paid of $1.20 per share, and amounted to $6,000 on 5,000 shares, or a return of 240 percent.

That is what Walter Head got, according to the transcript, March 22, pages 20215 and 20216. That is Walter Head, the Sunday-school man; Walter Head, the Boy Scout man; and through it all and in it all and with it all, a Power Trust man.

Besides the profits accumulated through dividends and through fees imposed upon the subsidiary companies for supervision, construction, and the like, the Electric Bond & Share Co. interest, profits through the commissions on sales of securities, and besides this direct profit, they control the use of large amounts of subsidiary company funds for extended periods.

We have been told that one of the great advantages of a utility company being under the wing of a giant holding company is economy in borrowing money. Let us see how it works out. Properly done, I think, that would be true; in theory, it is all right; if an honest man managed it, it would be all right; but here is the way it works out:

In the reorganization of 1917, the Nebraska Power Co. issued $1,500,000 of notes along with other securities. These notes were to run for 10 years. They bore an interest rate of 5 percent. Through them this Omaha company was obtaining the use of money at 5 percent and had the right to continue doing so for 10 years; but instead of doing so, the controlling interest caused $400,000 of these notes to be retired only 2 years after they were issued by means of refinancing. The notes contained no provision for this, but the holder of them was the controlling holding company, and this company wanted cash. The bond issue which was used for the refinancing bore interest at the rate of 5 percent like the notes, but when the bankers' discount, the commission of the Electric Bond & Share Co., and the expenses of the issue were deducted from the proceeds, the real interest rate, or what the accountants call the effective interest rate, became 6.64 percent.

They already had money at 5 percent that they had a right to keep for 10 years, but they took it out and borrowed money, nominally at the same rate, but the effect of the commission they had to pay made the new rate of interest nearly 7 percent, all of which the consumers of electricity had to pay. The profit went to the holding company. The profit went to those who controlled the Electric Bond & Share Co.

Again, 3 years later, in 1922, the remaining $1,100,000 of these notes were retired, again by refinancing. This time the refinancing was accomplished through an issue of 6-percent debentures, on which the real or effective rate of interest amounted to 7.49 percent. They owed over $1,000,000, drawing 5 percent that was not due for about 5 years. They took it up and paid it, and to do it they borrowed the money, and they paid a rate of interest of 7.49 percent to get that money to make the payment. Those are the people of efficiency. They are the people who, we are told, can run the big business of this country with great efficiency. That is efficiency for you. That is where monopoly becomes efficient. That is where the Power Trust shines—in that kind of efficiency. But the poor devil at the bottom who is paying for his electricity, the poor woman who is earning her money sewing at night by an electric lamp, is paying the bill that all these millionaires slipped down into their pockets as profit.

The additional cost represented by the higher interest rate in these two instances amounted to $33,950 a year for this one company, a total of $180,000. Thus, high rates of interest were substituted for low rates of interest in one instance 8 years before it appears to have been necessary to refinance; in another instance 5 years before it appears to have been necessary to refinance. The subsidiary in Nebraska had to assume the burden of the higher interest rates.

If this looks like holding-company exploitation, consider the next instance cited by the Trade Commission.

Some years ago the Nebraska Power Co. issued $1,100,000 of general mortgage gold bonds. Money rates were high at that time, and the bonds bore interest at the rate of 8 percent. It would seem that to pay so high a rate the Nebraska Co. must have needed money badly; but from the records and the correspondence obtained by the Federal Trade Commission investigators it appears that the Nebraska Power Co. did not even know that it was borrowing any money until it was told about it by the Electric Bond & Share Co.

On June 10, 1921, the Electric Bond & Share Co. notified the Nebraska Power Co. by a letter that the Nebraska Power Co. was floating a loan in the principal sum of $1,100,000. It was being credited on the books of the holding company with $951,500 as the estimated proceeds of the loan; and its account was being so credited as of May 1, 1921, or about 40 days before the Nebraska Power Co. heard anything about the deal.

Oh, that is efficiency! Oh, that is the way private business can operate public utilities! So efficient! It is not affected by the dead hand of Government ownership. There is no socialism in it. There is no bolshevism in it. There is no communism in it. It is all pure, private efficiency, private ability.

Here is a holding company in New York which wanted some money. How much was it? Well, let us see. I think it was something over a million dollars—$1,100,000—that they wanted; so they said, "Well, here, we will just have the Nebraska Power Co. borrow that for us. We own them. They are incorporated under the laws of Maine. We will send up there and tell the representative up there to have the Nebraska Power Co. borrow $1,100,000."

So it is done. The Nebraska Power Co., away out in Nebraska, plodding along with the farmers and the merchants, did not know anything about it. They did not know that they had borrowed $1,100,000. They had no idea about it. So from Wall Street the Electric Bond & Share Co. writes a letter and says, "Why do you not know you have borrowed some money? You have borrowed $1,100,000. You have given your notes for it, and we credit you on our books for those notes." "How much?" "Nine hundred and fifty-one thousand five hundred dollars."

So the poor Nebraska Power Co. borrowed money when it did not want it, borrowed money that it never got, borrowed money amounting to $1,100,000, and $951,500 for that work—for buying some bonds for themselves and getting the money themselves. Fine work! That is efficiency!

If a public utility owned by a little municipality should do such a thing as that, what would happen? Why, we would charter a vessel at once, and put the perpetrators on it and send them over to Russia without opportunity to say good-bye to their wives. We would not stand for such an unpatriotic thing. But these men, these Sunday-school superintendents, these Boy Scout leaders, will borrow money, and they will saddle the burden upon the poor, downtrodden people who are paying all the money and all the expense of this outrageous and inhuman and unjustifiable conduct of millionaire monopolists.

Well, the Nebraska Power Co. found out that they had borrowed this money and they found out how much credit they were getting down in New York and Wall Street. They were notified in June that they had borrowed some money and that the Electric Bond Share Co. had sold the bonds for them, and they had it, and they had given the Nebraska Power Co. credit for $951,500 as of May 1. That was kind. That not only showed great ability, but it showed great honesty and kindness and consideration for the poor devil at the other end of the line who has to pay the bill.

To their account was so credited as of May 1, 1921, or about 40 days before the Nebraska Power Co. heard anything about the deal. Meanwhile the American Power & Light Co., the subholding company for Electric Bond & Share, had issued and sold, partly on the security of these bonds, the Nebraska Power Co. bonds which were authorized by the Nebraska Power Co. directors.

On the $1,100,000 bond issue by the Nebraska Power Co. there was a discount of 13½ points, or $148,500 charged by the American Power & Light Co. There was an expense of $650, and a year and a half later the bonds were retired.

Think of it! They were borrowing money when they did not need it, did not want it, and, in fact, did not know it, and they paid this enormous rate of interest for it, and they kept the money only 18 months. So, for the use for 18 months of $951,500 which they apparently did not need, the Nebraska Power Co. paid a discount and expense of $149,150, plus interest of $132,000 on the principal amount of $1,100,000, or a total of $281,150. This was equal, the Trade Commission accountants report, to an interest rate of 19.71 percent a year.

That is what these great financiers paid. They borrowed money when they did not know they got it; but they did borrow it, and they had to pay at the end of the transaction an interest rate of 19.71 percent. That is what these poor Nebraska fellows were paying. That is what these fellows over in Council Bluffs, Iowa, were paying. That is what the washerwoman had to pay in order to feather the nest of this great trust in Wall Street. If anybody wants to look that up, it is exhibit 5038, page 82. Even the poor farmer can borrow to better advantage than that.

Since the proceeds of the loan were merely applied against the indebtedness of the Omaha company to the holding company, and the average rate previously charged on this indebtedness was only 7⅛ percent, the additional interest cost was $119,000 a year, or a total of $179,000. All of this added cost went to the holding company.

Again, in 1924, the Nebraska Power Co. floated securities to the amount of $1,000,000. For these securities it received in net proceeds $902,000; and the great bulk of this, $825,000, was merely left with the Electric Bond & Share Co. to lend out in the call-loan market. Some of it was not drawn upon by the Nebraska Power Co. for 5 months.

Think of that! This holding company had the Nebraska Power Co. borrow some more money, a million dollars this time, and leave it with them, and they loaned it out on call—gambled with it, in other words. But the poor fellows who had to pay it and who owed it all, after all, were the little home owners, the laboring men and women of Omaha and surrounding towns.

The Nebraska Power Co. sells electricity to its Council Bluffs subsidiary. The price this Council Bluffs subsidiary pays to the Nebraska Power Co. becomes the basic cost for the fixing of rates in Iowa. On these sales the Nebraska Power Co. takes an estimated profit of 0.04 cent up to 0.63 cent per kilowatt-hour. Chief Counsel Healy intimated that this practice of exacting a profit on sales from the right hand to the left hand might be reached under the Supreme Court decision of February 29, 1932, in the case of the Western Distributing Co. against the Public Utilities Commission of Kansas. This decision appears to have broadened greatly the authority of State utility commissions to regulate charges between affiliated corporations.

The effect of the sales to the subsidiary is to permit the Nebraska Power Co. to collect two profits on this subsidiary's operations. It profits on the direct sales of energy and also on the dividends upon the subsidiary's common stock, which is held by the Nebraska Power Co. The dividends amount to slightly less than $60,000 a year. Ultimately the profits, whichever way they may be made, redound to the benefit of the Electric Bond & Share or American Power & Light interests holding the common stock of the Nebraska Power Co.

Even after a reduction of domestic rates forced by the Omaha City Council in 1921 and a voluntary reduction of domestic rates in 1929–30, the average Omaha consumer is paying 5.5 cents per kilowatt-hour for his electricity, according to the commission's examiners. The consumer in the small town pays 7.8 cents per kilowatt-hour, and the farmer pays an average of 12.8 cents (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19661). That rate reductions have been inadequate is evidenced by this testimony of Examiner J. W. Adams:

> Obviously the company's problem is, as stated by its manager, that of getting its rates down as a means of increasing consumption. Such action, however, would have to be carried somewhat further than it has in the past in the direction of rate reductions part of large profits that hitherto have been retained for the common-stock equity (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19637).

Adams sums up the situation when he says:

> From this showing it appears that in making voluntary reductions in residential rates in Omaha in 1929 the company by no means endangered its ability to pay dividends on the common stock owned largely by its parent company, the American Power & Light Co. The fact is that in every year since the properties were taken over the Nebraska Power Co., after paying all expenses, taxes, interest, and dividends on preferred stock, has realized substantial profits for its common stock, the bulk of which, as shown by the accountant's report, was actually held by the American Power & Light Co. for 9 years at no cost to itself (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19629).

The company actually waged a prolonged fight for higher rates when its earnings fell off just after the war, although the Omaha City Council pointed out that the only result would be to make this watered common stock more profitable (exhibit 5033, appendix 10, sheet 9).

Its application for the rate increase was denied. The company spent $95,000 on rate investigation and valuation, however, and charged it up to operating expenses (exhibit 5038, pp. 169–170).

As I said a while ago, the poor consumer pays it all. It is nothing to the power company how much it pays for a contest over rates; they do not care, they are just collectors, that is all; and they charge a mighty big profit and commission for collecting. The poor consumer bears the entire burden.

Now see what happens to this municipal competition which is about the only means of regulating the charges and practices of the private companies. Speaking now of Nebraska and the Nebraska Power Co. and its activities, municipal ownership centers in the two communities of Fremont and Blair. Blair is an oasis of public ownership in Washington County. Nearly all the rest of that county pays tribute to the Nebraska Power Co. Fremont is in somewhat the same position in Dodge County. Blair only distributes its energy, first buying it at wholesale from the Iowa-Nebraska Light & Power Co. Fremont has its own generating plant, serving the city itself and a small rural territory. These towns are 40 or 50 miles from Omaha.

The Iowa-Nebraska Light & Power Co., which sells at wholesale to the city of Blair, serves the territory adjoining that of the Nebraska Power Co. and its Council Bluffs subsidiary. It pretty well surrounds not only the territory of the Nebraska Power Co. but the municipal plants of Fremont and Blair and certain other municipal systems. This Iowa-Nebraska Light & Power Co. is not under Electric Bond & Share, as the Nebraska Power Co. is. It is part of the United Light & Power Co. system, otherwise called the "Eaton-Schaddelee group." But its lines interconnect with those of the Nebraska Power Co. and the Nebraska Power Co. subsidiary in Council Bluffs. It buys energy from the Nebraska Power Co., and, more important, it has a "gentleman's agreement" with the Nebraska Power Co. for division of territory. Between the territorial limits of the two companies there is a neutral zone about 2 miles wide into which either company may extend its lines and sell electricity. When a municipal plant can be persuaded to sell out or an opportunity is offered to land a new customer in this neutral zone, representatives of the two companies get together and decide which shall have the business.

Against this background of common interest, the Nebraska Power Co. has expanded to the west and northwest in the Platte River Valley in the last few years by purchasing many small private and municipal distributing systems. Several of these systems formerly were served by the Fremont municipal plant, which sold them energy at wholesale.

The result of this expansion by the Nebraska Power Co. is that the Fremont municipal plant is entirely surrounded by Nebraska Power Co. lines. It has lost most of its outside market. But it has continued to operate, and, under the law adopted by initiative in 1930, giving municipalities the right to own power lines beyond their municipal boundaries, it is extending its lines into rural territory (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19573).

In its determination to expand and to put the municipal plants out of business, the Nebraska Power Co. has paid extravagant prices for these municipal plants. To get what idea it could of values, the Trade Commission examiners scrutinized exhibits prepared by the Nebraska Power Co. itself in connection with litigation in Nebraska. They found that, even accepting the company's figures, it had paid for seven plants over 30 percent more than the estimated cost to reproduce them, without any allowance whatever for depreciation or for obsolete equipment.

It took a good while to introduce it, to show what I was going to show, but here we have it. This great representative of the great Power Trust sees, 40 or 50 miles from Omaha, a city owning its own electric-light plant, paid for by its own citizens, giving an illustration, as a matter of fact, of cheap electricity to its citizens. It has expanded and extended its lines. It is serving seven or eight towns in the vicinity, where the people buy current at the Fremont plant and distribute it themselves.

What happens? The Nebraska Power Co. creeps out and surrounds that city with its wires, its network, and it goes to this municipality and to that municipality to buy their distributing systems. What do they do? The Federal Trade Commission finds that they paid for those seven plants 30 percent more than it would cost to build them now, without making any allowance for depreciation or wear and tear. Probably it would be fair to say that they paid 50 percent more than the plants were worth.

This is poor business. Everybody knows that when that kind of a thing happens somebody must bear the loss. Like others of the extravagances and the bad financing of the Power Trust, it is the poor devil down in the humble home who has to bear the loss.

For the seven plants the company showed a reproduction cost new of $103,783, compared with the purchase price of $134,955. For the Cedar Bluffs group of plants there was shown a reproduction cost new of $24,134, against a purchase price of $35,000. For the Arlington municipal plant there was shown a reproduction cost new of $27,285, compared with the purchase price of $34,000.

The examiners point out that, as none of these plants were new and there was no allowance for depreciation, the premiums the power company paid to get them out of the way were actually "considerably greater" than these figures show.

Roy Page, vice president and general manager of the Nebraska Power Co., admitted that the physical value was only a small part of the basis used for determining prices (transcript, Mar. 9, p. 19578). A company official testified in the Nebraska litigation that as to certain properties no estimates of value whatever had been made prior to the purchases.

It seems clear that what the company was buying was: First, complete monopoly; second, freedom from regulation which operation of the municipal plants imposes; and, third, opportunity for unhampered profiteering.

Pointing out that the prices for municipal plants have been large and arbitrarily fixed, and that regulation is very limited, with the company admittedly fixing its own rates in the smaller towns, Examiner Adams declared that—

It is reasonable to assume that full prices paid for properties have been considered in any valuation of properties used by the company in determining what its small-town rates shall be. (Transcript, Mar. 9, pp. 19581 and 19582.)

This, of course, is only a sample. What the Nebraska Power Co. is doing in Nebraska is being done by the subsidiaries of the Power Trust all over the land. I have been giving concrete instances, but they are only examples. They are no worse than is going on everywhere. I could go over the sunny South in the same way and tell of one case, for example, where the Power Trust went to a municipality that owned its own system and offered to pay a price for it. The price was more than it would have cost to rebuild the plant. The voters voted on the proposal and turned it down. Hardly had the result of the election been announced than the Power Trust came forward with another proposal and a higher offer, and another election was called. The offer was turned down again. Then, within a reasonable time after that happened, they came forward with a third offer, in which they offered really three or four times more than the plant was worth; and the people voted to sell it. Every time they made a higher offer they got a few more votes, and they kept on until they got their offer so high that the people felt they could not refuse to sell.

What does it mean? It means monopoly. It means they do not want a municipally owned plant that will stand out as a yardstick. They will do whatever necessary to accomplish their end. It is the plant they want. They want to prevent such a municipally owned plant from showing to the people what can be done by a municipally owned and properly operated plant. They are afraid of the new yardstick. They have a monopoly and are willing to spend millions to keep it, but the money they spend is not theirs. It is collected in pennies from God's poor. The attached letter from the National Electric Light Association shows the continued activity of the Power Trust in the Nebraska Legislature. They never sleep.

MIDDLE-WEST DIVISION THE NATIONAL ELECTRIC LIGHT ASSOCIATION,
Lincoln, Nebr., May 11, 1929.

MR. GEORGE F. OXLEY,
National Electric Light Association,
420 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

DEAR MR. OXLEY: For your information, Nebraska Legislature has adjourned. From out of a mass of approximately 25 bills aimed at the light and power industry, only 1 was enacted into law.

This bill authorizes cities of more than 5,000 population to use city finances either secured from bond issues or taxation or from earnings of municipally owned electric plants, to extend lines into adjacent country to provide service for rural customers. The limit of extension is 15 miles. Originally, this bill provided a maximum of 25 miles and provided also that cost of construction might be a pledge against future earnings of the city plant.

Among the bills which were menacing, but which did not make the grade, were those designed to make it impossible for a municipality to sell its electrical system if publicly owned; requiring a 60-percent vote of all eligible electors for renewal of franchises as well as granting of new ones and authorizing municipalities to purchase equipment for municipal plant in lieu of the privately owned plant without presenting the matter to the electors. This legislative program had the endorsement of the Nebraska League of Municipalities, and to all appearances it was their program. As a matter of fact, the entire campaign was engineered by oil-engine companies.

Yours truly,

THORNE BROWNE, Director.

Let anyone say he is in favor of municipal ownership and he is a marked man so far as the Power Trust is concerned, and it does not make any difference whether he is a candidate for President of the United States or whether he is a candidate for the office of assessor in a country precinct. They are the kind the Power Trust wants to defeat. Whenever anyone says or does anything officially or privately that conflicts with their interests and their wishes, he is a marked man, and he must get on his knees and beg for forgiveness and show by his action that he is willing to be their slave before they will look upon him with favor. But insofar as I am concerned, they can go to hell. I believe in municipal ownership of power, and I am proud to express myself publicly to that effect.

Although I have consumed a good deal of time, nevertheless I have only given a glimpse at certain spots in the United States, just a glimpse. I could cover the whole country and disclose the same thing practically everywhere. Remember, too, as I said in the beginning, that this investigation is only partially finished. God only knows what the future has in store; but if the American people are to be trampled down into the earth by this greatest human monopoly that was ever put together in the history of civilization, I am not willing to say what the result may be. This great trust marches on and on, making its huge profit on a necessity of human life.

The people of the United States, it seems to me, will realize that this great octopus—this greedy monopoly, living on the pennies which are contributed by God's poor, stealing out of the school children's hands the pennies given to them by their parents, going into every home, into every little town, and taking their toll from the toil and sweat of millions of our people in order that they may debauch the very people they rob—presents a picture that ought to cause every man to raise his voice in condemnation of such an unholy, such a wicked, such an indefensible thing.

I am also inserting a news item appearing in a Washington newspaper showing the results of the more recent findings of the Federal Power Commission up to date. You will notice that the Electric Bond & Share Co. has been investigated, and this is the holding company with which the Nebraska Power Co. is affiliated:

New and sensational discoveries by the Federal Trade Commission probably will delay its recommendations for stringent utilities regulation until the next session of Congress, it was learned today.

The Commission's inquiry has been under way since 1928. It was expected to complete its findings and recommend legislation June 30, 1934. New discoveries as the investigation entered its final phases will delay the report, it was believed.

Survey of the Commission's findings over a period of 6 years indicated that strict regulation will be proposed.

The Federal Power Commission, which has been ordered to investigate electric rates of private and commercial concerns, will add its data to the Trade Commission's findings.

"Most recent disclosures in the Power Trust situation were of correspondence purporting to show State Senator Warren T. Thayer, Republican, Chateaugay, N.Y., accepted 'expense money' for political work from the Associated Gas & Electric Co. A New York Legislature investigation has resulted."

Other Associated system activities charged were payments to a Paris, Tenn., city attorney by a company affiliated with the Associated system and indications of activities in municipal elections.

Revelations of the inquiry thus far have been:

"1. Discovery of about $1,250,000,000 in stock in 'write-ups' by utilities, most of which the public absorbed in security issues, now deflated.

"2. Payments of large fees to lecturers, writers, newspapers, and colleges for propaganda and publicity.

"3. Utility opposition to municipal and public power ownership through propaganda, including attacks on the Tennessee Valley Authority and Muscle Shoals projects.

"4. Excessive 'fees' to company officials.

"5. Heavy stock-market transactions to support securities artificially.

"6. Payments of special management service fees.

"7. Concentration of private-utility control in the hands of a relatively few individuals tending toward violation of antitrust laws.

"8. Pyramiding of holding companies and flooding of the market with new security issues."

One Trade Commission authority said, "There is no doubt the utilities situation needs Federal legislation. Disclosure of their methods in securities transactions was directly responsible for the 1933 Securities Act."

He added that while many companies voluntarily discontinued using the "special-fee" system, others are still using it through special "expense" accounts, which are charged to holding companies.

The Commission is speeding its inquiry, seven hearings being scheduled within the next 2 weeks. Two of them, it was said, are "especially" significant.

"One Tuesday will see the examination of Harley L. Clark, Chicago magnate, in connection with affairs of the Utility Light & Power Corporation. The other, scheduled for Wednesday, promises to reveal more correspondence taken from the files of the J. G. White Management Corporation, New York, affiliated with Associated, and said to bear on the New York power situation."

The saga of the Trade Commission's findings for the Senate will be written into more than 50 volumes comprising 25,000 pages.

Eleven large holding companies, embracing Insull, Hopson, Morgan, and Doherty interests, have been examined thus far, including their hundreds of subsidiaries.

Trade Commission experts estimate these companies supply 45 percent of the country's total electrical output and approximately 80 percent of that sold by privately owned companies in interstate commerce.

The principal companies investigated are Electric Bond & Share Co., Cities Service Co., Central Public Service Corporation, Associated Gas & Electric Co., Columbia Gas & Electric Co., Middle West Utilities Co., Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, North American Light & Power Corporation, United Gas Improvement Co., Utilities Power & Light Corporation, and the United Corporation group.

The Trade Commission was compelled once to enter court proceedings to obtain records. That was in the Electric Bond & Share case when a decision was handed down in 1932 in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York upholding the Commission's authority.

This bill is of importance to my State due to the fact that we have at the present time two great power projects under construction and several more, such as the Tri County and Loup projects, under consideration. I trust these will ultimately be approved. I believe it will be necessary, in view of this vast new development, to find some other method of distribution than through privately owned utility companies, who through their past operation and manipulations have demonstrated beyond a question of doubt their inability to properly and fairly distribute the natural resources of the State of Nebraska.

As you no doubt know, I have become a candidate for the Governorship of Nebraska. If I am elected, the people of Nebraska can be assured of a Governor who is in entire sympathy with fair rates. If the private-utility companies will not make fair and reasonable rates available, then I believe that municipal ownership of these utilities should follow, and I would do my utmost to see that State legislation is passed which will provide fair and reasonable rates to those communities who desire to take advantage of it. I believe that such legislation should be clearly and plainly written and that no purposeful ambiguity should be used to obscure the purpose of the bill. The passage of the Johnson Senate bill will simplify and expedite procedure and should be passed in its original form.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, the situation that confronts the House on this matter is a simple one. The Johnson bill simply limits a utility corporation to going through the State commission, and then to the courts of the State, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is admitted that there is always great delay caused by giving the utilities a favored place in the law. They have a privilege which you do not have. If you are sued in your State, you must go before the courts of your State. The Federal courts are sought not so much because of the diversity of citizenship but on the grounds of confiscation. They can choose either of two jurisdictions. They have adverse citizenship. They can go into a State court and waive the adverse citizenship, or they can go into the Federal court. No citizen of a State has that right. You must take one court; that is your State court. A nonresident, with the jurisdictional amount of his claim—that is, over $3,000—can go into the State court or he can go into the Federal court. Of course he goes to the court which he thinks is most advantageous to him, just as you would do if you had that privilege.

Most of the utility companies get themselves into the Federal courts on the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution was intended to protect the slaves and their rights in the Southern States, but by court decisions and court-made law it has become a haven of refuge for the large corporations which are incorporated in one State and doing business in another, or any concern that wants to exercise its constitutional privilege.

Have you ever stopped to think that the fourteenth amendment was not supposed to apply to or deal with property at all? It was supposed to deal with the personal rights of the slaves after the Civil War and to protect their rights down in the Southern States. Then by the construction of these sacred courts which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] speaks about and which we should not reflect upon, property was given rights which are now recognized in this country.

Now, what is the present procedure? A regulatory commission in your State decides to lower a rate that is being charged by some utility. What takes place? The utility can go into court and have it heard; and if they do not win there, they will take you into the Federal court and they will worry you around there. If they think it is advantageous, they will proceed on to the supreme court of that State; they will often let it go until the supreme court of that State says it shall be lowered. Then they will take you into the Federal court and do it all over again. You have to put in new evidence, because it is a trial de novo. What do our friends want to do? They say, "Let it go into the Federal court and take the record that was made in the State commission." Will there be delay? Delay denies justice; and when a rate is entered at one time by a commission, it may be a different situation when the time comes around to get the final decree. The economic situation may be entirely different, and one rate may be fair at the time the commission fixed the rate, but by the time it is brought to a conclusion it may be an entirely unfair rate. It may not be enough or it may be too much.

Now, they have three Federal judges. Where did that come from? It is just another bit of sop that the Congress has given to the people for all these years. This has been under consideration for many years, and we have always dodged it by trying to give them something else instead of what they needed. They gave them three judges to pass on it. We gave them the proposition in section 266 of the act, whereby all the State commission has to do, if it wants to keep its case out of the Federal courts, is go into a proper State court and ask an injunction against its own order. Here is a commission set up to do business, and it makes a ruling that there shall be a lowering of some certain rate. Then you ask the regulatory body to go into a State court and stop their own judgment and stop the rate which they have fixed, in order to stay out of the Federal court, and our opponents say that is a fine remedy. That is just another sop Congress gave the people instead of giving them a fair, square forum in which to try the cases where the interests of the people are gravely involved.

No sound lawyer in this country will tell you that they cannot appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States is a fair and impartial court, the highest court among men. It will prevent any prejudicial action on the part of the State courts. My thought is this: That when you give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, in view of the amount of labor required of the Supreme Court of the United States, Congress ought to furnish the Supreme Court of the United States with some masters to sit and read these utility-company records and see whether or not there has been a fair finding of facts or sufficient evidence heard in the lower courts. I am the last man who would want to take away from any man, whether it is a corporate organization or an individual, any property or do anything which might create an injustice. I am the last man to do that. I say to you I have no time for political pirates who want to soak somebody simply because it is a corporate organization. I believe in fair dealings between corporations and individuals, and corporations should not have a privilege denied the rest of the citizens of this country. That is all there is to this case.

We hear talk about the terrible crime it would be to take this away from the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Well, gentlemen, it is true, if you turn back the pages of our judicial history in this country, you can read with admiration the great and fine characters who have been upon our benches.

But without casting any aspersions upon the splendid Federal bench of this country, I am telling you here and now that if you examine the records of a lot of these utility-rate cases, you will not have a different idea of the "terrible crime" that is being committed by some occupants of the bench. It has been my experience in life that a man with fixed ideas before his elevation to the bench will still be under the fixed opinions after his elevation to the bench. It must be remembered that all men are human.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that as a layman amongst this galaxy of lawyers, I should not "butt" in. I have, however, a few facts I wish to recite in expressing the hope that my good friend, a friend whom I admire very much, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], will not prevail in this matter, but that the House will pass the Johnson bill.

In the Seventy-second Congress it was brought to my attention that all the utility commissions of the country with the exception of the utility commissions in one or two States were protesting at the way their rate decisions were being handled in the courts. The miscarriage of justice in those cases was notorious. The companies were playing a game of fast and loose with both the State and the United States courts. When this was brought to my attention, I introduced in the House the bill H.R. 73, a companion bill to that of Senator JOHNSON.

Evidently these bills were brought to the attention of the present President of the United States, then Governor of New York, for in a message to the Legislature of the State of New York he made this statement:

> This power of the Federal court must be abrogated. Only the Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose. * * * I recommend to your honorable bodies that you memorialize the Congress to pass this legislation.

Having introduced these bills in 1931, the Senator got the drop on me in getting his bill through the Senate in the present session before I got mine through the House. You know they pass bills more quickly there in spite sometimes of long arguments with reference to them. After the Senator's bill was passed, he wrote me the following letter:

MARCH 16, 1934.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MARTIN: A long time ago you and I had some little talk about the bill now pending to require public utilities after trial and decisions by State regulatory bodies, to pursue the usual course in contests of such decisions. After a long time and a rather weary fight I got the bill through the Senate. It is now before the Judiciary Committee of the House. Of course, all the power companies have had their representatives here fighting the measure, which is so thoroughly just. It seems to me it is so eminently fair that the bitter and prolonged contest of these power companies is wholly unjustified.

I thought that at one time you introduced a bill in the House. If you hold the same view that I have in respect to the measure, would it be possible to express that view to the members of the Judiciary Committee and aid in getting the measure upon the floor? What the power people want, of course, is delay, and every conceivable excuse will be made to keep the bill in committee as long as possible in the hope that this session may end without action. Pardon me for troubling you with this matter, but I have assumed that we are of the like opinion regarding it.

Indeed we are; and I am glad that at last we have come to the day of judgment on this measure in the House of Representatives. I will not repeat the many arguments that have been made on the floor with reference to this bill. It is a notorious fact known to everybody how these companies have abused this privilege of two courts, and I think it is high time we passed this law and put an end to the abuse. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards, had come to no resolution thereon.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN LAWS AFFECTING INDIANS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings of yesterday whereby the House passed the bill (S. 2671) repealing certain sections of the Revised Code of Laws of the United States relating to the Indians, be vacated and that the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill and the message relating thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

BANKRUPTCY LAWS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SUMNERS of Texas, MONTAGUE, MCKEOWN, KURTZ, and PERKINS.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, there will be up tomorrow or next day under suspension of the rules the Kopplemann resolution. I asked for time on this resolution; but in view of the fact there will be but 20 minutes to a side, I was informed that under no possible condition could more than 5 minutes be granted to any one Member.

I have some facts I should like to get before the Members to the effect that considerable money is spent for propaganda for dairy legislation and is not spent for the benefit of the farmer, and, therefore, I believe the Kopplemann resolution should be passed to find out by whom and in whose interest it is spent. It would, however, take me more than the entire time which will be allotted for the discussion of the bill under suspension of the rules to properly present this matter to the House. In order that the Members may have this information and read it in the RECORD in the morning, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman is a little confused about the Kopplemann resolution. It was expected that it would be taken up yesterday under suspension. Of course, it cannot be taken up under suspension for 2 weeks, but some of those interested in the resolution may ask for a rule to bring the matter before the House in which event the gentleman could get his time then.

Mr. ARENS. In the meantime it would do no harm for the Members to have this information.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It would be very valuable. I, too, am interested in the dairy industry.

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

THE KOPPLEMANN RESOLUTION

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the Kopplemann resolution instructing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the whole dairy industry should pass without a dissenting vote. There is evidence everywhere that either the A.A.A. has not yet developed a plan that looks workable or is agreeable to the dairy industry or the plan that they did develop and did present to the dairy farmers of the United States was defeated because it was misunderstood, misrepresented, and the farmers were organized against it before it ever was presented, by forces that are not the friends of the farmers. There is chaos in the dairy industry, and if something tangible is not developed it is apt to defeat or at least retard the whole recovery program. One fourth of all income on the farms in the United States is from the dairy industry. There are temporary relief measures available which should be used at once. To establish a permanent policy for the dairy industry we should have a thorough investigation by the Federal Trade Commission in order that we have the facts before Congress next winter to enable them to pass permanent beneficial legislation.

A large and expensive campaign of propaganda has been conducted here in Washington, first to defeat the production-control measure of the A.A.A. and now to pass a bill through Congress in which milk distributors must be more interested than the farmer, H.R. 8988. I shall not oppose this bill but point out later on in this talk where I think it must be corrected, and I am suspicious about the doctor attending its birth and about preparations before its birth. Before its arrival there were held several mass meetings at which the principal purpose was to discredit the administration and its program. Then there appeared a half dozen or more separate pamphlets. These circulars have come to Members of this House and Senate. They attacked the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary and his assistants of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration have been called communists and worse, because they have refused since last January to fix retail prices for milk distributors. The Department refused because they discovered that fixing retail prices meant fixing profits for dealers, when the dealers' profits already in many cases were too large.

This Washington lobby which conducts these attacks and supports H.R. 8988 is called the "Cooperative Dairy Defense Committee" and the "California State-wide Committee for the Fluid Milk Industry." These committees apparently are one and the same person, Roy M. Pike, who manages a corporation farm in California and maintains lobby headquarters in the Washington Hotel here, and he is the head of both committies. The committee purports to be a farmers' organization. If it was a real farmers' lobby, I would have no fault to find. The farmers need more people to speak for them in Washington.

Propaganda costs a lot of money. Maybe the dairy farmers have been making so much lately that they can afford to waste their surplus paying for pamphlets demanding guaranteed prices and profits for milk dealers. I have not had the occasion to hear of any dairy farmers who want to spend their money that way.

Either the farmers are putting up all the money, or else part of it or all is coming from some distributors or processors. I could not blame the distributors if they contribute. There is not any law against it. It would perhaps be a good investment for them. It would yield good returns if the milk prices are fixed under this bill.

I have been told by people in whom I have absolute confidence that Mr. J. L. Kraft, president of the Kraft-Phoenix Cheese Co., gave Roy M. Pike $5,000. Dairymen understand that this was a contribution for the defense committee campaign to help beat production control and put over the Pike bill, H.R. 8988. Mr. Kraft is a director of the National Dairy Products Corporation. This organization sells 80 percent of the milk here in Washington. Of course, the milk distributor would be interested, not in the farmers' prices but in buying large quantities of milk cheap from the farmers. He would want volume at a low price. He would not want production control which would raise farm prices. As a director of the National Dairy Products Corporation and executive of its subsidiary, Mr. Kraft received $56,250 last year, so he would be able to afford a few thousand dollars contribution to a fake farm leader if he happened to feel like making such an investment and if the fake farm leader happened to be willing.

This so-called "dairy defense committee" put on a well-organized and apparently well-financed Nation-wide campaign against production control. In the face of such opposition, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration plan of production control did not have a chance.

Why should distributors be opposed to production control, and why should they contribute to its defeat? This can be easily explained. If production of milk is below the demand for consumption, those that have the milk, the milk cooperatives, will fix the price. It will be high. The distributors will not be able to sell above a certain price that the public will pay, and, therefore, the profit of the distributor is smaller and no bonus for the officers. If production is about even with consumption, farm organizations have about as much voice in price fixing as has the buyer for the distributor, and everybody is apt to get a square deal. But if there is a surplus of milk produced by the farmers, they themselves will chisel in on their neighbors and on their organizations, and the result is that the distributor can buy at any price and he will fix the price. This has happened the last 2 years, and the result is that the farmers went broke, and the distributor made 25 percent dividends on watered stock and all, and paid himself enormous salaries.

The Pike committee circulated its pamphlets. They contained venomous accusations, attacking the Adjustment Administration and the Secretary of Agriculture on every possible pretext. They drummed up opposition in the regional meetings called for the farmers. They had the regional meetings stacked against the administration program. Roy Pike and his colleagues helped bring about the defeat of production control. They blocked the chance of the dairy farmer's getting better prices, nearer cost of production. They sought by every means of vilification to discredit everybody and every plan which offered real help for the dairy farmer. Instead of help for the farmer, the Pike committee demanded a plan which would help the dealers.

Having defeated production control, which offered benefit payments to farmers, Pike brings in a bill to fix prices for milk distributors.

Now I want to state a fair proposition. The dairy farmers are entitled to know who is who among the dairy leaders. If the so-called "Dairy Cooperative Defense Committee" represents manufacturers and distributors, or gets its financial support from them, why does it not say so? Why does it not wear a silk hat and spats, instead of a straw hat and boots? These spokesmen should speak as what they are, and not pose as spokesmen for farmers. Mr. Pike was asked by newspapermen how his propaganda was being financed. He fumbled around with evasive answers.

Congress and the farmers are entitled to know the facts about Mr. Pike and the real forces back of him and this bill to compel the Adjustment Administration to fix retail prices of milk. I am a dairy farmer, and I want to know the facts. So do the rest of the dairy farmers, and so does Congress.

Let us find out by this investigation whether the big centralizers, distributors, and processors of dairy products are the real forces of so-called "Dairy Defense Committee", or just a mask for a false farm leadership.

Many eastern milk producers are opposed to production control. At a meeting here in Washington to which all dairy cooperatives were invited, a lot of resolutions were adopted. One of them asked for the resignation of Mr. Wallace. Another one opposed the processing tax and the administration plan of production control.

Another one favored new legislation for the milk producers, and another favored the Brandt plan for solving the farm question.

The milk prducers who called this meeting were not interested in the Brandt plan, but, by endorsing this plan, they felt they would succeed in obtaining the support of Mr. Brandt and with him other representatives of the cheese- and butter-producing States.

The Brandt plan is a modified McNary-Haugen bill. The complete group that adopted the above resolutions were opposed to the McNary-Haugen bill, and their opposition was given as one reason for the veto by the President. They are still opposed to it, but they swallowed the Brandt plan in order that they might gain his support for their own demands. Through vicious propaganda they succeeded in having the administration and its allotment plan condemned in the whole dairy section and the Brandt plan adopted before either plan was presented. Meetings were stacked against the administration. It appears that representatives of the Northwest butter and cheese sections were intended to be used to pull chestnuts out of the fire for other sections, and they soon discovered it. Names of the representatives of the butter sections were withdrawn from the pamphlets of the dairy defense committee.

The bill before Congress, presented by the defense committee, provides designation of the area that milk can be shipped into the market to be served, a license or permit to be required of the farmer, fixing a minimum price for milk to the producer, and a price for the consumer. New permits cannot be granted if sufficient milk is in the specified area. The bill does not provide how the price is to be arrived at. The price fixed should give the farmer cost of production; add to that the cost of distribution and fix the resulting amount as the price charged to the consumer.

The A.A.A. should be empowered to figure cost of production, cost of distribution, the interest on investment, and fair salaries to be paid officers of milk distributors. If all thsse items and the price fixed are not reasonable, the Government of all the people would soon be in trouble. The bill contains none of these essential provisions. In my home, near the Twin Cities, the fluid-milk area covers a region reaching about 30 miles all around the Twin Cities. This area now produces double the milk needed for fluid milk in the Twin Cities.

Do people in Minnesota approve that people in this area are given an exclusive license to deliver milk in the Twin Cities at a price fixed by the Government, without the Government's giving any consideration to the farmer living 35 miles out from the Twin Cities or without this same Government's fixing a fair price for him? With the Government's fixing a fair price for fluid milk in the respective areas, are not those going to produce more and so still reduce the demand for those outside of the area? There is nothing in the bill for production control. Why? Just think of it, the Government guaranteeing cost of production in a small, given area alone.

The Government must lift all dairymen together, and I have a sure plan. Regulate supply, encourage demand, encourage cooperative marketing to eliminate excessive profits. Land O'Lakes Cooperative buys butter all over the Northwest and pays the best prices it can. Private buyers have to meet this price, and sometimes they do a little better to get butter. Land O'Lakes takes this butter, ships it to its own warehouse in every large city and from there delivers it to the retail trade at the cost it paid the farmers plus the actual cost of delivering. Private dealers have to meet this price. What is the result? Reasonable cost to consumer and increased consumption with better than 80 cents out of every consumer's dollar going to the farmer and no profit in butter the last 5 years, with the probable exception of a few speculators. Those are the results. Only supply and demand regulated the range of prices. If the Milk Producers Association would follow the methods of Land O'Lakes and distribute only a small part of their milk, private dealers would have to meet this competition and the producers could set the price, or the producer should interest himself in organizing consumers' cooperatives like the Franklin Cooperative Milk Distributors Association in Minneapolis.

Together with this program must go controlled production. In 1928 we had in the United States 23,000,000 milk cows, today we have 26,000,000, an increase of one half million cows a year with the production per cow increasing.

Our people should insist that the Government eliminate tuberculosis-affected and Bangs-disease affected cattle as a health measure to be paid for out of the money Congress appropriated. The Government should spend the $50,000,000 appropriated under the La Follette amendment to buy beef and dairy products to be fed to the poor. The farmers should join in and do their part by reducing their herds, the cows sold to be paid for by themselves through a tariff, a processing tax or an equalization fee, or whatever you may call it. This reducing can be made voluntary if all the dairymen are taxed and a bonus paid to those that are reducing. The Government should encourage cooperation and can help it by advice and financing.

The farmers should get together this summer on how they are themselves going to finance reduction.

In closing, I believe the Brandt plan should be adopted by the Government, storing the surplus that the good God may give us in spite of the Government and the people trying to control production. Store in the fat years that we may have something to eat in the lean years as they did in old Egypt 4,000 years ago.

OUR PROBLEMS

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech I made last evening at the Willard Hotel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech I made last evening at the Willard Hotel:

We in Congress have thrust upon us problems concerned only with the material things of life. Why only the material things? Has our spiritual being been forgotten in these times? Have we reached a state in which our spiritual development has arrived at its zenith? Are we to lay aside matters of the spirit in the great fight against the economic disease which has overcome our Nation and the rest of the world?

This age seems to be distinguished for its material, commercial, and scientific achievements. The requirements of the physical man have been met. But there is lacking the fundamental need of spiritual development which ought constantly to remind man that there is a supreme power greater than he ever can be, a power which has endowed him with the capability of surpassing his physical and mental inabilities, without which power we would today be living as did our first ancestors.

The material achievements of tomorrow will put those of today merely into the appendix of an encyclopedia for the use of students of research. But truth and charity and morality continue always as the bulwark of man's development no matter along what lines of endeavor.

We are in a most interesting period of time. We are emerging from an era of despair and turmoil caused by the overexpansion of greed. Selfishness was the keynote and proved our downfall. Every energy was devoted to a mechanical zealousness in which we forgot our spiritual capital, our intellectual wealth, our religious power. The waste, abuse, and neglect of our ideals have been costly and dangerous. In our mad rush for material wealth we overlooked the most precious possession of mankind, the soul and spirit of man. Human brains, human kindness have been subordinate to the mechanical toil of our present-day civilization.

The result? We are bankrupt because we produce too abundantly. Our excess has been our undoing.

We are tolerant of crime. We are suffering from moral and spiritual anemia. What can we do? What can we as Jews do?

There are four and a half million Jews in America. We are the largest Jewish settlement in the world. Ours is a twofold responsibility. We have a duty to Judaism, and we have a duty to America. In our devotion to the one we cannot forget the other. We owe too much to America to ignore her in her hour of need.

I could go on and extol our Jewish heritage. I could go on boasting, because Judaism gave to America the fundamentals of peace and liberty on which her Constitution is based. I could quote passages from the pens of Americans which in essence repeat Jewish philosophy and Jewish wisdom. But if I were to do that, I would but be dwelling on the past. Our task is in the present; our work is for the future. Everyone knows what Judaism has done for the world. I want to know what Judaism is going to do for the world.

We cannot set ourselves apart, nor can we thrust ourselves in the forefront. Ours must be cooperation, the sort of cooperation which builds without seeming to build, which molds without seeming to mold, and which surveys the finished product with humble pride.

What weapon shall we use? It is right at hand, within us, given us as our heritage from countless centuries of Jewish teachings. Loyalty is the first requisite. To be a loyal Jew is to be a loyal American. To be true to the teachings of Judaism is to be just in dealing with all people; to be a good Jew is to be charitable and helpful to the poor and unfortunate without regard to creed or class or nationality; to be a true Jew is to strive, through love of God and love of man to institute on earth a Gan-Eden from which war, crime, and greed will be banished, and in their place will be health, happiness, and peace. Given these three we will have prosperity.

But can we do this, can we have these if we are to go on heedless of the teachings of our fathers? Can we be Jews if we know not what it is to be Jews? Can we bring to life the characteristics which have distinguished Jews from the beginning of time if we permit these characteristics to be submerged in those of a new and strange era "which knew not Abraham?"

Judaism is not dead. It is not for the sake of Jewry that we fear Hitler. There have been so many Hitlers that we have lost count of them. There always will be Hitlers. For the time being Germany is lost to us. But the world is a large place, and Germany is only a speck on the map of the universe.

Our problem is right here in America. We must help build America into the land her founders visualized she would be—a land of plenty, a land of peace, a land of prosperity. To be sure we can build her commercially—we have done that. But America is a commercial power—and are you satisfied?

There is lacking in this America of ours a certain vein. The land is crying out for it. It is more valuable than veins of iron, or copper, or silver, or gold. It will take away that restlessness which has our people in its clutches. It will take away that greed and selfishness which has made madmen of us. It will infuse us with new enthusiasm, with new kindness, with a peace of soul which will expand and become the peace of a nation.

Wake up, and remember there is a God. I do not mean that we are to spend our hours poring over the Talmud. I do mean that we are to reanimate the Talmud. Bring its pages, its lines into our active life. The Jewish spirit is in the archives of civilization. Bring it out, dust it off, and send it with new virility among men.

Can the world respect a dead people? Is the fact that we have a national homeland where the Jewish spirit joyously spreads its mark on every tree, in every home, in every person, to content us as the proof that the Jewish people are a reality? That is not enough.

Palestine cannot hold all of us; and even if Palestine could, are we all to wend our way to our homeland, and forget our responsibility to the rest of the world?

Our heritage is such a rich one. We have so much to offer our neighbors. We have so much to enrich our own selves. But we permit ourselves to be swallowed up in whatever environment, in whatever habits happen to surround us. We are indifferent to our own longing, and thus have become indifferent to the crying needs of the civilization of which we are a part.

We Jews can do a great deal for America, which is striving to break the bounds of the so-called "progress" she boasts. Do you not hear this Nation writhing and twisting to break its chains? I do. I cannot help it. The hundreds of heart-rending tales that come to me daily from people who look to me as a legislator to help them attain the status of human beings picture all too clearly, all too horribly, the mire in which we are wallowing. All that those people want is the privilege of living as human beings. And they think that laws will make them free.

I want to tell those people that so long as they act as animals, stronger animals will devour them. Laws do not free people. Laws keep them in check. Freedom comes from within. So long as man is a slave to his own desires, he cannot be free.

The only trouble with America is that she lost faith in herself. She tried new roads and lost the way. I say we must experience a complete reversal of thinking and of conduct. We must cultivate a greater faith in our destiny as a great democracy.

That is where we Jews must take the lead. The laws of Judaism make for wonderful discipline. Jewish codes demand sanctity and stability in the home. It may be said without exaggeration that the modern ideal of family life and the modern system of education for every child are based on Jewish example. The Sabbath was established among the Jews 20 centuries before the beginning of Christianity. The idea of one day's rest in seven, for relaxation, prayer, and meditation is one of the fundamentals of civilization.

Jewish learning contains all the elements necessary for fostering civic qualities. A Jew who studies the Bible and Jewish philosophy imbibes the spirit of our prophets, develops a better character, a stronger feeling of sympathy toward his fellow beings than he would otherwise have. He is socially minded and is inclined to give of his time, of his efforts, and of his means for communal needs.

Judaism is intimately associated with the character and destiny of American democracy. The founders of our Republic knew and appreciated the ideas of Judaism. When it came time for the lawmakers to lay the foundations of our country, they went to the Old Testament for instruction and guidance. They read of the old Hebrew commonwealth, the government of the Hebrews under the judges, and sought to transplant this ancient Hebrew government onto American soil.

There is need to give new terms to old Jewish truths. Our life as a nation depends upon our sense of religion. Education and intellectual attainment are in themselves not sufficient. These trying times indicate that we need religious institutions now more than ever. If we would make of the citizens of tomorrow good citizens and desirable members of society, we must give them religious training.

We are assembled here in Washington these few days to talk over our problems and discuss methods and means for making the United Synagogue of America a potent force in American Jewish life. We must not go away with the pious feeling that having spent 3 days in deliberation our task is done. The work falls upon every single one of us. We must ourselves take a new lease on our Jewishness, imbue ourselves with the concepts and teachings of Judaism, drink in our history and philosophy—not as an end of attainment, but as a means of spreading what Judaism has to offer to the new civilization in America which is now springing into life.

MRS. CAROLINE MILLER

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time to pay tribute to a distinguished citizen of my district, who on yesterday, May 7, was awarded the Pulitzer prize by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, for the best novel of the year. Lamb in His Bosom, by Mrs. Caroline Miller, of Baxley, Ga., is her first book. It is a story of pioneer life in southern Georgia and has been hailed as a most thrilling episode.

The awarding of the Pulitzer prize to Mrs. Miller is a signal honor to my district, and, as the representative of the people whose early life and traditions were the source of her inspiration, I deem it a pleasure and a privilege to pay this tribute of recognition to Mrs. Caroline Miller, of Baxley, Ga.

EXPANSION OF CREDIT AND CURRENCY

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD two letters on which I have been working with former Senator Robert L. Owen for some time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the subject of the letters?

Mr. KELLER. It is on the subject of expansion of currency and credit in this country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letters relative to expansion of currency and credit:

SOUTHERN BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., May 2, 1934.

Hon. KENT E. KELLER,
Member of Congress, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. KELLER: In answer to your request, I enclose a copy of my letter to Senator FLETCHER of April 12, 1934, on the importance of expanding credit and currency.

The reason why the general-commodity index and property values do not rise is because the supply of money does not rise.

The money of the United States consists of five billions in United States currency and normally about 9 or 10 times five billions in bank deposits subject to check. These bank checks are private money not subject at present to Government control. These checks are drawn on private deposits which arise almost exclusively from private loans. When the private loans are required to be liquidated, payment is made by checks on deposits, and the deposits contract accordingly. When the deposits contract, the supply of check money or private money diminishes and the value of money rises in proportion.

The value of money depends on the supply of money in relation to the demand for money. The demand for check money in 1929 was twelve hundred billions, represented by twelve hundred billion dollars of checks cashed by the banks in that year. This demand was for the payment of debts, interest, taxes, insurance, freight, telegraph, telephone, fees, and other fixed and inflexible charges, as well as for operating on the stock exchanges, and in transacting the business of the country and living expenses.

When the deposits contracted from 1929 to 1933 by $17,000,000,000, the immediate effect was of such liquidation that money rose in purchasing power over 60 percent in terms of commodities, the necessaries of life, and over 600 percent in terms of listed stocks. And, in proportion, money rose in value to all other forms of property, depending on conditions.

The effect of contracting credit and currency in this way by contracting bank deposits results in cutting down consumption, production, and employment. When the Harding contraction took place in 1921, the value of the national production immediately fell fifteen billions in 1921, and under the Hoover contraction of seventeen billions of deposits, the value of national production fell from eighty-nine billion to forty-eight billion, or a loss of production in 1932 of $41,000,000,000, more than the net cost to the United States of the World War.

To enable you to visualize the effect of contracting bank deposits, I insert three tables showing bank deposits, the index of production by volume, and the value of production in 1926 dollars. You will see from these figures how the value and volume of production, and therefore of American employment, is affected by the contraction of bank deposits through the liquidation of loans:

Column 1. Total deposits of all banks in the United States excluding interbank deposits.

Column 2. Index of national production by volume.

Column 3. Approximate national production in dollars of value of 1926, in billions.

June 30—	Deposits	Index of production by volume	Value of national production
1920	37,721	87	$65,000,000,000
1921	35,742	67	50,000,000,000
1922	37,615	85	63,000,000,000
1923	40,688	101	75,000,000,000
1924	43,405	95	70,000,000,000
1925	47,612	104	76,000,000,000
1926	49,733	108	81,000,000,000
1927	51,662	106	79,000,000,000
1928	53,396	111	83,000,000,000
1929	53,852	119	89,000,000,000
1930	54,954	96	72,000,000,000
1931	51,782	81	60,000,000,000
1932	41,963	64	48,000,000,000
1933	38,011	76	57,000,000,000

Every well-informed public man should know, and probably does know, that the cause of the depression of 1921 was due to the deliberate contraction of credit and currency as a political policy by the Republican administration; the Republican platform demanded the contraction of credit and currency for the purpose of lowering the value of commodities, and therefore raising the price of money. When the Harding administration came in, the loans were contracted at $6,000,000,000 and currency fifteen hundred millions. The immediate result was that the dollar rose from an index of 60 in May 1920 to 107, and commodities fell in value accordingly.

Under the Hoover contraction of seventeen billions of deposits, the dollar rose to 166 in February 1933, and every bank in the United States suspended.

In 1924 the Democratic national platform denounced this Republican panic caused by contracting credit and currency, and both parties in 1932 in their platforms clearly showed that they perfectly well understood that depression was caused by contracting credit and currency. In the first paragraph of the Democratic platform it recites that the uncontrolled expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at public expense was the cause or a cause of the Hoover panic, and the Hoover platform made the confession in terms still more explicit.

The sensible way to correct contraction is by expansion.

It might be asked how can the Government expand bank deposits. The answer is easy and of the most far-reaching importance.

THE EXPANSION OF BANK DEPOSITS BY GOVERNMENT

At present, bank deposits are very largely based on private bank loans, which may be liquidated at will. If the bank deposits in very substantial part were based on long-term Government bonds, the Government could measurably control the volume of bank deposits by expanding bank deposits against the credit of Government bonds deposited in the Reserve banks and could contract such deposits when desired by selling such bonds.

Selling Government bonds to persons with bank deposits does not expand deposits, but merely substitutes one deposit for another. If the banks would buy the bonds, it would expand deposits to that extent, but the banks have about reached their capacity in buying Government bonds, and they are not expanding credit.

The plan I suggested to Senator FLETCHER was a very simple and perfect piece of mechanism. It proposed to have the Government buy the stock of member banks in the Federal Reserve banks by giving the banks a cash credit for the value of such stock or to pay them in legal tender. When these banks became exclusive Government banks, the Government could deposit the bonds in such banks and be credited on open account with the value of such bonds. Thereafter the interest on such bonds would go to the Government, and, what is much more important, the credit or deposits so created in the reserve banks would be transferred to other depositors when expended by the Government, and such deposits would remain in existence until the Government bonds are paid and would not be subject to liquidation as are the present deposits based on private loans. If under this system the dollar index went below par, or what is precisely the same thing, the general-commodity index went above par, the Government could withdraw bank deposits to the extent required by the simple process of selling its bonds. The only way in which the Government can perform its constitutional duties of regulating the value of money is by giving the Government this power to expand and contract deposits. It must be remembered that the checks drawn on deposit constitute more than nine-tenths of our money. As I stated above, the demand for such check money and the volume of such check money issued and cashed by the banks in 1929 was twelve hundred billions, while the turn-over of United States currency was probably not exceeding one hundred billion.

IT WOULD BE BETTER FOR THE BANKS

The Harding panic and the Hoover panic, both due to uncontrolled contraction of private deposits and loans to private persons and therefore the contraction of credit in the broadest sense, were not only followed in 1921 by 5,000,000 unemployed and in 1933 by 13,000,000 unemployed, but by the bankruptcy of 15,000 banks, due to the shrinkage in the value of property by the shrinkage of check money.

These banks would not have been harmed except for this uncontrolled contraction of credit, loans, and deposits. Ninety-nine out of one hundred bankers would be benefited by stability of credit, loans, and deposits, and stability of property values. The 1 percent who might profit by gambling or operating on the stock exchanges probably understand very little of the fundamental principles of monetary science, however expert in their own special field. By giving the Government power to stabilize property values and making the Government responsible for the performance of its constitutional duties, would be of enormous service to all the bankers in the United States who were engaged in legitimate business. It would give stability to the savings of the people whether invested in savings accounts or invested in property.

I trust you will pardon me for dwelling on this matter, but I regard it as the most important question financially, commercially, politically, and socially, in the world today, and for that reason have been giving it a careful and very long-continued critical study. I am pleased to know you are so deeply interested in the matter.

With sentiments of great respect, I remain, as ever,

Cordially yours,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

SOUTHERN BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., April 12, 1934.

Subject: The present need of expanding credit and currency.

The Honorable DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: In pursuance of my conversation with you in relation to the urgent importance of immediate expansion of credit and currency as a means of making fully successful the administration's recovery program, I submit to you my comments in the hope of serving the President, whose success I deeply desire.

The President was nominated and elected on the issue of correcting the depression by restoring the purchasing power of money to the 1926 level and restoring the value of property accordingly. He was committed to the principles set forth in the Goldsborough bill, which declared this policy, which was passed by the House of Representatives under Democratic leadership by a vote of 289 to 60.

His friends and supporters urged this view on the hustings. When he assumed the Presidency, in his inaugural address and subsequent addresses, he confirmed to the country his purpose to make effective this policy—and not only to restore the dollar to its normal purchasing power, but to maintain it there.

In pursuance of this most honorable and supremely important objective, the Congress of the United States, in the Thomas amendment, upon the fullest and freest consultation and cooperation with the President by an overwhelming vote, authorized him to take steps to expand credit and the currency, to cut the gold content of the dollar one half, and to acquire the additional use of silver for the same purpose.

When the President came into power, the general-commodity index was 60 and the dollar index 166. Immediately that this action was taken by Congress and the President (who approved it and assumed the responsibility of carrying out the legislative will), the country reacted vigorously. The commodity index rose by July 15 to 71 (one fourth of the way to recovery), and the dollar index fell from 166 to 140. The value of property began to rise. For instance, the value of property represented by the stock of the Nation's greatest industries listed on the New York Stock Exchange rose from the market value of 20 billions to 36.3 billions. These stocks in September 1929 had reached a market value of 89.9 billions and had fallen as low as 15 billions in June 1932—when the country was in complete financial collapse. The detailed figures I gave you in my letter of March 20, 1934 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 5092, tables A, B, C).

In the middle of July, however, it was announced in the public press that the President would not resort to expanding credit and currency until opportunity had been given to the N.R.A., the R.F.C., and the A.A.A., and other features of the recovery program and to the reemployment efforts of the administration. Nine months have passed since then, and the general-commodity index has made no substantial advance. It now stands at about 73—and there has been no substantial advance in the value of the property and in stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange. (See exhibits A, B, C, above referred to, and D attached hereto.)

The failure of the general-commodity index to advance and of property values to rise since July 15 last should be convincing proof that these values have not been greatly advanced by the recovery program. The recovery program itself is now being systematically attacked by the opposition party, despite the very great benefits in reemployment and social justice already accomplished. Except for the general-recovery program, conditions would have been much worse. But this recovery program would be enormously strengthened in public opinion if the general-commodity index and the property values were restored to normal by the expansion of credit and currency.

The values of the stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange in 1929 was abnormal and registered eighty-nine billions. The general-commodity index in July was 98—2 points below normal. There had been no inflation of credit in the general wholesale commodity market and, therefore, the value of commodities was not inflated.

The value of the stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange in 1921 was about sixteen billions and in and between 1921 and 1929 there were sold in new stock fifty billions additional—making a total of sixty-six billions. The increase of value from sixty-six billions to eighty-nine billions was $23,000,000,000 of inflated value, due to the fact that brokers' loans on the New York Stock Exchange increased from 1922, when it was one billion, to eight and one half billions in September 1929. (See ex. A.)

THE FUNDAMENTAL LAW OF MONETARY SCIENCE

The value of money is regulated by supply and demand. To regulate money, the supply and demand of money must be controlled. Congress alone can control the supply and demand of money, and Congress alone is authorized by the Constitution to regulate the value of money. The ablest authority on monetary science, Gustav Cassel, in his Post War Monetary Stabilization has completely demonstrated this—although it should be self-evident. He cites the experience of every nation in Europe to illustrate it, and he lays down the following maxims:

"* * * the value of a currency is essentially determined by the scarcity in the supply of means of payment" (p. 64).

"* * * it took many years of hard work to get people to understand that the only thing that has real importance for the value of a currency is the total supply of the means of payment * * *" (p. 3).

"* * * the gold standard is nothing else than a paper standard, the value of which is entirely dependent upon the way in which the supply of the means of payment is regulated" (p. 4).

"* * * the value of money cannot possibly be dependent on anything but the supply of money in relation to the demand for money" (p. 91).

"The purchasing power of money is exclusively dependent on the scarcity in the supply of the means of payment" (pp. 42 and 64).

Under Gustav Cassel's advice, Sweden has stabilized her currency most successfully. The tables I give you demonstrate the truth of these maxims, for when brokers' loans increased on the New York Stock Exchange seven and one half billions, the value of the listed stocks increased correspondingly, because these loans created a like amount of deposits and a huge reservoir of check money employed almost exclusively in stock-market operations.

From 1921 to 1929, brokers' loans expanded over 400 percent and the value of the stocks expanded over 400 percent; and when the brokers' loans fell to a quarter of a billion on the New York Stock Exchange and the deposits and check money fell accordingly, the value of these stocks fell to one sixth of what they had been—eighty-nine billions in September 1929 to fifteen billions in June 1932.

EVIDENCE OF TRUTH OF MONETARY MAXIM

In 1929 the checks cashed by all the banks of the United States was about one thousand two hundred billions, on deposits of about forty-six billions—a rough turn-over of about 26 times; but this excludes many billions of savings accounts whose turn-over was very inactive, while the velocity of checks drawn on deposit arising from brokers' loans had a turn-over in 1929 several times greater. The checks cashed in 1933 by all the banks of the United States was less than four hundred billions—a loss in check turn-over of over $800,000,000,000.

Some of the orthodox and classical economists, and even some advocates of the quantitative theory of money, think of money only as public money, such as United States currency—overlooking the fact that the private money of the country, consisting of checks and drafts, is over nine times the amount of public money. The public money (United States currency) is about five and one-half billions, of which one-half billion is lost or in foreign countries and only five billions in the United States. Of this five billions, probably two billions are hoarded.

But the deposits subject to check in 1929 were about forty-six billions, excluding the mutual savings banks, and in all these deposits they diminished about twenty billions; and the check money turn-over, as stated, has been reduced from one thousand two hundred billions to less than four hundred billions. As an unavoidable consequence, diminishing this supply of money has greatly increased the value of money and has greatly decreased the value of property.

For example, the value of National City Bank stock fell from over $500 a share to less than $25 a share; United States Steel stock fell to one tenth its previous value; and the whole list of stocks on the New York Stock Exchange fell from eighty-nine billions to fifteen billions in June 1932. Prof. Irving Fisher estimates that the value of all property in the United States has shrunk in value over two hundred billions. The evidence, therefore, that the value of money depends upon the supply of money in relation to the demand for money is complete.

The demand for money is based on the need for money for paying debts (which exceed two hundred billions in the United States), for paying interest on debts (an annual charge of over twelve billions), for paying taxes (an annual charge of fourteen billions), for paying other fixed charges, for transportation and transmission of intelligence, and for meeting the cost of manufacturing and distributing goods. These demands for money, including the cost of living, are daily and urgent.

And the value of our money is not dependent on gold or silver, as many orthodox and classical students believe. The evidence of this truth is that the American people do not use gold or silver for money, that the United States Government has all the gold in storage with no demand upon such gold worth mentioning, since the gold demand for industrial arts is more than supplied by our own mines, and since the demand for paying foreign trade balances is negligible.

On March 14, 1900, when the Gold Standard Act was passed, we put $150,000,000 of gold coin in the Treasury to enable the Treasury Department to redeem our currency on demand. This gold coin remains in the Treasury untouched after 34 years, proving that the people of the United States have been content with paper currency and check money and that paper currency and check money, that is, private money, have served every purpose required in paying for the necessaries of life; in paying for freight, express, telegraph, telephone, mail; for taxes; for paying interest on debts; and for paying debts.

I enclose you, as exhibit D, a letter from the Assistant Director of the Bureau of Research of the Federal Reserve Board enclosing a record of the deposits of the United States with an estimate of the extent of savings deposits and of demand deposits. This record shows that the demand deposits, outside of savings accounts, have fallen to 14 billions.

And a recent examination of deposits made in the Treasury Department, in relation to the guaranty of bank deposits, has developed the fact that 60 percent of the deposits are in excess of $10,000 and that 60 percent of the deposits are held by 0.8 of 1 percent of the depositors, proving that the demand deposits of the people with less than $10,000 on deposit, the small financial people, the people who are the real consumers of the country and who fix the value of commodities, have less than $6,000,000,000 on deposit. The same people who hoard currency would hoard such deposits.

It should, therefore, occasion no surprise that the general-commodity index has not gone up since last July.

Since the passage of the Thomas amendment, a great campaign of propaganda has appeared against expansion of credit and currency, on the false theory that any expansion is "inflation" and that the evils of inflation have been demonstrated by Germany, which destroyed its own currency in 1923 as a political policy to defeat excessive war reparations. This fallacious argument and the theory that nations cannot control inflation have been fully answered by Gustav Cassel in his Post War Monetary Stabilization.

Every nation in Europe inflated its paper money after the war as a means of distributing the cost of the war. For example, France expanded her paper money fivefold and cut the gold content to one fifth, and has been regarded as a model in Europe of sound finance. Italy did the same thing—expanding its paper money fourfold and cutting the gold content to one fourth. Belgium and other nations followed the same policy.

The United States has authorized cutting the gold content of the dollar, but has not expanded its money. On the contrary, it has caused a shrinkage in its check money of approximately three fourths, and the recent Federal Reserve Bulletin of March 15 shows a contraction of United States currency of $1,670,000,000 since Mr. Roosevelt came in.

In May 1913 the dollar index under contraction was 145 and the commodity index 62, but when we expanded credit check money and currency for war purposes the commodity index rose to 166 in May 1920 and the dollar index fell to 60.

On May 13, 1920, the Federal Reserve Board, in a secret meeting with 12 members of the Federal Reserve Advisory Council and 36 class A directors, determined to contract credit and currency. (See S.Doc. 310, Feb. 1923 for the censored record.) On June 10, 1920, under Harding's leadership, the Republican National Convention pledged the Republican Party to "a persistent attack on the high cost of living by a courageous and intelligent deflation of credit and currency." In other words, they pledged the Republican Party, by contracting credit and currency, to lower the value of commodities (the products of human labor) and to increase the purchasing power of money.

When Harding was elected this policy was put into effect by contracting credit $6,000,000,000 and contracting currency $1,500,000,000. Contracting the supply of check money in this manner—by contracting the loans, therefore deposits, and therefore check money, and contracting currency on which banks found their whole system of loans and deposits—the purchasing power of money (the dollar index) rose from 60 in May 1920 to 107 in June 1921, and the general-commodity index fell from 166 to 93. Farm products fell over one half in value. The agricultural census showed that the value of farm and ranch properties in the United States fell from seventy-nine billions to fifty-eight and one half billions—a clean loss to those engaged in agriculture and stock raising of twenty and one half billion dollars—while their debts, interest, and taxes, and other fixed and inflexible charges remained the same.

The proof that the value of money depends upon its supply in relation to its demand is thus illustrated—although it should be a self-evident truth.

The recognition of this truth is shown by an attempt to lower the supply of cotton for the purpose of increasing its value in money; the attempt to lower the value of wheat and pigs to increase their value in money. It is a maxim that the value of anything, including money, depends upon the law of supply and demand.

CONCLUSION

It therefore follows, my dear Senator, that our honored President and Congress are bound in their duty to regulate the value of money with the necessity of expanding currency and credit.

Our banking system, which requires a bank to pay the depositor in cash on demand, requires the bank to have available a sufficient amount of currency to meet this demand at all times. At present, the actual cash reported on April 2 by the reporting member banks shows $242,000,000 of cash in vault against $16,213,000,000—or $1 in cash against $64 of deposits. These banks rely on the Reserve banks to furnish them with cash.

But, obviously, if the cash in vault of the banks of the country were expanded, they would feel a greater sense of security than they do now, and the people who are hoarding money would spend more freely if the money hoarded were replaced by new currency. It is estimated that the banks can afford to make $10 of loans against $1 of cash.

For that reason, at a time when the expansion of credit is so vital and necessary to restore property values, there should be no hesitation in expanding this currency and using it to pay current expenses—rather than impose additional taxes or issue interest-bearing bonds, which, in due time, must be repaid with interest by additional taxes.

The expansion of credit is a matter of supreme importance to overcome the contraction of $20,000,000,000 of deposits and the check money based thereon. In dealing with such colossal shrinkage of check money and deposits, it is either stupid or dishonest to talk about a $3,000,000,000 expansion being inflation. Inflation is unjustified expansion—it is an expansion unjust to the creditor; and until these property values come back to normal, you cannot be unjust to the creditor.

Since Mr. Roosevelt came in, the Federal Reserve banks, for example, have contracted credit—according to their March 15 bulletin—$944,000,000 and currency by $1,670,000,000. They sold or disposed of their bills bought and bills discounted to a net contraction of one billion five hundred and forty-four millions—using a part of this money, however, with which to buy Treasury certificates. This was no expansion, but exchange and contraction.

The reporting member banks have $171,000,000 less loans than they had 1 year ago—by the bulletin of April 2—and the Government of the United States is now considering having the Reserve banks make investment loans direct to the industry, because the banks of the country are not making the loans needed by industry.

The reason the banks are not making loans is because, until they see the rising of property values under adequate governmental policies, they do not feel safe in making loans. When the President shall declare his purpose to expand credit and currency—as contemplated by the Thomas amendment and as he indicated in his message of July 3 and in his speech of October 22—the conditions will entirely change. Then the manufacturer will know that commodity values are going to rise and will be prepared to expand his output for the profit he visualizes. The merchant will make haste to fill his empty shelves, because he sees a rise in his inventory. And the bank, knowing that the manufacturer and merchant will have better profits, will not hesitate to lend them money, nor will the manufacturer and merchant hesitate to borrow.

The tremendous expenditure of public money obtained by bonds is no expansion of credit or of bank deposits, for the simple reason that the money obtained for the bonds is already on deposit or invested in Government bonds; and obtaining such deposits and transferring such deposits by expenditures to others does not increase the volume of deposits or check money based thereon.

The people of the United States have been waiting with great patience, hoping that the President would carry out his promises to restore the 1926 commodity index and to restore the value of the dollar to its normal purchasing power.

The country is entitled to an honest dollar. The present dollar is dishonest, is unfair and destructive to the debtor class of the United States; and this is as true of the Government of the United States as it is of the citizen—for the dollars the Government is now taking from the people is this high-purchasing-power dollar.

The best way to balance the Budget is to restore the dollar to normal, to restore property values, and, therefore, to increase the incomes of the people from such increase in property values; and this can be done only by carrying out the policy to which the administration is committed, and which represents the legislative will as expressed in the Thomas amendment.

The figures which I have given you are taken from the records of the Federal Reserve Board.

I think, my dear Senator FLETCHER, that you should call the attention of the President of the United States to the substantial facts and principles which should govern this matter, and solicit his cooperation without further delay in expanding credit and currency.

The Federal Reserve banks were intended to function as Government banks and were given enormous powers. They have shown themselves to be unwilling to serve in this capacity. I think, therefore, that the Government of the United States would be justified in buying the stock of these banks and making them purely Government banks. If this were done, it would require only the transfer to the member banks of $146,000,000 to cover the capital paid in by them, and then the Government could deposit its bonds with such new banks and take credit on open account for such deposit of bonds. Thenceforth the interest on such bonds would go to the Government, but, what is far more important, the credit deposits with the Reserve banks—being transferred to other banks—when expended would increase the deposits and the check money of the banks of the country, and thereby expand money through normal banking channels of increased deposits.

I submit this matter to you with great respect and with an humble prayer to the throne of grace that my efforts to serve you and your committee and the administration may not be fruitless.

Very sincerely, your friend,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

EXHIBIT D (PART I)

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, March 31, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. OWEN: Pursuant to your request, I am enclosing a table containing available figures of deposits of all banks in the United States. The figures in the first column include total deposits, exclusive of interbank deposits, for all banks as compiled by the Federal Reserve Board from reports received from the Comptroller of the Currency and from the State banking departments in each State. The figures in the three remaining columns were compiled by the savings division of the American Bankers' Association, and apparently exclude not only interbank deposits but also certified and cashiers' checks, cash letters of credit, travelers' checks outstanding, and deposits of States, counties, municipalities, and of the Federal Government.

It is estimated that total deposits, exclusive of interbank deposits, of all banks in the United States were turned over about 22 or 23 times in 1929, and that at present they are being turned over at the rate of about 11 times per annum.

Very truly yours,

CARL E. PARRY,
Assistant Director of Research and Statistics.

REGULATION OF FOODS AND DRUGS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table resolutions adopted by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, suggesting certain amendments to the pending Senate bill, No. 2800, providing for the regulation of foods and drugs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the American Newspaper Publishers Association approves of a constructive revision of the present Food and Drugs Act to strengthen its protection of the consumer public, but records its belief that the proper method of effectuating this objective would be by amendment to the existing Pure Food and Drugs Act of 1906; and

Whereas industries most vitally affected by the drastic legislation proposed in Senate bills nos. 1944 and 2000, having submitted amendments to the present proposed Senate bill no. 2800: Be it

Resolved, That the American Newspaper Publishers Association, in convention assembled, hereby goes on record as endorsing the following proposed amendments to Senate bill no. 2800:

Definition of "advertising": Section 2 (j), page 3, lines 16 to 18, revise this paragraph to read (the amendment is printed in italic):

"The term 'advertisement' includes all advertisements and all representations of fact or opinion therein or commercially disseminated in any manner or by any means other than by the labeling."

Definition of "false advertising": Section 9 (a), pages 15 to 16, add at the end, in line 2 of page 16, the following new sentences:

"No representation concerning any value or effect of a food or cosmetic shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if such representation is supported by substantial scientific opinion or by demonstrable scientific facts. This paragraph shall not be construed or applied to prohibit harmless trade claims"; and be it further

Resolved, that the American Newspaper Publishers Association approves an amendment to section 15, pages 22 to 24, by inclusion of a new paragraph in substance as follows:

"Administrative Board of Review: There shall be appointed by the President an Administrative Board of Review with power of administrative review as prescribed by the President, to which an advertiser may appeal from an administrative decision that he has violated the act when the advertiser believes such decision to be without legal sanction, before being compelled to face a criminal prosecution upon the basis of such doubtful decision."

PROCESSING TAX ON HOGS

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a letter from Max Matthes, president of the Wilmington Provision Co., of Wilmington, Del., which, with the accompanying copy of a telegram, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILMINGTON PROVISION CO.,
Wilmington, Del., May 7, 1934.

Senator J. G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR TOWNSEND: In regard to the processing tax on hogs. The price of hogs is still going down. Last week good steers sold for $9.50 per hundredweight in Chicago stockyards without the help of the Department. They did not tax steers, but the steers have advanced in price. Hogs are down now to all-time low. Enclosed you will find copy of a telegram where we bought hogs from St. Joseph, Mo., for $2.95. We will pay the Government as much tax as the hogs cost. Why can't this tax be removed and let us pay the farmers more money for their hogs? I have reports from western markets that the farmers are up in arms in regard to this tax. If you have a conversation with any of the western Senators, ask them to explain why steers have advanced so much without the help of the Department, and yet with all the Department has done for the hogs they are still getting lower. Do not answer, as I know you are opposed to the tax.

Very truly yours,

MAX MATTHES, President.

SOUTH ST. JOSEPH, MO., May 4, 1934.

WILMINGTON PROVISION CO.,
Wilmington, Del.:

Can buy double one forties to fifties, cost about two ninety-five.

CORRIGAN SYMON.

NUMBER OF FAMILIES ON RELIEF ROLLS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the statement of the Commerce Department, made today, that the number of families on the relief rolls "is greater than it was a year ago", demonstrates quite clearly that we are "on our way" to Russia.

The Roosevelt experiments are quite in keeping with the Russian experiments. According to S. W. Utley, of Detroit, in the winter of 1933 more than 5,000,000 persons died in Russia of starvation. This, he said, was 60 percent of the number of persons killed in 52 months of the World War.

We went into the World War and killed 8,000,000 persons to make the world safe for democracy. We have come out by destroying democracy in Russia, in Italy, in Austria, and in Germany, and are now threatened with the loss of our own freedom of government. Woodrow Wilson fooled us into the war on the promise of perpetuated freedom. Franklin Roosevelt is attempting to fool us into a dictatorship on the promise of recovery.

Have not all the people been fooled long enough?

I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the statement of the Department of Commerce as it appears in an article in the Washington News of May 9.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MORE FAMILIES ON RELIEF ROLLS NOW THAN 1 YEAR AGO—COMMERCE DEPARTMENT BLAMES DEMOBILIZATION OF C.W.A. AND END OF INDIVIDUAL RESOURCES

Despite continued gains in business activity, the number of families on relief rolls is greater than it was a year ago, the Commerce Department reported today in its monthly survey of current business.

The report blamed "exhaustion of individual resources", together with "demobilization of C.W.A. workers", for a "substantial" increase in the number seeking relief.

However, it was reported that expanding productive activity has been accompanied by an increase in employment and pay rolls, a gain in retail sales, higher foreign-trade totals, and an advance in primary distribution.

MANUFACTURING UP

Manufacturing production increased during March by more than the usual seasonal amount, with the auto industry showing a "pronounced" expansion. Other production increases were reported in iron and steel, lumber, and plate glass. Textile output was slightly increased after allowance for seasonal trends.

The construction industry was reported the "outstanding" exception to the general business gains.

"The seasonally adjusted index of construction has receded to 35 percent of the 1923–25 average, which is 23 points below the index for last December", the report said.

FARM SURPLUSES—ARTICLE BY SAM J. SHELTON

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Sam J. Shelton, of the staff of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, entitled "Is Surplus of Farm Products Due to Overproduction or Underconsumption?" This article is exceedingly interesting and most instructive, not only by reason of the general argument presented but by reason of the mass of facts and figures which have been gathered by the writer. It is a distinct contribution to this vital problem.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, May 6, 1934]

IS SURPLUS OF FARM PRODUCTS DUE TO OVERPRODUCTION OR UNDERCONSUMPTION?—STATISTICS OF PRODUCTION INDICATE THAT, WITH EVERYONE GETTING PROPER NOURISHMENT, THIS COUNTRY ALONE WOULD CONSUME ALMOST ALL FOODSTUFFS RAISED ON AMERICAN FARMS, WHILE THERE WOULD BE ACTUALLY A SHORTAGE OF MILK, DAIRY PRODUCTS, POULTRY, AND EGGS

By Sam J. Shelton, of the Post-Dispatch Staff

Frequent critical references in Congress and elsewhere to the policy of limitation of production—a policy most dramatically brought home to the country in the deliberate destruction of growing crops and livestock—have recently focused attention on this phase of the administration's recovery program.

The policy was designed chiefly to benefit the farmer. It was reasoned prices he was getting for his product were too low, because he was producing too much and the obvious remedy was to reduce production. The thesis of this new-deal policy seemed to be that if this was a "panic of plenty", as it has been described, the cure would be found in creating an artificial scarcity.

The culmination of the policy is found in the compulsory limitation of cotton production by act of Congress and in the various schemes for paying Government bonuses to farmers for reducing acreage of wheat, corn, and other commodities, with threats of further enforced limitation.

Critics have raised the question: Is there too much? Too much food, too much clothing, too much of any useful commodity while millions of American citizens are hungry and inadequately clothed and sheltered? They answer—and Senator BORAH in a recent address stated the proposition very clearly—that the system of distribution is at fault and that if every person in the United States had plenty of good, wholesome food and was comfortably clothed and sheltered, there would not be too much but actually not enough of some of our principal agricultural products.

SCARCITY OF FOOD FOR PROPER SUSTENANCE

An examination of the production statistics of the country, matched against the consumptive needs of a well-sustained population, shows that they are correct; that the country could consume nearly all the wheat it grows; that to produce enough milk for the population 5,000,000,000 more dairy cows would be needed; that there should be an increase of at least 12 percent in number of cattle and hogs slaughtered for meat; that the barnyard hen needs help to produce enough eggs.

The American potato crop in a good year just about balances the needs of a well-fed population; the production of dried beans and peas is far less than standard diet requirements.

The Department of Agriculture, in a publication issued under the present administration, said:

"Among foods which are consumed in far less than desirable amounts, milk, certain fruits, and many of the leafy vegetables stand out prominently. The consumption of milk per capita indicated in the adequate diet at moderate cost and the liberal diet is nearly twice the present consumption, while from the standpoint of health the use of certain fruits and vegetables should be increased several fold."

The same Department of Agriculture publication, issued last November, lists the average quantities of important food articles required annually per capita for the population of the United States, on four standards of diet: (1) Restricted diet for emergency use; (2) adequate diet at minimum cost; (3) adequate diet at moderate cost, and (4) liberal diet. The composition of these four diets except the emergency diet, is shown in a box elsewhere. The emergency diet cannot be considered as adequate.

MILK SUPPLY DEFICIENT FOR PROPER CONSUMPTION

The minimum cost adequate diet requires 260 quarts of milk per capita annually, and the moderate cost and liberal diets 305 quarts annually.

Production of milk in 1932 was 11,744,000,000 gallons.

The amount used up for manufacturing butter and cheeses was 4,520,813,000 gallons; for making butter on farms and for feeding to calves, 1,667,674,000; total of 6,188,487,000 gallons not available for human consumption as milk.

The remainder, 5,555,513,000 gallons, is the amount available for consumption in fluid form, in condensed form, in food preparation, and as ice cream.

The population, 124,800,000 (Census Bureau estimate as of 1932), requires 8,112,000,000 gallons a year on the minimum adequate diet and 9,516,000,000 gallons on the moderate cost and liberal diets.

MAN'S ANNUAL NEEDS FOR NOURISHMENT

Average per capita consumption annually of important food products necessary to sustain the population on a well-nourished, healthy basis is listed in a bulletin published last November by the Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Home Economics. It is based on varied diets, ranging in terms of cost from one to meet emergency to one of liberal cost.

The three diets, which are described as adequate (not including the emergency ration) are as follows:

Item	Annual requirements
	Adequate diet at minimum cost	Adequate diet at moderate cost	Liberal diet
Flour, cereals ..... pounds	224	160	100
Milk ..... quarts	260	305	305
Potatoes ..... pounds	165	165	155
Dried beans, peas, nuts ..... do	30	20	7
Tomatoes, citrus fruits ..... do	50	90	110
Vegetables (leafy) ..... do	80	100	135
Dried fruits ..... do	20	25	20
Other vegetables, fruits ..... do	85	210	325
Fats, including butter, bacon ..... do	49	52	52
Sugars ..... do	35	60	60
Lean meat, poultry, fish ..... do	60	100	165
Eggs	180	180	360

NOTE.—In the accompanying article, these diets are used for comparing potential consumption of a well-fed population with production of certain important food items.

The situation as to milk supply for human food may be summarized as follows:

	Minimum diet	Moderate and liberal diet
	Gallons	Gallons
Required	8,112,000,000	9,516,000,000
Available	5,555,513,000	5,555,513,000
Deficiency	2,556,487,000	3,960,487,000

Average production per milk cow in 1932 (Department of Agriculture) was 501 gallons. To make up the deficiency under the mimimum-cost diet would require 5,102,000 additional milk cows; under the moderate-cost and liberal diets, 7,905,000 more. In the one case it is an increase of 22 percent and in the other 34 percent over the number of milk cows in the country (23,000,000) estimated by the Department of Agriculture as of 1932.

So large an increase in cows and milk production would, of course, call for an increase in production of feed—hay and grains—and for additional employment.

In a recent statement protesting against the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's plan to curtail milk production, M. D. Munn, president of the National Dairy Council, said there is potential consumptive market for approximately 50 percent more dairy products, including butter and cheese, than is now being produced. So large a market, which presumably would be available if all persons could be fed on a desirable standard, would mean an increase of 11,000,000 or 12,000,000 cows.

WHAT THE POPULATION SHOULD CONSUME IN WHEAT

Applied to wheat—one of the great export crops of the United States—the yardstick of minimum-cost adequate diet indicates home consumption should be increased by about 85,000,000 bushels a year, which would go a long way toward wiping out surpluses even with exports at the present low point.

The minimum-cost adequate diet calls for 224 pounds of flour and cereals per capita annually. About 166 pounds of this should be in the form of wheat flour (156.8 pounds) and other wheat products. This calls for approximately 500,000,000 bushels of wheat a year.

Other domestic uses of wheat are for seed, average about 82,500,000 bushels, and feed for livestock, from 50,000,000 to 160,000,000 bushels in recent years. Assuming an average use of 100,000,000 bushels a year for feeding livestock, the domestic consumption of wheat on a minimum adequate-diet basis should be about as follows:

	Bushels
Human food	500,000,000
Feeding livestock	100,000,000
Seed	82,500,000
Total required	682,500,000
Average production last 4 years	753,000,000
Surplus for export	70,500,000

Production in 1933, however, was only 527,413,000 bushels and in 1932, 726,831,000 bushels. Domestic consumption in recent years has averaged about 597,000,000 bushels, or 85,000,000 less than the total requirements in the foregoing table.

Exports for the 5 years, 1927 to 1931, averaged 174,000,000 bushels a year; 1922 to 1926, 207,000,000 bushels; 1917 to 1921 241,000,000 bushels.

FOREIGN NATIONS EAT MORE GRAIN THAN AMERICA

The Government's moderate cost and liberal diets reduce the amount of flour and cereals per capita to 160 and 100 pounds, respectively, which, of course, would materially reduce the amount of wheat required for human food. Both diets, however, require much larger amounts of milk and meats than in the minimum diet and undoubtedly would call for greater quantity of wheat for feeding livestock.

Per capita consumption of wheat in the United States is low as compared with leading European countries. France leads with an average of 7.5 bushels; then Belgium, 6.7 bushels; Italy, 6.6, and Great Britain and Ireland, 5.7. The United States average for 1932, which is the so-called "disappearance" of wheat for food, feed, and waste, but not including seed, is 4.8 bushels. Disappearance here at the same rate as in France would require 936,000,000 bushels a year, and seed requirements would bring the total to more than 1,000,000,000 bushels, equaling our largest crops.

Potatoes are a stand-by of the American diet. The Department of Agriculture gives the per capita requirement as 165 pounds a year for both the minimum and moderate cost adequate diets. This includes sweetpotatoes and means that at least 343,200,000 bushels should be consumed for food. About 29,000,000 bushels are required for seed, and there is large waste in the potato crop due to rotting after harvesting. A reliable estimate of the amount of waste is not available.

Production in 1932 was 356,000,000 bushels of Irish potatoes and 78,000,000 bushels, an unusually large crop, of sweetpotatoes, a total of 434,000,000 bushels. The apparent surplus was 64,000,000 bushels before allowing for the uncertain quantity of waste.

EGG A DAY WOULD EXHAUST THE SUPPLY

If every American demanded an egg for his daily breakfast there would not be enough to go around. Our flock of laying hens would have to be increased 40 percent. Egg production in 1932 was 32,000,000,000 and an egg a day for breakfast for the whole population would require 45,000,000,000. The liberal diet prescribed by the Department of Agriculture requires practically an egg a day, 360 per capita a year. In the minimum and moderate cost diets, however, this is reduced to 180 per capita and the nutritive elements supplied otherwise. At the lower figure the annual requirement of eggs for food is 22,400,000,000, and it is obvious that after allowing for eggs for hatching and for other commercial uses there would be little if any surplus.

If the population had the means to afford the Department of Agriculture's liberal diet, the per capita allowance of lean meat would be 165 pounds. In the moderate-cost diet this is reduced to 100 pounds and in the minimum diet to 60 pounds. It includes, in the liberal diet, 56 pounds of beef, 65 pounds of pork, 18 pounds of poultry, 13 pounds of fish, 8 pounds of veal, and 5 pounds of lamb and mutton. In addition, an allowance of 2 pounds of bacon and salt pork is made.

The diet allowances are in terms of retail cuts, making difficult a comparison with figures on slaughter of meat animals, given in gross carcass weights. Figures of the Department of Agriculture, however, show a material decline in per capita consumption of meats in recent years. The average for beef, pork, veal, lamb, and mutton, for 1923 was 149 pounds, but for 1931 it decreased to 133.2 pounds.

To go back to the consumption of 1923 would require an increase of 12 percent in the number of meat animals slaughtered, which means 1,400,000 more beef cattle, 960,000 more calves, and 8,400,000 more hogs. In the Government's first hog-reduction program last year approximately 5,000,000 animals were purchased and killed and many of the carcasses destroyed. Hog products, particularly lard, have been one of our largest exports.

Dried beans, peas, and nuts are recognized by the Department of Agriculture as an important food item. The annual allowance is 20 pounds per capita in the moderate-cost diet and 30 pounds in the minimum-cost diet. In the liberal diet it is only 7 pounds, assuming that larger quantities of meat and other foods will be used. This food item includes dried peas and peanuts as well as dried beans.

The production in 1932 was 2,000,000,000 pounds. At 20 pounds per capita the annual requirement is 2,500,000,000 pounds and at 30 pounds per capita it is 3,700,000,000 pounds. In either case there is a large deficiency in production.

In a speech vigorously condemning restriction of production, United States Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH recently gave an estimate that 40,000,000 persons in the United States, or nearly one third of the population, are living below the poverty line, and a far greater proportion of the world's total population is in that state.

"Our able Secretary of State", he said, "has recently declared that 80 percent of the world's population of 2,000,000,000 persons are today living below the poverty line. Stated in another way, 1,600,000,000 people are living in poverty—a startling, a menacing, but, unfortunately, a true statement. Does not this present the problem of distribution rather than overproduction?

"SENATOR BORAH'S SUMMARY OF THE FARM QUESTION

"In our own country there are no less than 40,000,000 people living below the poverty line. Shall we destroy food and the stuff of which clothes are made until we have taken care of our 40,000,000? And shall the world engage in such a program with 1,600,000,000 living on the verge of destitution? Is it sound to say there are millions and millions of people in our country and in the world in want of food and ill-clad, so let's destroy food, let's destroy the stuff of which clothes are made?

"Our task is not that of destruction but of distribution. Even in normal times we had in this country over 75,000,000 people living on an income of less than $600 a year. Like creeping paralysis this fall of purchasing power has long indicated an economic cataclysm. The average workman with his family of five in normal times must live on an income of $1,200 to $1,800 a year. There are 1,000,000 children in the United States out of school because of want of food and clothing.

"I repeat, there is no overproduction unless you are going on the theory that a large portion of the people of the world and in our own country are to go through life under the circumstances of cruel privation."

Senator BORAH declared that crop reduction of 43,000,000 acres, as planned by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, would take 3,250,000 persons off the farms.

"The plan will inevitably give us more idle and dependent people, more people to feed and clothe," he said. This was borne out a few days ago by the statement of Relief Administrator Hopkins that the cotton reduction plan in the South is constantly putting more families on the dole.

Restoration of purchasing power is the answer to the crop reduction plans, Senator BORAH said, adding: "If our millions were eating and being clothed in accord with their actual wants, of good healthy citizens, there would be no occasion for such a policy."

REPUBLICAN ATTITUDE ON RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS BILL

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a news item from the New York Times of May 9 referring to proposals by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] relating to the reciprocal tariff agreements bill, which is now pending before the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 9, 1934]

REPUBLICANS PLAN TARIFF BILL FIGHT—SENATORS TALK OF LIMITING ROOSEVELT'S TRADE BARGAINING TO FREE LIST—MEETING TAKES NO STAND—HEARS PROPOSALS BY BARBOUR AND VANDENBERG ON CONFINING THE PRESIDENT'S POWERS

WASHINGTON, May 8.—A conference of Republican Senators, which was called today to plan party strategy in the coming fight over President Roosevelt's reciprocal tariff bill, confined itself largely to discussing two Senators' proposals to limit the Executive to agreements centering about the free list.

These Senators, VANDENBERG and BARBOUR, did not recommend the proposals they submitted, but contended that if a system of reciprocal trading were to be set up, it should be based upon trade favors already enjoyed by foreign countries with the United States.

Under their suggestion the President would be confined in his proposed new authority to taking articles off the free list or putting them back on and to increasing tariffs or leaving them where they were.

The conference took no stand on the Vandenberg-Barbour suggestions, but merely discussed them as one of the means suggested for restricting the President's authority under the tariff bill, which the party leaders concede will become law.

STATEMENT OF THE PLAN

Senators VANDENBERG and BARBOUR, in a statement after the conference, outlined their suggested plan as follows:

"For purposes only of discussion, we submitted to the Republican conference this morning the idea that if there are to be tariff bargains undertaken by the President, they should first be based upon the existing trade favors which foreign countries already enjoy in the United States.

"In other words, if we are to abandon our existing protective system, which recognizes the difference in cost of production at home and abroad, and enter the dubious field of international barter, we should charge the Old World for its existing American privileges before we ever contemplate the reduction of any protective duties which are necessary to protect American industry and agriculture.

"Under the administration proposal, the President cannot transfer articles from the free list to the dutiable list. Yet the free list brings us $906,000,000 of imports, while the dutiable list only brings us $529,000,000 of imports.

"We raise the question that if tariff bargains are to be undertaken at all—which we oppose—it is far more logical to ask for reciprocal advantages in return for a continuation of this enormous free-list trade than to deal only in the extension of new and additional trade advantages in the United States at the expense of some protected American commodity.

WOULD SEEK TRADE ADVANTAGES

"It is far more logical to contemplate agreements which would bring us new export privileges in return for the continuing maintenance of existing free-list privileges or existing tariff rates than it is to think only in terms of offering aliens new and additional privileges in the American market.

"Many of these Old World countries owe us enormous war debts which they are making no serious effort to liquidate. In addition, they already enjoy the privileges of selling $1,430,000,000 of their goods in our American market.

"It occurs to us that these existing privileges and advantages should be the basis of negotiations for additional American export advantages rather than to talk only of new and additional privileges, if they are to bargain at all.

"Therefore, we have suggested, for discussion only, the question whether the President's tariff bargaining power, if granted at all, should not be confined to authority to (1) take articles off the free list or agree to leave them on the free list and (2) increase tariffs or agree to leave them where they are.

"We do not recommend any such system. It has its obvious and notorious faults. Republican policy never has and never will approve tariffs on raw materials traditionally on the free list.

"We simply illustrate by this discussion in the Republican conference, first, the inequity of the particular tariff-bargaining program which the administration appears to have in mind and, second, the utter hazards in any attempt at bargaining power at all."

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES HUGHES

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. James Hughes before the conference of American Foundry Supplymen's Association at Pittsburgh, Pa., April 17, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It was granted to us as Americans of this day and generation to be part of and party to a development and expansion of national industry, commerce, and agriculture which reached peaks never before attained by a nation or a people in the history of time and civilization; and, after having gained that position of preeminence in world affairs, we were put to the trying experience of seeing it collapse, as a house of cards, before an onrushing tidal wave of world depression which leveled the highest peaks to the lowest levels within the memory of any living man. The rush of the swift current brought with it destruction and disaster and threatened to carry away the most permanent institutions of our society and Government.

No picture is needed to recall to mind the chaos of little more than 1 year ago. A financial structure that had stood through 150 years of national building—war, peace, depression, and prosperity—had crumbled into an absolute state of collapse. Faith in banks and bankers crumbled with it. Agriculture, the basic industry of the country, was struggling under a crushing burden of debt and tax; its markets demoralized; its commodities selling at prices far below the actual cost of production. Thousands of farms were abandoned, their owners standing in the city bread lines, seeking the shelter of charity. In many quarters their despair was translated into open revolt. The fires of industry had been washed out. Workers who had not been turned away were subject to tremendous reductions in wage. Fourteen million workers, skilled and unskilled, were without means of providing their families with the barest necessities of life. Thousands walked the streets and highways. Public and private charity was keeping alive the fires of life in millions of our people. Of those who had work opportunity, the great majority were subject to salary and wage reductions up to 40 percent. One year ago the whisper of discontent from this direction had grown to a rumble of rebellion. America stood at the crossroads.

The national election of 1932 placed the reins of leadership in the hands of Franklin D. Roosevelt at the moment when the crisis was reached, and in accepting them he directed a message to the people of the Nation that will ever remain one of the truly great documents in our Nation's history. He pointed to the state of the Nation with words that were unmistakable and clearly understandable, and at once set to the task of restoration. His plan unfolded rapidly. His spirit and enthusiasm spread like a grass fire over the whole country. In 10 short days a spirit of national faith and confidence was beginning to rise up from the depths of despair to which 4 long years of hard times had carried it.

Plans for knitting together the loose ends of industry, agriculture, finance, and commerce moved rapidly. The bank moratorium extended to the financial leadership full opportunity to reestablish and stabilize the credit structure. The wisdom of that move, after a 12-month period, is contained in a recent statement by Francis Law, financial expert and president of the American Bankers Association. The occasion was the first anniversary of the moratorium:

"The banking structure of the country is strong and liquid. Banks have never been better. Conditions have improved to the point where it is no longer necessary to be superliquid."

This authority speaks with knowledge and understanding, and daily, increasing deposits, over the whole country, bear out the truth of his statement.

Agriculture, which had long suffered and endured, finds new hope in the marked improvement of commodity markets. It is sufficient to say that the value of American farm products has jumped up $1,500,000,000 in the last year. It is to be appreciated, too, that an understanding and sympathetic leadership has served the farmer with the means of saving his property from foreclosure. In these and other facts, the farmer finds justification for his hope that the future will bring that profit to the farm which is so necessary to the general economic welfare of the Nation and its people.

You men associated with the iron and steel industry feel, too, that recovery is at hand. Your industries are making daily gains on wide fronts. Every survey reveals that the business of the Nation is vigorously moving forward. These gains are noted in production, sales, prices, employment, and pay rolls.

The National Recovery Act has served for 12 months. At the hour of its introduction to American business chaos reigned. The records of a year ago show all-time lows. What little business activity there was to be noted was fast lapsing into stagnation. Profit was a consideration long since surrendered, and the dominating thought of all was only to survive; the struggle to survive had brought a practice of destructive competition which had the competitors at each other's throats. The leadership of industry was bewildered and confused, and while the screws of competition were turned ever tighter ugly abuses of labor and capital grew by leaps and bounds. The sweatshop practice had invaded every major industry and minor industry in every section of every State in the Union. Workers were submitted to unbelievably low wages and intolerable working conditions in many cases, and in most instances the hours were long. The worker was not only threatened by serfdom and wage slavery, but he was subject to it. Sweatshop practices involved the youth and the womanhood of the land, exhausted their strength, limited their opportunity, and brought to reality social conditions which this twentieth century of civilization had thought passed with the later days of Old World serfdom. That was not sweated labor's only evil. Those leaders of industry who attempted to maintain high levels of wage and decent conditions for working men were faced with choosing between the sweatshop and bankruptcy. Competition—vicious, almost barbarous—was forcing a choice between business profit and moral decency. N.R.A. called for recognition of the fact that if the unholy systems of sweated labor and child labor are to exist the higher standards of American labor are doomed to destruction, and American industry in competition with those forces may as well stop the wheels and close the doors today as to suffer through the pain of slow but certain stagnation.

Such conditions were staggering industrial America when the President laid down his plans for national industrial recovery. It proposed an association of the strong arm of government with business and commerce—to associate government in a partnership not for profit or gain but for regulated control and restraint, planned for the greatest service and good to the greatest number. It sought to eliminate from industry the curse of destructive competition, and to write a code of ethics and fair practice that would outlaw vicious competitive practices and extend to American business full opportunity to police and control its affairs in keeping with a spirit of national welfare and security. N.R.A. establishes maximum hours of work to spread employment to greater numbers and fixes the minimum wage. That is commonplace recognition of the absurd contrast between overproduction, or overequipment to produce, almost every necessity and luxury of life and the fact that many persons have been in want. It seeks, in effect, to create spending power among those whose power to spend is essential to the markets for products of industry and farm. The provision for maximum hours and minimum wage is a double-edged sword that strikes at and destroys the sweatshop, child labor, and their related evils.

The plan for national industrial recovery presents a problem, but its proper execution leads only to normal prosperity for all. The task is a challenge to the best efforts of all leaderships, putting on them a responsibility and a duty to work out this solution with vision, wisdom, and courage. It can be obtained only by unselfish and energetic effort. Success must be the first concern of all. The teachings of the last few years have erased the question of whether profits are to be considered before human welfare.

I am convinced that in the ability and vision of management, and the skill and energy of the worker, we will find leadership that will work out a permanent solution of our problem. I am strongly of the opinion that the marked advances in business conditions in the last year justify our faith in this plan. The first quarter of this year shows a striking increase in sales, production, profits, and pay rolls. Private industry has absorbed in excess of 3,000,000 of the unemployed. Public employment has brought that figure to 8,000,000. The purchasing and spending power of the Nation has increased 25 percent, jumping from a low of $41,760,000,000 to $52,157,000,000. This upward trend is registered throughout all of the producing groups of the Nation and in all sections and all States. More important than that, faith and confidence in men and in government has reached war-time proportions. It is justified by this indisputable evidence of national recovery, and it is the result of strong leadership and a spirit of good will and cooperation among all the people. It is a time for high faith and earnest effort. There is no place in this scheme of things for the defeatist or the fault-finder. This is no time for the politician or the partisan. It still is a time of emergency and ours is the duty and responsibility of forgetting material and selfish things and working and serving only with the single thought that America be made strong and healthy, economically and socially.

It has been my thought, and it is my practice and purpose, as a Member of the United States Congress, to support and fortify the efforts of our great President to keep the pledge and the promise he has made to restore America to normal prosperity, peace, and happiness. That I know as my duty and obligation, and under Roosevelt's leadership I feel that we are marching from the valley of despair and despondency back to the high road of national welfare and security. It is with these thoughts in mind that I commend to you the most careful consideration of another thought: Under the brave and courageous leadership of a great man we have succeeded in recapturing more than a small degree of what great things have been essentially American—we are on firm ground, and we are beginning to feel a return of strength. Let us not lose sight of the fact that continued support and cooperation of the recovery plan is essential to permanent security. We have come a long way, but a long way to go still is ahead. I make this appeal not as a partisan or with a thought of partisan victory or power but as an American who holds it his first duty to provide for the general welfare of America and all her people.

APPORTIONMENT OF COTTON IN ARIZONA

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of Agriculture relative to the apportionment of cotton exempt from tax in Arizona.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
May 8, 1934.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your letter of May 7 and have read the legal opinion by Mr. Francis M. Shea of the office of the general counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

I wholly disagree with his interpretation that the Bankhead Act of April 21, 1934, excludes long-staple cotton in making the computations under section 5 (a).

The terms of that act are so clear that, as stated in my letter to you of April 28, I must insist that you have no choice but to apportion to the State of Arizona 87,000 bales of tax-exempt cotton as originally announced by your Department. In my opinion, this decision should be favorable to Arizona, and you should make the decision yourself, thus ending the delay which is now seriously embarrassing those in my State whom the season requires shall know just what they may do.

The facts are, first, the cotton farmers of Arizona relied upon the announcement that they could plant 87,000 bales of tax-exempt cotton; and second, it is now proposed to take 14,000 bales away from that allotment.

The 14,000 bales amount to so little when viewed as a part of a 10,000,000-bale crop that no one can say that the major object which the Bankhead Act seeks to accomplish will be affected.

But 14,000 bales is a 16-percent reduction in addition to the normal reduction in Arizona cotton production required by the act.

Such a drastic cut not only means disaster to individual farmers who have paid out their money for water to wet their lands prior to planting but also will seriously affect the revenues of irrigation districts which cannot collect water charges from idle lands.

Three months ago, I would have said that your offer to ask for an opinion from the Attorney General was proper because I have every confidence that any opinion which he would ultimately write would be favorable to Arizona. Now I hope you will not find it necessary to follow that course. It has taken nearly 2 weeks for the office of the general counsel to write an opinion. This matter must be decided at once; the situation does not admit of delay, as it will be too late to plant long-staple cotton in Arizona this year.

I therefore urge you immediately to resolve whatever doubts you may have, in favor of the Arizona cotton growers so that the suspense may be ended.

With high regard,

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

CONSUMER INTERESTS IN THE N.R.A.—ADDRESS BY FRANK P. GRAHAM

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Dr. Frank P.

Graham, vice chairman of the consumers' advisory board and president of the University of North Carolina, to the assembly of code authorities, Washington, March 5, 1934, on the subject of consumer interests in the N.R.A. In my judgment, it is a very valuable address.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN ANALYSIS OF THE POSITION AND VALUES OF THE CONSUMER INTERESTS IN THE N.R.A. AND IN OUR SOCIETY AS NECESSARY TO THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL BALANCE OF AMERICA AND THE WORLD

In another critical period in our history delegates from the original American States, assembled in Philadelphia, for their work of political-code revision. They came as representatives of the geographical groups who founded democratic government on this continent, revised, and saved in a dark time the political structure of the United States. The stakes of their work were the security and fortunes of over 3,000,000 of people. Today representatives of industrial and trade groups involving the industrial and commercial life of 120,000,000 of people meet in Constitution Hall, Washington, for their work of industrial-code revision. They have had, and still have, the responsibility of restoring work to the unemployed, spreading real purchasing power among all people, reviving industry, and helping to save democratic government in the modern world.

INDUSTRIAL BALANCE ONLY THROUGH RECOGNITION OF BUSINESS MANAGEMENT, LABOR, AND CONSUMER INTEREST

Within the controlling constitutional framework of our political government is rising the structure of a more balanced industrial self-government with its possibilities of increasing recognition of the workers and consumers. Our political government achieved balance by a recognition of the three departments functionally necessary to democratic government. Our industrial government can achieve the necessary balance and security only by a fair recognition of the rights and values of the three groups of interests, functionally necessary to industry, namely, capital, the workers, and the consumers. To see the place of the consumer we must see the place and function of all three in the whole structure of industry.

THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MEN

The management of business men and the functions of capitalism are recognized in the National Recovery Act and in the structure of this assembly. As a decisive factor in the overthrow of feudalism and in the liberation of the individual, land, labor, industry, and commerce from the local control of the lords of the land, capitalism is historically recognized as one of the main pivots in the transition from the medieval to the modern world. These liberated individuals of the rising middle class moved from victory to victory in ideas, church, state, commerce, and industry. With initiative, inventive genius, and far-flung enterprise they developed industry on a scale which required gigantic corporations for gigantic national and international trade. These corporations gathered the savings of the people anywhere to meet, in a world-wide service, the wants of people everywhere. Geared to vast reservoirs of capital and to steam, electric, and gas-power engines, they have flung around the earth a mechanical framework, which, with all its economic weaknesses and social strains, still holds up the structure of the modern world. The purpose of the N.R.A., conceived with social imagination and carried forward with relentless energy and courage, is nothing less than to prevent this stupendous but tottering structure from crashing down upon mankind. It is an effort to work out some sort of economic and social control of the mechanisms and forces haphazardly let loose upon the earth with their power to destroy or rebuild our civilization.

The National Industrial Recovery Act does not pretend to take industry away from business men but gives the associations of business men the chance to revive American industry under public control. Thus it is that trade associations have the privilege of submitting codes of fair competition. This privilege and opportunity carry with them a high moral and social responsibility, which should be shared with the representatives of the workers, who invest their lives, and the consumers, who provide the broad base of purchasing power upon which the whole structure stands or falls.

THE POSITION OF THE WORKERS

The position and function of laborers as basic producers and as human beings with spiritual claims above machines and profits, are recognized more and more with the growth of the labor organizations. The labor movement is largely responsible for the founding of our public schools and for much enlightened social legislation; is the dynamic of modern democracy; and, through collective bargaining, is a check upon the potential autocracy of the giant industrial corporation. Section 7 (a) of the act guarantees labor's right of collective bargaining through the representatives of the workers' own choosing. Millions of American working people, formerly without work or threatened with a loss of work, have a growing sense of their right to a representative participation in making the terms under which they live, work, and hope for a better day. Woe be the day of the return of the haphazard economic policies, social drift, and national breakdown, which would send them out into the bread lines of despair and dash to the ground their new aspirations, and their children's hopes in this Republic. In the event of the return of that day, the place and power of the working people will be not only recognized but may tragically be felt in ways as desperate as the times.

THE POSITION OF THE CONSUMERS' INTERESTS

By the momentum of history, by reason of organization and by the provisions of the act of Congress the position of the trade associations and labor organizations are recognized. The position of the consumers is not defined in the act. The place of the consumer as expressing a particular interest of the many interests of human beings is still in the making. In the administrative set-up of the N.R.A. the consumer for the first time in our history is even partially recognized as one of the groups of interests with a basic stake in industry.

This long failure of recognition is the natural result of the fact that consumers live in a society long dominated by producers and the economics of production. For consumers only a beginning has been made. The scattered cooperative societies of consumers; the Consumers' League expressing the consumers' conscience against human degradation by ruthless competitive production; consumer studies by women's organizations; the Department of Agriculture's extension service in rural homes, and the United States Bureau of Home Economics; the American Home Economics Association; the American Standards Association and its publications; Consumers' Research by a voluntary group of economists and publicists; the emergency conference of consumer organizations; the consumers' national conference; a few pioneer courses in the economics of consumption; the statement in behalf of the establishment of a consumer standards board by the Lynd committee of the advisory board; the division of which Mr. Paul Douglas is chief, for the economic education of consumers through consumers' councils in all the States as proposed and staunchly championed by the chairman of the advisory board; the consumers' council of the A.A.A., and the Consumers' Guide; and last, the advisory board and resident staff, with its sections of women's interests, complaints, fair price, standards, research and recommendations, and consumer organizations and education—all these and cooperating agencies are working toward the development of information, standards, and techniques as the basis for consumer consciousness, intelligence, and action.

UNORGANIZED CONSUMERS IN A WORLD OF ORGANIZED PRODUCERS

Yet all these combined have not changed the fundamental fact that consumers in general are unorganized and uninformed in a society of strongly organized and highly technical producers. The inequality of the positions of producer and consumer interests, by reason of historic developments, legal sanctions, organization, and information places upon the code authorities an economic, social, and ethical responsibility. Let us make clear this inequality of position of consumer interests in a world of corporations, trade associations, federations of labor, and departments of government and bureaus expressing the needs and interests of producers. Producers over a long period have been organized by particular trades and industries, can mobilize quickly and focus on the interest of a particular industry. Consumers are scattered here and there over the far reaches of the continent and their interests are diffused over a wide range of goods upon each one of which is concentrated the interest and power of a producer or combination of producers.

Furthermore, in every town or county there are local chambers of commerce and labor unions. In the States are State trade associations and federations of labor. In the Nation are national trade associations and national federations of organizations of labor. It is not so of the consumers in the localities or the States or the Nation. Departments of government represent the organized predominance of the producer interests. In all the States are departments of agriculture and labor, and in the Federal Government are Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, but there is no department of consumption in the States or Nation. There is a Bureau of Standards for manufacturers but no bureau of standards for consumers. The producers have complete information about the product sold and the consumers often have little or no information about the product bought. In addition to all this, the interests of the general body of consumers are mixed by the fact that consumers are, for example, also laborers and investors. Their organized interests as producers of a particular product are more controlling than their interests as consumers and are likely to be more powerful than the unorganized power of all consumers.

FAILURE OF FREE COMPETITION TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

But it has been suggested that the trade associations do not need to worry about the interests of the consumers. The free competition of producers, it is said, will automatically protect the consumers. It is not necessary to emphasize the fact that unrestrained competition and rugged individualism, valuable and heroic in pioneer days, is unadapted to the life of an industrialized society of great corporations. You know what some of these powerful corporations did with and to competitive freedom, and what corporate industrialism and financial power recently did and can do to the freedom and lives of human beings.

As the consumer recently looked about in his world of competing producers, he, and more generally she, found little social protection against unscrupulous competitors. They found themselves uninformed against shoddy, harmful, and even degrading products; high quality prices for low quality goods, artificial freight charges, padded costs, overcapitalization, tributes to monopoly and privilege, inefficiency, waste, misrepresentation and an organized manipulation of his desires and tastes wherever his eyes looked or his ears listened in this world where still live some unscrupulous competitors, false advertisers, and high-pressure salesmen. Recently he saw despair on the farms, long lines of panic at bank windows, and longer and longer lines of hunger stalking the city streets. It was forced in upon him that the competition of producers does not automatically protect producers or consumers from either inferior goods or an inferior life.

CODES OF FAIR COMPETITION SHOULD NOT FAIL TO RECOGNIZE CONSUMER INTERESTS

The talk of free competition, in either the old competitive society or in the later industrialized and more corporate society, protecting the consumer leaves the people cold. They turned away from that talk in a dark time to the N.R.A. with its proposals, not for the free competition dominated and degraded by the unrepresentative and unscrupulous chiselers, but with its proposals for fair competition based on minimum wages and maximum hours as the bottom conditions of a decent life to which the fair-minded business men can subscribe without having their throats cut. But the codes of fair competition must be revised against the possibility of any trade association betraying the N.R.A. by a more powerful manipulation of the unorganized consumers in the interests of the organized producers. With the new powers given the trade associations under the N.R.A., the consumers now look to the code authorities in their work of revision and relief.

With this assembly called by the national administrator as a part of his honest and open courage in a high public service, N.R.A. enters into its second significant phase. As it moves logically forward from emergency code making to thoughtful code revision, the economic position and social values of the consumer must be more definitely and clearly recognized by those who make, revise, and supervise codes. In the crusade to put millions of human beings back to work we must not forget that excessive prices cut the heart out of wages and purchasing power; and that the failure of purchasing power slows down investments, industry, and trade.

If dividends fail, investments drop and industry suffers. If wages are cut, consumer purchasing power is cut and business lags. But also, mark you, men and women of the code authorities, if prices outrun wages, if the prices are out of proportion to necessary economic and fair social costs, then these excessive prices nullify increased purchasing power, undermine the recovery program, and may again start the depression on a more cruel and vicious spiral downward, cutting more and more deeply into wages, dividends, purchasing power, and the daily lives of millions of human beings. The lowest economic prices increase real purchasing power, widen the market, multiply turn-over, and decrease costs with returns to capital, labor, and the consumer.

The consumers are, excepting the consumer slacker, willing to pay the costs for the abolition of child labor and sweatshops, for shorter hours, decent wages, a fair return on capital, and other necessary economic and social costs. The consumers are everlastingly unwilling to pay for excessive profits based on padded costs and dishonest prices wearing a social cloak over their economic hypocrisy. The consumers, workers, the investors, and the managers must stand together against the financial profiteers, labor racketeers, and consumer slackers. We must not, however, confuse a chiseler with an honest business man who without unfair practice or violation of the code refuses to be intimidated by any combine or collusion to charge above what he has found in his concern to be an economically fair price. We must all stand together against the chiseler who would try to make of N.R.A. a game of greed and grab. We will stand with those who would make of N.R.A. a great experiment for the economic recovery and the social advance of a stricken but dauntless people.

CONSUMER REPRESENTATION ON CODE AUTHORITIES

To this end business men, workers, and consumers more and more can play the game together. Labor representatives need to emphasize to business men the relation of wages to purchasing power. Consumer representatives need to emphasize to business men the relation of purchasing power to commerce and industry and that prices are making excessive inroads on that purchasing power on which hangs much of the story of the N.R.A. Business representatives need to emphasize to labor the relation of efficiency to costs, and to consumers the part that higher wages and shorter hours play in costs. The code authority is one logical center for such a cooperative interchange of views and interest. The value of such an interchange would reach back from the code authority to the trade association, the labor organization, the consumers, and the public. Competent consumer and labor representatives should not only be advisers to the public representative but should, for all matters affecting their interests, be on the code authority. The business man needs the consumer and labor representatives as allies against the unfair practices of unscrupulous competitors. The workers need the moral weight of the alliance of the fair-minded business men and consumer representative in behalf of fair wages and conditions of work. The consumers need the consumer representative at strategic points to particularize the general demand that decent wages and real purchasing power shall not be unjustly cut down by inferior goods and indecent prices. The public needs the consumer representative to be on guard against any possible combination of capital and labor to hold up the public. Industry and the public need the labor and consumer representatives to give the workers, who make the goods, and the consumers, who pay the bills, some voice with the trade association which control the industry. All need the labor and consumer points of view for a more balanced industry.

CONSUMER STUDIES FOR CODE REVISION

This assembly of code authorities, following a week of forthright criticisms and suggestions, is a significant event in the recovery program. The winds of criticism which have strongly blown in upon the N.R.A. will help, we trust, to clean out many wrongs, defects, and abuses and to bring in constructive improvement all along the line.

For the present work of code revision the Consumers' Advisory Board, of which Mrs. Mary H. Rumsey is chairman, and Mr. Dexter N. Keezer is Director and chief of staff, presents a number of consumer propositions for the consideration of the code authorities. By force of circumstances, I can speak with detachment of the work of the Advisory Board and the resident staff who have drawn much of their inspiration from the chairman of the Board. They knew that their work would be misunderstood, sometimes by labor representatives, often by business representatives, and all the time by the consumers in whose interests the staff members tirelessly and ably directed by Mr. Keezer worked long hours at small pay through days and nights of unrelieved public devotion.

The Consumers' Advisory Board, overnight in the midst of the great push to get people back to work, found back of them no organization of consumers with trained staff, information, and technics such as organized labor and more especially organized business had in all fields for the code making that was at hand. It takes time to develop information, technics, and a competent staff. An inquiry made for the Board indicated that there were 100,000 important commodities and that the Tariff Commission considered $25,000 as the cost of a study of the price of one commodity. With a modest budget, a limited personnel, and no pretensions, the Director, with the enthusiastic backing of the chairman and the Board, plunged into work in the wide and almost unoccupied fields of consumer interests, whether the consumers be housewives, grocery stores, wholesalers, factories, farmers, coal operators, oil producers, or what not in the wide range of consumer interests.

Meantime, codes were coming by scores and hundreds. Here came, for example, the oil code, reaching into almost every American home, and with it came the question, who knows about oil and at the same time would represent the consumer and public point of view? The chairman and director called upon Prof. George Stocking, of the University of Texas, who knows his oil. Day and night he worked to catch up with the job and emerged with studies and figures which showed that a price-fixing schedule proposed under the code would raise the annual consumer bill about a billion dollars more than the bill would have been had the spring prices continued to prevail while the wages had been increased not more than $100,000,000. That price-fixing schedule was abandoned with the backing of an important part of the industry.

On the basis of such studies and the experiences of the last 6 months, the Consumers' Advisory Board has presented for your consideration a summary statement prepared by Mr. Keezer, Mr. Corwin Edwards, and the Board as suggestions for the work of code revision. The new powers of the trade associations, the rise of prices out of proportion to wages, and the threat to real purchasing power make necessary in your present work of code revision a reconsideration of any provisions or factors which tend unjustly to pile up profits, where needed least, and to spread thin the purchasing power, where needed most. The Consumers' Advisory Board ask for drastic code revisions on the basis of the effects of open-price associations, price fixing, restriction of output, allocation of output, basing-point systems and other systems for market divisions, fixed-price differentials between classes of consumers, provisions for resale price maintenance, costs computed as average costs, defective cost-accounting systems, lack of informative labeling of goods, and lack of consumer representation on code authorities.

The inequality of the position of producer and consumer interests by reason of the momentum of history, business, and industrial organizations, law, information, and representation places upon the code authorities a moral imperative to consider the studies and recommendations of the Board.

Twelve propositions vital to consumer interests, set forth in the statement of the Board, were submitted and published as necessary to the economic strength and social balance of the N.R.A. The N.R.A. is necessary to the economic strength and the social balance of the United States. The United States is necessary to the economic strength and social balance of the world.

RECOVERY AND RECONSTRUCTION

If recovery means merely the recovery of the old false prosperity then recovery is but the prelude of a crash vaster and more terrible. The new deal means not less emphasis on machines but more emphasis on human beings, not less emphasis on production but more emphasis on distribution as a way of balance, and consumption as a way of life. With a fairer deal to the farmers, decent wages, hours and conditions for the workers, more security in the work and homes of the people, and a bit of leisure for the creative imagination and longings of the human spirit, what an economically productive, socially balanced, and spiritually beautiful America our people can plan to build in our time.

Ladies and gentlemen of the code authorities, your work of code making, revision, and administration is a basic part of the work of the restoration and building of a happier America. In your hands is a great public trust. N.R.A., with all its faults and failures, is our American way of meeting the crisis of a world catastrophe that still involves our recovery and way of life. We cannot now run out on the N.R.A. without running out on America and the world.

THE AMERICAN WAY

There are other ways than this American way. South America resorts to revolution at almost every turn of the economic cycle. Continental Europe shows the way of dictatorships. Communism and fascism both have their appeals to the bewildered peoples in a world of social injustice, cataclysmic changes, and revolutions. Instead of regimenting marching armies of red shirts or black shirts, or brown shirts, the N.R.A. has been organizing work for men and women in blue overalls, or white collars, or white aprons in the unregimented lines of work and peace. With all her old and new subversions of democracy, America still stands for the freedom of the individual and the equality of opportunity of the people in a political democracy.

AMERICA IS CHOOSING

Within the framework of this political democracy, by reason of the convergence of the mighty forces of incorporated capital and harnessed power-engines, there arose new autocracies of corporate industrial power, kingdoms within themselves, which unconsciously and irresistibly encroached on the freedom and security of the individual in his working life and the equality of opportunity for millions of the people. A few hundred men, as revealed by the studies of Berle and Means, came to dominate half of the incorporated industrial wealth of America. By corporate finance and privilege, they controlled the billions of savings of hundreds of thousands of investors and, by the power-machine technology, they controlled the work and lives of millions of human beings.

America must choose either the corporate control and regimentation of its people in the interests of concentrated wealth or the public control and regulation of corporate industrialism in the interests of a larger freedom of the individual and equality of opportunity for all. There can be as much freedom, initiative, and daring enterprise in putting people back to work under the N.R.A. as there was before N.R.A. in exploiting human beings on the indecent terms of cutthroat competition, corporate or free. Freedom is certainly not less secure under the N.R.A. than it was in the old slums, sweatshops, mines, factories, mills, and the long night shifts of human beings subject to ceaseless and tyrannical machines.

Under the N.R.A. we still have some of the lords of economic might who acquired the attitude in their corporate feudalities that they are above the law. Feudal, royal, and corporate autocracies in historical and tragic succession denied the rights of the representatives of the people. Kings of England, in the seventeenth century, said they were, by divine right, above the law. They were deposed, and another king accepted the Bill of Rights as the collective bargain of the representatives of the people's own choosing. At a time of social crisis and impending national bankruptcy, the lords and notables of France were asked by leaders of the people to give up some of their customary unfair practices and feudal privileges. They refused. They were above the needs of the people. In a short time the revolution of violence and blood was on. Today the modern industrial and merchant prince should not, in his historic turn, fail to hear and understand the representatives of the workers' own choosing.

A year ago yesterday another leader of the people stood in the presence of social crisis and an impending national break-down. On all sides were desolate farms, prostrate industries, bankrupt towns, and counties. States staggered under the increasing social loads of the millions of unemployed. In late winter a great fear seized the people against which the banks could but collapse across the continent, and set in motion yet another economic spiral plunge downward. The cruel shadows of a wide despair fell across the homes of the people where children looked into the desperate faces of defeated men.

Came March the 4th. The President of the United States walked out from the Capitol steps upon a platform and stood in the center of a shaking world. He smiled. Out of his own victorious life, he spoke to the people those words whose tones of faith and courage still sustain the hopes of America for a fairer day for all people. Let us of this assembly, commissioned to carry on that hope, go back to that other March day and stand with him, as in the midst of a shattered world, he looked beyond the wreckage of the hour, and saw the America that is to come.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

REVIEW OF THE NEW DEAL

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, a little more than 14 months in time has passed since the present administration assumed control of the Government. It seems to me it would be well to take partial stock and ascertain what progress, if any, has been made under extraordinary measures adopted.

Mr. President, no more pernicious and false doctrine was ever preached to any people than that it suits the necessities and purposes of our time to forget the past and disregard the lessons of history.

Upon the cumulative wisdom of the ages have been builded the fairest structures of national existence the world has known; and through disregard of the warnings of history have been wrought their distruction.

We disregarded the lessons of the past and the warnings of history when we embarked upon the thrilling adventure we were pleased to call the "new era" and which we thought spelled easy money. When the bubble burst, we were taken up into the mountain and shown what we are told is a new heaven and a new earth conceived of a new deal.

Over 3,000 years ago the author of Ecclesiastes wrote:

Is there anything whereof it may be said, "See, this is new"?—there is no new thing under the sun.

We point to science and inventions and hold this statement false, forgetting that even they are based upon what went before. We eagerly accept what sounds pleasing as new if, perchance, we have not before known of its existence and neglect to turn the pages of history that we may profit from the experiences of the past ages.

If we doubt the statement of the author of Ecclesiastes, let us turn the pages of history back to the time of Diocletian, where we find not only the counterpart of the new deal but also the record of its result. Wehn in the year 285 A.D., Diocletian became head of the Roman state, it was at what was termed a "low tide" in its political affairs. The election cry was Novae Tabulae. A literal translation is "new accounts"; a liberal one today might be "new deal."

Diocletian believed that the time had come for society to be remodeled, and from his assumptoin of the reins of government we meet with the undisguised assertion that the will of the emperor, in whatever form expressed, is the sole fountain head of law. History records that while "the image of the ancient constitution was religiously preserved in the senate", its authority became moribund in consequence of a lack of defenders.

Let us follow the various steps in his Novae Tabulae—new accounts, new deal—as recorded by various writers. Lactantius, a contemporary of Diocletian, wrote:

He was an inveterate organizer of governmental bodies. Many administrations and a multitude of inferior officers lay heavy on each territory and almost each city. There were also many conservators of different degrees, and deputy administrators.

To this there was added an endless passion for building, and on that account there were endless exactions. Here he builded public halls, there a circus, here a mint, and there a factory for making weapons of war.

Larger military forces—the equivalent of our revenue service—were established to provide properly for his appointees and collect the larger revenues his economy demanded.

To make the task easier, he conceived the idea of debasement of the Roman currency; and whereas the aurei coined from a pound of gold were 50, Diocletian declared there should be 60, and later a successor fixed the number at 72, thereby reducing the content of the unit of value by more than 30 percent. A parallel coinage of silver was introduced which one historian—Finley—records as seemingly "to have been established at a ratio to gold of 14.27 to 1."

When currency manipulation failed to produce the desired results, Diocletian resorted to pegging prices for commodities.

Colonel Leake unearthed an inscription at Stratoniceia which might well have been written today. After insisting in its preamble with great vehemence upon the greed and inhumanity of merchants and money changers, it proceeds to fix prices throughout the empire for all the necessaries and commodities of life and to regulate the wages of laborers, artisans, and school teachers. One historian records the fact that during this period Diocletian devised a novel method of restricting the overproduction of grapes by decreeing the plowing up of one third of the vineyards of Italy. The restrictions placed upon commercial freedom brought about a disturbance of the food supply. This brings to mind the wise observation of Thomas Jefferson, when he said:

> Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want for bread.

To quote another historian:

> The bureaucratic system which Diocletian inaugurated failed altogether to remove the existing evils and aggravated others. The already overburdened financial resources of the Empire were strained still further by the increasing expenditures for building. The gigantic bureaucracy of the fourth century proved an intolerable waste in the end upon the energies of the Empire.

Lactantius further wrote:

> So great were the deficits and so huge the taxes that there began to be fewer men who paid taxes than there were who received wages; so that, the means of the husbandmen being exhausted by enormous impositions, farms were abandoned, cultivated ground became woodland, and universal dismay prevailed.

In his Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire, Gibbon says:

> From this period to the extinction of the Empire it would be easy to deduce an uninterrupted series of clamors and complaints.

Diocletian became more and more the dictator. He assumed the diadem, and access to him was rendered daily more difficult by various "scholae", as they called themselves, of domestic officials. Thus, it will be seen, even Diocletian had his "brain trust."

In 303 A.D. Diocletian held a triumph to celebrate a victory over the Persians, which Gibbon recounts as—

> Remarkable for a distinction of a less honorable kind. It was the last triumph that Rome ever beheld. Ever after this period the emperors ceased to vanquish and Rome ceased to be the capital of the empire.

Diocletian abdicated in 320 A.D. In Rome today can be seen the ruins of his colossal public baths. And in the pages of history are written the record of his administrative blunders in a mistaken attempt to control by governmental edicts the uncontrollable forces of nature and the incorrigible virtues of individual human beings.

The period of civil war which followed and which led to Constantine's victory over the avaricious son-in-law of Diocletian, Galerius, and the moving of the Roman capital to Constantinople in 330 A.D., placed heavy tax burdens on all Romans.

Truly the new deal is an old deal. The confidence of the Roman people in their government was shaken. The credit of the government was impaired. Rome never recovered. The empire fell.

Mr. President, I do not expect the American Republic to fall. We will survive the present plague of mistaken remedies for our ills. The American people are awakening to the danger of the un-American program of this administration and soon will effectively stop its destructive course.

Cicero said that confidence and credit had done more to enrich nations than all of the mines of the world. This statement is as true today as it was when first uttered 2,000 years ago. I am one of those who firmly believe that recovery will only come from restored confidence in national economic forces and not through wild speculative and socialistic experiments that destroy confidence and bewilder and frighten the American people, whether they be investors or producers.

Since the 4th day of March 1933 we have traveled far upon what we were told were "new and untrod paths"—new in America but old in the history of the world. The administration has conducted many ancient experiments, most if not all of them failures, which will leave a legacy of debt for this and future generations. It has abandoned many of the old landmarks; it has treated the lessons of experience as worthless.

We have heard, from those high in official authority, doctrines that sound strange to American ears. Much of the legislation enacted into law has suggested every "ism" except Americanism. Many of the major proposals and acts have gone far beyond any power previously believed to be possessed by the Federal Government. It is becoming more apparent every day that we are directly headed for collectivism in government, with regimentation and regulation of finance, industry, agriculture, and commerce.

The administration is traveling fast into state socialism and is abandoning what we have been pleased to call the American system of individual initiative and effort which has been the greatest success in self-government the world has ever known. Under the pretense of meeting an emergency, Congress has delegated power vested in it by the Constitution to the Chief Executive at such a rapid rate that it will soon be denuded of power. In this connection, it is well to remember that while Congress may delegate powers belonging to it to another branch of the Government by a majority vote, it requires a two-thirds vote to regain such powers over a Presidential veto.

Mr. President, many of our people who still believe in the American system of government shuddered when they were told by the President, on January 3, 1934, that we were now engaged in building "on the ruins of the past a new structure." The utterance brought to patriotic American citizens with stunning force the realization that if President Roosevelt is to have his way, we have definitely scrapped the theories, the ideals, and the principles of the America of the past, and have turned to new and as yet untried theories of government, and are being plunged into a socialism different from any preached before.

The administration's program abandons the principles of democracy in favor of a system that partakes of the fascism of Italy, the communism of Russia, the ancient feudal system of England that was discarded 400 years ago, and the planned economy of Diocletian that resulted in such disaster to the Roman people. It is not a progressive program. It is reactionary. It turns the clock of progress back thousands of years. It is an assault on human liberty.

Patriotic people who believe in the American system of government, with its three coordinate and co-equal branches of government, each serving as a check upon the other, were further shocked at the declaration of the President in the same address to Congress, when in speaking of the constitutional relationship between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, he stated that—

> The letter of the Constitution wisely declared a separation, but the impulse of common purpose declares a union.

Mr. President, there was little applause for these statements among patriotic American citizens. One does not cheer in a moment so solemn, nor when confronted with a future so serious. Patriotic citizens are not ready to concede that the America founded by our forefathers, and builded in a comparatively few years to the greatest nation in the world, has collapsed and crumbled. The Nation has known depressions before, some as serious as the present one, but the country each time has risen to new prosperity, without destroying the foundations of our Government.

THE PROMISE AND THE PERFORMANCE

Mr. President, the program followed by the administration has never been submitted to the American people. It has no mandate to follow the course it has pursued since coming into power. The program now being forced upon the American people was neither mentioned in the Democratic platform of 1932, nor did President Roosevelt while a candidate even intimate he believed in such a program. On the contrary, both candidate and platform advocated a course directly opposite to that now being followed. Except for the plank relating to the eighteenth amendment, not a single major pledge of the Democratic candidate or the Democratic platform of 1932 has been kept.

Let us review the record so far made, and compare the performance of this administration with its promises to the American people in 1932.

The Democratic platform asserted that—

> A party platform is a covenant with the people, to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his speech of acceptance at Chicago, said:

> I accept it 100 percent.

Perhaps the outstanding pledge of both the Democratic candidate and the platform was that relating to economy in government and reduction in governmental expenditures. From the Democratic platform I quote:

> We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.
> We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues.

In connection with these planks, permit me to quote Mr. Roosevelt himself.

At Sioux City, Iowa, on September 29, 1932, he stated:

> On my part I ask you to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of the National Government. * * * I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peace times in all our history—one which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs of reduced earning power of the people. Bureaus and bureaucrats have been retained at the expense of the people.

On October 21, 1932, at St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Roosevelt stated:

> Rigid governmental economy shall be forced by a stern and unremitting administration policy of living within our income.

Mr. President, there is the promise from both platform and candidate. Let us look at the performance.

Immediately after his inauguration, President Roosevelt made what appeared to be a gesture toward an economy program. On March 10, 1933, he sent a message to Congress urging the passage of the so-called "Economy Act", stating that if given the power requested therein—

> There is reasonable prospect that within a year the income of the Government will be sufficient to cover the expenditures.

President Roosevelt was granted the authority requested, but the ink on that act was scarcely dry when he started a spending program never before equaled in this or any other country in peace time.

While this squandering was going on, the administration forces were regularly issuing Budget-balancing claims, and through tricky bookkeeping the administration was for the time being able to mislead the public. This situation, however, could not continue indefinitely; and when President Roosevelt sent his Budget message to Congress on January 4, 1934, he had to confess that instead of balancing the Federal Budget for the present fiscal year, as indicated in his Economy Act message, he expected that there would be a deficit of over $7,309,000,000. In this connection, permit me to say that although every other message President Roosevelt has sent to Congress can be had in pamphlet form for general distribution, his Budget message, admitting the failure of his Budget-balancing claims and predicting the greatest deficit in our peace-time history, has not been printed in pamphlet form.

President Roosevelt's prediction of a deficit of over $7,309,000,000 came as such a shock to the American people and caused such a tremendously unfavorable reaction that for the time being certain administration activities are being curtailed or delayed. As a result, the deficit for this year will likely be between four and five billions of dollars. While postponement or curtailment of any administration activities may reduce the deficit the President expected for the current year, this will only add to the size of the deficit in the coming year. So much for the Budget-balancing claims of this administration.

The Democratic Party in 1932 promised a reduction of not less than 25 percent in the cost of the Federal Government. That was the promise. Let us look at the performance.

On April 30, the deficit for this fiscal year had already reached $3,334,444,000, with indications it will amount to between four and five billions by June 30, the end of the present fiscal year. Up to that time governmental expenditures had reached $5,822,000,000, compared with $4,217,000,000 during a similar period of the previous year. This results in an increase under the present administration of $1,605,000,000 over the corresponding period of the previous year. Thus, instead of reducing the cost of government 25 percent as promised, this administration has increased its cost by over 38 percent, with expenditures steadily mounting. So much for the economy promises of the Roosevelt administration.

Let us now look at its public-debt record. In his campaign speech delivered in Albany, N.Y., on July 30, 1932, Mr. Roosevelt said: "Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits." What is the record in this connection?

When Mr. Roosevelt became President our public debt amounted to $21,362,000,000. By March 31, 1934, this debt had increased to $26,157,000,000, an increase of $4,795,000,000, or over 22 percent since Mr. Roosevelt became President.

In his Budget message of January 4, 1934, President Roosevelt estimated the public debt would reach the sum of $31,834,000,000 by the end of his second fiscal year. This would represent an increase of almost $10,500,000,000 since he became President. It would be $5,000,000,000 greater than our public debt at its peak during the previous Democratic administration. How does this compare with President Roosevelt's declaration, while a candidate, that we must stop borrowing to meet deficits?

There is the historical record. No administration in history has failed more miserably in carrying out its pledges than has the Roosevelt administration with reference to economy in government, balancing the Budget, or to end the increase in our public debt.

What has been the result of the administration's spending activities so far? Notwithstanding the expenditure of billions of the taxpayers' money on its various projects and schemes, we were told by Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, on April 14 of this year that there were 4,700,000 families then on the public relief rolls, this being an increase of 100,000 families over the same period a year ago. At this rate how long will it take to restore the Nation to normal conditions?

Let me now refer to a few of the other major pledges this administration made to the American people during the 1932 campaign. The following plank on the tariff is taken from the Democratic platform of 1932:

> We condemn the Hawley-Smoot tariff law, the prohibitive rates of which have resulted in retaliatory action by more than 40 countries, created economic international hostility, destroyed international trade, driven our factories into foreign countries, robbed the farmer of the American markets, and increased the cost of production.

The foregoing is a severe indictment. If the leadership of the Democratic Party believed the statements in this plank, then they were in honor bound to take immediate steps to repeal this act and thus relieve the country from its alleged destructive effects. Although this administration has been in office 14 months, although it is in complete control of both branches of Congress, and in position to enact any legislation it desires, not a single step has been taken by Congress to repeal the Hawley-Smoot tariff law, which the Democratic Party declared in its platform was having such a destructive effect on our own country. This administration has not brought about a single decrease in a single schedule of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act which it so severely condemned, but a number of increases have been made.

The tariff plank in the Democratic platform of 1932 is similar to the statements regularly made by Democratic partisans on the tariff question. The action of the present Democratic Congress with reference to the existing tariff law indicates clearly the tariff plank was made only to deceive the people on election day. The Democratic Party condemned the Hawley-Smoot tariff law in the most severe language of which it is capable, but has not dared to repeal it. It has denounced its provisions, but has lacked the courage to correct them. It has charged it with ruining the country, yet has permitted the alleged ruinous act to continue.

Mr. President, there is another reference to the tariff in the Democratic platform of 1932. It reads as follows:

> We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference.

There is the promise. What about the performance?

There is now pending in the Senate a bill introduced at the instance of the President delegating to him authority to negotiate certain tariff treaties without submitting such treaties to the Senate for ratification, as is required by the Constitution. Under this act Congress would ratify any treaty under its provisions in advance without knowing its actual conditions, without review of the treaty by any tribunal, and without the right of appeal on the part of any industry affected. This act is entirely contrary to the plank in the Democratic platform I have just quoted.

Mr. President, the Democratic platform pledged "abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus." Notwithstanding this pledge, President Roosevelt has added 37 new bureaus during the first year of his administration, and the end is not yet. And how about reducing the number of Government employees? When President Roosevelt came into office there were 563,487 Federal civil-service employees. On March 31 of this year, just 13 months later, there were 623,559 employees in the Federal civil service. This is an increase of 60,072 employees, or almost 11 percent, since Mr. Roosevelt became President. This is exclusive of the millions employed in the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Civil Works Administration, the Emergency Works Administration, and the Public Works Administration. The Roosevelt pledge to reduce bureaus and the number of Federal employees has worked in the same manner as the pledge to reduce the cost of government—in the opposite direction.

The Democratic platform advocated "strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws." No measure has even been proposed by any administration spokesman to strengthen such laws in accordance with the Democratic platform pledge, but as a result of a so-called "National Industrial Recovery Act" the antitrust laws have been virtually suspended. This action has resulted in an unfair advantage to the large corporations. The small independent business man and industrialist has been placed at the mercy of the great monopolies and trusts. As evidence that this is not a partisan view, I quote from a statement made by Hon. Charles W. Bryan, Democratic Governor of the State of Nebraska, on October 19, 1933, who stated that as a result of the suspension of the antitrust laws under the Roosevelt administration "the people are now being plundered through collusion of organized business groups on a scale never heretofore dreamed of." Thus another pledge of this administration has been kept by ignoring it completely and acting entirely contrary to the party and platform promises.

Mr. President, both the Democratic candidate and the platform in 1932 declared in favor of "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." In his St. Louis address on October 21, 1932, Mr. Roosevelt spoke as follows:

> At the very top of the credit structure of the country, surpassing all other groups in moral and material importance, stand the obligations of the Federal Government. These are paramount. * * * When they go everything goes. Happily these obligations are secure.

Notwithstanding these solemn pledges, the sound financial policies that have been followed from the birth of the Nation have been abandoned in direct violation of the solemn pledge of the Democratic Party and its Presidential candidate. The American dollar has been debased. Forty percent of the gold belonging to the people has been confiscated and the administration has shamelessly boasted of a profit to the Government by the process amounting to over $2,810,000,000. The Government under the new deal has sold Government obligations upon the false representation that such obligations were payable in gold, and within 30 days thereafter Congress, at the behest of the President, enacted legislation repudiating the gold clause in such obligations, thereby changing the terms of the contract. By legislative enactment Congress has repudiated contracts, both public and private, and under this administration for the first time in our history we have sunk to the low level of a repudiating nation.

We have recently enacted a law to penalize other nations that have defaulted in their obligations to us, and yet under this administration for the first and only time in our history we have failed to fully honor the provisions of our own obligations, thus putting us in the same class as those nations we have stamped and penalized as defaulters.

Mr. President, the Democratic platform, which President Roosevelt approved 100 percent, contained this plank:

> The removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise, except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.

This solemn pledge has been flagrantly disregarded. Under the new deal the Government has injected itself into every line of private enterprise. There is no industry and no business in this country that has not felt the weight of the Government's interference.

Mr. President, the Democratic platform of 1932 contained the following plank relating to farm relief:

> We condemn the extravagance of the Farm Board, its disastrous action which made the Government a speculator in farm products, and the unsound policy of restricting agricultural production to domestic needs.

President Roosevelt in his farm speech delivered at Topeka, Kans., on September 14, 1932, made the following statement:

> When the futility of maintaining prices of wheat and cotton through the so-called "stabilizing process" became apparent, the President's Farm Board, of which the Secretary of Agriculture was a member, invented the cruel joke of advising farmers to allow 20 percent of their wheat lands to lie idle, to plow up every third row of cotton, and to shoot every tenth cow. Surely he knew this advice would not, and indeed could not, be followed. It was probably offered as the foundation of an alibi.

If ever a pledge of both party and candidate has been completely repudiated and reversed, it is the one made by President Roosevelt and his party on the subject of farm relief. Denouncing an alleged extravagance in previous years, this administration has squandered money, right and left, on agricultural ventures it not only failed to indicate it favored, but which it denounced and ridiculed during the 1932 campaign. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent by this administration to destroy and reduce crop production on the one hand, and additional hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent to increase crop production on the other hand. More money has been loaned by this administration on certain crops than the crops could have been sold for in the open market.

President Roosevelt while a candidate referred to an alleged scheme of "shooting every tenth cow" as a "cruel joke." As no one else ever made such proposal, the idea was evidently the product of President Roosevelt's own mind, and he thought so well of it that he put it into effect as soon as he became President. Under the guise of a relief measure 5,000,000 hogs were slaughtered by this administration; a large number of them being dumped into the Mississippi River, due to the lack of proper storage facilities, thus becoming a total loss—a useless squandering of public funds. This hog-killing venture may have been looked upon by this administration as a cruel joke, but not so by the taxpayer, who must pay the bill, for the pork actually realized thereunder cost on the average of 34 cents a pound, when the Government could have gone into the retail stores and purchased the same for less than one half that amount.

The policy of restricting agricultural products to domestic needs was denounced in the Democratic platform as unsound and by President Roosevelt as a cruel joke. But Mr. Roosevelt was no sooner inaugurated as President than he adopted the unsound and cruel joke as an administration policy and spent hundreds of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money in a futile endeavor to restrict agricultural products to our domestic needs—the same policy that he and his party denounced in 1932. This scheme, like others undertaken under the new deal, has failed, and so the administration is now inaugurating a new policy of forcing restriction of crop production under threat of confiscatory taxation and imprisonment for any farmer who may undertake to enjoy the full fruits of his toil.

THE NEW DEAL MOVES IN OPPOSITE DIRECTIONS

Mr. President, on farm relief we find the "new dealers" traveling in opposite directions. We find the Secretary of Agriculture spending hundreds of millions of the taxpayers' money to induce the farmer to take 41,000,000 acres out of cultivation so that consumption will equal farm production. On the other hand we find the Public Works Administrator approving an initial expenditure of $86,000,000 on new irrigation projects that will add approximately 1,600,000,000 acres of land to that already in cultivation.

The Federal Relief Administration is now inaugurating a program of placing 600,000 city dwellers on self-supporting farms. This will not only reduce the number of consumers for the products of those already engaged in the farming industry, but, more important, will increase the farm production which the administration is trying to decrease. The new-deal method of solving our farming problem is indeed a novel one.

CONGRESS ABDICATES ITS LEGISLATIVE POWER

Mr. President, the Seventy-third Congress has been marked for its surrender of legislative power reposed in it by the Constitution, and its delegation of that power to the executive branch of the Government, thereby breaking down the fine checks and balances in our system of government. The Emergency Banking Act conferred upon the President an extension of authority over banking and finance. Under it the President is given authority to regulate credit, currency, gold, silver, and foreign-exchange transactions. Under that act he ordered all gold and gold certificates belonging to the citizens to be surrendered to the United States Treasury. He placed an embargo on gold and fixed restrictions on the banking business of the Federal Reserve members. Under that and other acts delegating to him the power, he confiscated 40 percent of the gold belonging to the people. By the so-called "National Economy Act" the Congress delegated to the President the legislative power vested in Congress to remake the entire structure of veterans' benefits. Happily some of the injustices perpetrated under this act have been corrected by Congress.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act the Congress virtually made the Secretary of Agriculture a dictator for the agricultural interests of the country, with power to establish rules and regulations not only governing the American farmer but all those who process farm products. Under the provisions of this act he is given authority to license processors of farm products. He is empowered to suspend or revoke such licenses and to exclude any processor not licensed, under the penalty of $100 a day. He is authorized to fix prices for farm products equivalent to prices during the pre-war period from July 1909 to July 1914. Congress delegated to him the power to levy, assess, and collect a tax to be paid by the processor, to change the tax at will, and to rebate or refund taxes. He is empowered to levy, assess, and collect tariff duties upon imports into the United States, upon commodities within the United States that are subject to the processing tax. The duties so assessed are in addition to other duties imposed by law. This program has cost the American taxpayers and consumers hundreds of millions of dollars, and is detrimental to the interests of the farmer in the long run.

The administration and Congress sugar-coated the pill given to the farmer under the original Agricultural Adjustment Act by paying him money for not producing; but now that the administration has the farmer's foot in a hobble, it is threatening a reversal of the policy of paying him for not producing and for leaving his land idle by compelling him to do so by law.

The cotton compulsory control bill, passed by the Senate on March 29, 1934, is the first legislative act designed to bring coercion directly upon the farmer. It compels cotton reduction. In general terms, the bill attempts to place a definite limitation upon the volume of cotton that can be marketed. The limitation is fixed at 10,000,000 bales. Any excess above this amount is subject to a confiscatory tax. The 10,000,000-bales limit is distributed on the basis of past production as determined by ginning records. Should a farmer produce in excess of his quota, which he may do even with the best of intention, because of weather conditions, the tax will be imposed upon him should he attempt to market the cotton. What is proposed then is simply in effect to license every cotton raiser in the United States. He will be told by a Washington bureaucrat exactly how many bales he can raise. If he exceeds that amount it will be impossible for him to sell the product at a price that will cover expenses. If he attempts to sell his surplus production, he will be subject to a fine and imprisonment of 2 years in the penitentiary.

This is the opening wedge of the movement to control the farmer by force. If the philosophy of the bill is pursued to its logical conclusion, it will be followed by the same character of legislation to cover every commodity produced by agriculture. The chief result will be to gouge that portion of consumers who are still able to buy. We are traveling fast toward one of the possible goals suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture that will require the previously free and independent farmer to have a permit from a Washington bureaucrat for the cultivation of every 40-acre tract of land that he thought belonged to him.

The farmer will be unhappy, indeed, to learn that, instead of the Government paying him to allow his land to lie idle, in the future compulsory methods will be used. This measure will visit untold hardship and suffering upon the small share croppers. If the Government can tell the farmer what to plant, where to plant, how much to plant, where not to plant, then what becomes of private property? If this law is valid, then the Constitution is a dead letter. If this power can be exercised by the Government, then a bureau in Washington, by economic pressure, can compel the movement of people from one section of the country to another; they can "crack down" on them; they can pronounce economic death, not only on individuals, but on whole communities.

If the Federal Government can do the things provided in this measure, then, to use the vernacular into which General Johnson, one of our bureaucratic masters, lapsed a short while ago, "You ain't seen nothin' yet."

By the provisions of the National Recovery Act, we placed the control and direction of private business of every kind and character under a Federal administrator. The theory of this act is that a bureaucracy in Washington is more capable of directing the private business of the country than are those who own the business and have had years of experience in it.

While some good has been accomplished by the administration of the act, such as the elimination of child labor and the sweatshops through the N.R.A. codes and the prevention of unfair trade practices, taken as a whole it is pernicious legislation.

It has resulted in monopolistic practices to the detriment of the small independent business and industry. It has enabled the large business and industry of the country to get together and gouge the consumer, as a result of the suspension of the antitrust laws. The diverse conditions of living in different sections of this country are such that it is impossible to formulate any code for business that will be just to all interests affected. This is true even of sections lying in close proximity to each other. The standards of living are so diverse, costs of living are so different in the various sections of the country, that it is impossible for any bureau in Washington to act intelligently and wisely in regard to the problems of each community. As a result of the National Recovery Act, the big industries, Nation-wide in their scope, have been able to indulge in monopolistic practices to the injury of the consuming public as well as the small business man and industrialist.

I have already stated that both the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the National Recovery Act are bad measures. Anything the farmer may have gained by the Agricultural Adjustment Act, he has lost in the higher prices caused by the operation of the National Recovery Act. The higher wages brought about by the operation of the National Recovery Act are counterbalanced by the higher cost of living produced by the operations of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and of the National Recovery Act. The increased employment brought about by the codes is counterbalanced by decreased demands of consumers due to higher prices.

The plan cannot work, and it is retarding and delaying recovery. That this conclusion is correct is verified by the reports of the Agricultural Department, the bulletin of the Federal Reserve Board, and the public survey of the American Federation of Labor. The October 1933 Federal Reserve Bulletin states that the decline in industrial activity "has been marked in industries in which processing taxes or codes have been effective recently." The finding of the Reserve Board has been confirmed by the Survey of Current Business issued by the Department of Commerce, of which Secretary Roper, Chairman of the National Recovery Board, is the head. The November 1933 number of the Monthly Survey of Business issued by the American Federation of Labor states:

N.R.A. wages have not brought higher living standards to the average worker. A 6-percent increase in wages has been eaten up in an 8.5-percent increase in living costs, and the laborer finds his real monthly income in September actually below that of March 1933 by 2.3 percent.

The official Bulletin of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration on October 29 states:

The spread between the prices received by the farmer for his products and the price paid by the consumer has increased gradually but steadily since May of this year.

The whole program rests upon a fallacious foundation. It rests upon the presumption that a huge bureaucracy in Washington can direct and control agriculture, business, and industry better than can the people themselves. The administration, through its control of Congress, has set up a colossal bureaucracy in Washington, the magnitude and complexity of which bewilders the American people—a bureaucracy whose tentacles penetrate every nook and corner of the Republic, and the end is not yet. The legislative incubator is filled with measures reaching out for more power for bureaucracy.

The Food and Drug Act, now pending before Congress, would place the power of life and death over all those engaged in the food, drug, and cosmetic business in the hands of a bureau of the Department of Agriculture. A bill is pending in Congress providing for the establishment of control in Washington over all lines of communication, including the radio, the telegraph, and the telephone lines. If this bill shall be passed—and it apparently has the President's support—the fight made by the daily newspapers for a provision in their code guaranteeing the freedom of the press will have been in vain.

The pending stock exchange bill provides not merely for the supervision over stock exchanges but for Government supervision over virtually every incorporated business in the country, and directly and specifically over every concern whose stock is listed on any exchange and indirectly over every other concern whose stock is not listed. Again the administration is reaching out for further bureaucratic control over the organized business of the country.

SUPPOSE

Mr. President, one might ask what would have been the result on election day in 1932 if Mr. Roosevelt had told the American people that he favored and would put into effect the policies that have been inaugurated since he became President.

Suppose that Mr. Roosevelt had told the American people during the campaign of 1932 that, if elected, he would force through Congress a measure taking away from the veterans of our various wars hundreds of millions of dollars' compensation that they were then receiving.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would force a measure through Congress reducing the salaries of all Government employees, while at the same time insisting that private industry should increase the salaries paid by them.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would sponsor a measure repudiating the Nation's just obligations and thus, for the first time in our history, reduce us to the low level of a repudiating nation.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would sponsor a measure nullifying clauses in public and private contracts previously entered into, thus robbing investors of their just dues.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would sponsor a measure devaluing the dollar by 40 percent, thus permitting the Government to confiscate through legalized robbery and without recompense over $2,800,000,000 of other people's property.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would sponsor a measure stamping any citizen as a criminal who refused to turn over to this administration certain moneys, rightfully and lawfully belonging to such citizen, and to accept in lieu thereof money of a greatly reduced value.

Suppose he had told them that, instead of keeping the pledge to reduce Government expenses not less than 25 percent, he would actually increase such expenses over 38 percent.

Suppose he had told the American people that, instead of balancing the Budget, the fiscal policies he would follow would result in a deficit of approximately five billions during the first fiscal year of his administration.

Suppose he had told the people that, if elected, he would violate the campaign pledge to keep Government expenditures within Government receipts by spending public moneys so lavishly and recklessly that during the first 2 years of his administration our public debt would be increased by $10,900,000,000, making an aggregate Federal debt of approximately $32,000,000,000—the greatest debt with which this Government has ever been burdened.

Suppose he had told the American people that, instead of abolishing bureaus, it was his purpose to create 37 new bureaus during the first year of his tenure, adding thousands upon thousands to the Government pay roll.

Suppose he had told the American people that, instead of keeping the campaign promise to reduce the number of Federal employees, he would add 60,072 in 13 months.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would, in the face of the campaign pledge to uphold the antitrust laws, sponsor a measure suspending such laws and thus permitting organized big business to prey on the public and destroy its smaller competitors.

Suppose he had told the American people that, if elected, he would spend hundreds of millions of the taxpayers' money to destroy and reduce crops on the one hand, and then spend hundreds of millions more to increase the production of such crops.

Suppose he had told the American people in 1932 that, if elected, he would bring about a system of collectivism and regimentation of all agriculture and industry, to supplant the rugged individualism under which we advanced to the greatest nation in the world.

Suppose he had told the people that, instead of taking the Government out of business, he would advocate putting it into every business.

If he had told the people all of these things, what would have been the result?

WE CANNOT SQUANDER OURSELVES INTO PROSPERITY

Mr. President, there is no doubt that the vast governmental expenditures running into billions of dollars, which will remain as a legacy of debt for this and future generations to pay, have resulted temporarily in increased industrial and business activity in some lines, but they have brought no permanent recovery. The activities will cease when the Government stops shoveling money out of the National Treasury, and we will be in an infinitely worse condition than we were before. We cannot spend ourselves into prosperity, nor borrow ourselves out of debt. The further we travel on the road of loans and extravagance, the further we will be from the path that leads to prosperity.

The history of all the ages has demonstrated that to spend and continue to spend more than one's income leads to bankruptcy.

In the language of Mr. Roosevelt, "a family can spend more than it makes for a year or so, but to continue to do so leads to the poorhouse." This principle applies with the same unerring certainty to states and nations as to families and individuals.

THERE ARE NO SHORT CUTS OUT OF A DEPRESSION

There are no short cuts out of a depression. With nations as with individuals, the road is laborious and hard. It involves labor, self-denial, and self-sacrifice. It is the only honest way out. We are not going to come out of this depression until we shall have put our financial affairs in order. We may build up a false and temporary prosperity by continued extravagant spending and borrowing, but we are only putting off the evil day and inviting more disastrous results in the future.

THE DEMOCRATIC PROPOSAL WAS DIRECTLY OPPOSITE TO ITS PRESENT PROGRAM

Mr. President, no political party could have gained the ascendency in this country if it had frankly told the American people of the revolutionary program that is now being carried into effect. If the people had been told that a new structure was to be built, that collectiveism and regimentation were to supplant individualism, that a bureaucracy was to be set up to control every line of human endeavor, the result doubtless would have been very different. The present administration received its vote of confidence upon an entirely different program. The American people were assured that if the Democratic Party were given control of the Government, it would carry into effect:

First, "an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices * * * and eliminating extravagance";

Second, "maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues";

Third, "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards";

Fourth, "a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference";

Fifth, "strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws, to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices * * * for the better protection of labor and the small producer and distributor";

Sixth, "the removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise."

There was no suggestion that there was to be a change in our form of government or that an attempt would be made to build a new structure upon the ruins of the old. Few people would have claimed during the last campaign that our Republic was in ruins. We were suffering from a great and world-wide depression. The people were anxious for relief. They voted for a change in administration, but they did not vote for a revolution—peaceful or otherwise. They had the right to assume that the Democratic Party, if intrusted with power, would make an honest effort to carry out the solemn pledges of the Democratic platform, which were approved 100 percent by Mr. Roosevelt. There was not the remotest suggestion that there would be any retreat from constitutional government in the event of Democratic success. There was no intimation of a dictatorship or the extension of bureaucracy. Never has an administration been so faithless to its campaign pledges.

WHAT IS THE REMEDY?

Mr. President, the more the program of the present administration is understood the more it is criticized and condemned by the American people. Not being able successfully to defend this program which violates all American traditions and is the most costly peace-time program known, the apologists for the administration resort to the cry, "What have you to offer?" They assert that no one is justified in presenting criticism unless in position to offer a cure for existing ills. This was the attitude of the President when he recently addressed an N.R.A. gathering in Washington, and it is being echoed everywhere by the abject administration followers. These followers persistently claim that the Roosevelt program is the only solution for present-day problems, and that should it fail there is no hope for real recovery.

I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that one must have a solution for a problem before he should oppose unsound and dangerous remedies. I do not believe one should be estopped from protesting the administering of poison to either the physical or political body because he may not have a cure for the existing ailment. I believe restoration can be had without the destruction of constitutional government, without sacrificing American ideals, and without creating the largest tax and debt burden known in our history.

The suggestion is a simple one. It is to return to those sound fundamentals of both business and government which have served us so well through practically all the years of our history, under which our Nation made its matchless progress, and under which our people as a whole enjoyed more of the comforts, necessities, and luxuries of life than any other people on the face of the globe. Under such policies business recovery was definitely underway in 1932, until the Democratic victory in that year stopped the upward trend and turned it the other way. Before presenting proof in support of this statement, let me briefly review conditions confronting the last administration.

While Democratic partisans endeavored to lay on the Hoover administration the blame for the depression which struck this country in 1929, any fair and informed person knows this charge was without merit. The depression was world-wide in scope, being almost wholly the aftermath of the World War, affecting nations in every part of the globe, irrespective of what form of government existed in such country. When I speak of the depression being the aftermath of the World War, I refer to that war out of which the Democratic Party promised to keep us during the campaign of 1916, but into which they plunged us when the campaign was over.

This furnishes one of the concrete examples of the irony of politics. President Wilson received a vote of confidence and the plaudits of the people because he kept us out of war. President Hoover was given a severe rebuke because of the depression brought upon the world by that war out of which Wilson did not keep us.

Not only did the Hoover administration have to contend with conditions created by the world-wide depression, an enemy from without, but it had to fight an equally dangerous enemy from within, namely, the Democratic National Committee, under the leadership of John J. Raskob. At an enormous expense this organization maintained a highly organized press bureau, whose sole purpose was to undermine and destroy every effort made by the Hoover administration to serve the Nation and to bring about business recovery. As authority for this statement, I quote from an article by Mr. Frank Kent, Washington correspondent for the Baltimore Sun, and published in Scribner's Magazine. Mr. Kent is among the foremost of Washington correspondents; and as he is rated as a Democrat, no charge of partisanship can be laid at his door.

Mr. Kent, in his article, points out that after the inauguration of President Hoover the Democratic National Committee established a press bureau in Washington to be maintained between campaigns, a policy that committee had not previously followed. One fourth of a million dollars was set aside for that purpose and a high-priced publicity agent placed in charge. Mr. Kent states that this bureau was "beyond question the most elaborate, expensive, efficient, and effective political-propaganda machine ever operated in the country by any party, organization, association, or league." This bureau, when finally uncovered, became known as the "smear and smut" division of the Democratic Party.

Mr. Kent, in his article, pointed out that the sole duty of the agent in charge of this bureau was to "smear" President Hoover and the Hoover administration. This was what he was there for, and all he was there for. The publicity agent was to "minimize every Hoover asset and magnify all his liabilities." He was to "take Hoover's little mistakes and make them big." He was to "obscure every Hoover virtue and achievement and turn an exaggerated light on all his personal and political shortcomings."

Mr. Kent pointed out that while this propaganda bureau issued millions of words of publicity, there was not included a single commendatory word of the President of the United States. Mr. Kent further pointed out in his article that the "smear" bureau did not work under its own banner, but that its undermining material was largely issued under the names of various Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, thereby avoiding appearances of being campaign propaganda.

When the "smear and smut" bureau waged its incessant undermining campaign, it struck not only at the occupant of the White House, but at the well-being of our own country, at our own wage earners, at our own industry, and at our own general welfare. The persistent underhanded attacks on the Hoover administration, the continuous ridicule and belittling of its work, and the continued exaggeration of any unfavorable condition finally all but destroyed the confidence of the American people in their own Government and warped their own judgment. They were led to believe that only by a change of administration could betterment come. They looked at the alluring promise of the future rather than to the improvement then present.

But, Mr. President, notwithstanding the world-wide depression with which the last administration had to contend, notwithstanding the continuous sniping and guerilla warfare waged by the Democratic National Committee, our Nation was emerging from the depression and on the way to recovery when the Democratic victory in 1932 stopped that progress.

In support of this statement I shall refer, first, to the business index as published by The Annalist, a business magazine of recognized authority. This index shows that the depression reached bottom in July 1932. Following this, the months of August, September, and October each showed a business increase over the preceding month. But the month of November, in the early part of which occurred the Democratic victory, showed a decline. This decline continued each month thereafter until the month of April 1933, when, in anticipation of the N.R.A. codes going into effect, with their higher manufacturing costs, manufacturers produced heavily. This caused a temporary increase in business activity which continued until the month of July 1933. The expected increase in the demand for goods, however, failed to develop and to absorb the increased production. With the codes and their higher production costs generally coming into force, the business trend again turned downward.

What I desire to make clear, however, is that for the months preceding the election of 1932 the business index showed an upward trend which ended with the election of Mr. Roosevelt.

As a second point to prove that the country was on the way to business recovery in 1932, I refer to the columns of the daily newspapers. I have before me exactly 183 clippings taken from the St. Louis newspapers from August 16, 1932, to November 1932. They all tell the same story of increased employment, increased wages, increased pay rolls, and increased and revived business. I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the close of my remarks the newspaper clippings referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The newspaper items referred to appear at the end of Mr. PATTERSON's remarks.)

Mr. PATTERSON. These news items come from practically every part of the United States, and include virtually every industry with the exception of agriculture. With the continued improvement in all other lines, however, agricultural recovery would naturally follow. If Associated Press and United Press news items can be accepted as reliable, the clippings before me present convincing and irrefutable support of the business index already quoted, to the effect that in the months preceding the 1932 election we were definitely on the road to recovery.

The third authority I offer in support of my claim that we were on the road to business recovery before the election of 1932 is none other than President Roosevelt. While a candidate for the Presidency he delivered an address in St. Louis, Mo., on October 31. In this address he not only admitted that business recovery was prevalent, but it was so much in evidence that he apparently deemed it necessary to offer an explanation. In his address, Mr. Roosevelt stated that there had been an "appreciable improvement and confidence in the past 3 months." He asserted this was not due to anything the Republican Party had done or had promised to do, but was due to—> a growing confidence on the part of the people of this country that on November 8 there is but one thing to be expected, and that is the overwhelming election of the Democratic ticket.

The foregoing furnishes ample proof that business recovery was on its way and the depression was being overcome in the months preceding the 1932 election: First, the business index; second, the news items gathered by the great news agencies; and, third, the statement of the Democratic candidate for President. I respectfully submit the foregoing offers convincing proof that under the Hoover administration, by following safe and sane policies and avoiding any radical experiments, we were on the way to recovery.

What, then, has since happened, and what stands in the way of sound recovery today?

As pointed out, President Roosevelt while a candidate claimed that the business recovery previous to the election of 1932 was due to the fact that the American people hoped for and expected a Democratic victory. If President Roosevelt was correct in his reasoning then, when the hope of a Democratic victory became an accomplished fact the business improvement already under way should not only have continued but increased heavily in volume. If the mere hope for a Democratic victory could start a fair measure of business recovery in 1932, the overwhelming victory won by that party in that year should have had the effect by this time of wiping out the last vestige of business adversity.

But, Mr. President, what actually happened when the news went abroad that Mr. Roosevelt had been elected President, and with him an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress?

Instead of the business revival continuing and increasing in volume, it not only ceased its upward swing but started again on the downward grade. With the prospect of another Democratic administration at Washington, doubt and uncertainty in industry again reigned. With the sad recollections of the regular failures of such administrations in the past, with the well-known inability or lack of desire to keep their pledges to solve public problems, to balance our Budget, and the well-known aptitude of every Democratic administration to plunge the Nation deeply into debt, the American people saw the approach of another such administration with fear and misgivings. As a result, business conditions steadily grew from bad to worse. The nearer the inaugural date of the new administration approached, the worse became the business plight, and by the time the present administration was inaugurated it had reached such low depths that the first act of the incoming administration was to close every bank in the country—a step never before found necessary in the history of our Nation.

Compare the results following the huge Democratic victory in 1932, with the claim of President Roosevelt that business recovery previous to that election was due to the fact that the American people anticipated a Democratic victory in that year, and then draw your own conclusions. It would be interesting to have Mr. Roosevelt explain to the American people why a business recovery which he claimed was due to the hope for a Democratic victory ended when the hope for that victory became a reality.

To the question, "What have you to offer?" I answer, "Return to those sound fundamentals of business and government that have served us so well through practically all the years of our history, and under which we were emerging from the depression before the election of 1932."

No greater impetus could be given to business than for the President to clean out the whole aggregation of "new dealers", "brain trusters", bullying Army sergeants, alphabetical soupiers, baloney dollarites, money jugglers, and evangelistic crack-pots, none of whom ever successfully conducted a business of their own but who now essay forth to take over the management of the entire business of the country, including industry, agriculture, finance, commerce, communications, and, if they can bring it about, even the public press.

Other nations have made more rapid advance toward recovery than we have made, without costly experiments, without changing their government or surrendering their liberty. If this administration had not indulged in one continual round of experimental legislation; if it had not trifled with the national credit and the national honor; if it had made an honest effort to balance the Budget; if it had sent forth the word that legislation would be based on sound principles, tested by experience, and that all who contributed to industry, whether in the field of finance or of labor, would be protected in the legitimate fruits of their toil; if it had proclaimed that not only would the American Government respect its own contracts but that, so far as lay within its power, it would compel all citizens to do likewise; if, instead of engaging in a wild orgy of spending and borrowing, it had practiced actual economy, and had refrained from engaging in experimental policies so disquieting to our people, we should now be on a sound road to recovery.

If the American people had been convinced that this administration would follow only safe and sound policies, the enterprise of the American people would have asserted itself; money would have sought investment; industry would have revived; labor would have been employed; the farmer would have found a profitable market for his products; and the improvement so evident before the election of 1932 would have continued.

But the administration listened to the voice of those who would destroy the integrity of our dollar; it listened to the views of those who set up the false claim that we did not have sufficient money to transact the Nation's business; and yet at that very time we had more money in circulation than we had during the World War—more money than we had during the boom days of 1929. There was ample money in the United States to take care of every legitimate need, with existing machinery to increase the supply, on our then sound basis, should the occasion demand.

What, then, was the difficulty? The trouble was due to a loss of confidence. Much of the money in circulation had gone into hiding and had ceased to work. Idle money, like an idle individual, does not contribute to the welfare or prosperity of any community. What was needed, then, was the restoration of that confidence, which would induce the return of the money then in hiding again to enter the channels of industry. The administration, instead of doing those things which would have inspired confidence, announced a program of wild experimental legislation, thereby destroying what remained of confidence.

We have had too much loose talk about the redistribution of wealth by means of taxation; too much talk about the redistribution of wealth by legislative enactment. There is only one honest way to transfer wealth and that is by labor and service performed. Wealth can be destroyed by legislation, but it cannot be created in that way. Wealth can be created only by honest sweat. Some back must bend; some brain must work. Any other system attempted, whether practiced by the Government or by the individual, is a racket and nothing less.

Let us return to those old fundamentals of honesty and square dealing, and let the Government itself set the example. Let us again declare that we regard our obligations as sacred and wipe out the disgraceful repudiation policy of the present administration. Let us stand for the inviolability of contracts, both public and private. Let us guarantee, as far as the Government can do so, to any citizen the legitimate results of his toil and his industry. Let us return to real economy in government. Let us stop the profligate waste of public funds and have our income match our outgo. Let us return to these things which are nothing more than common honesty, common decency, and common square dealing. When we do so, we will soon be on the road to business recovery and to a national prosperity under which the American people as a whole will enjoy more happiness, have more of the comforts, necessities, and luxuries of life than can be had under any other system yet devised by man.

Mr. President, for more than a year President Roosevelt has been developing policies under the plea of a national emergency which have become increasingly at variance with his campaign assurances as well as constitutional limitations. It is becoming more apparent every day that he is not engaged in a program of the recreation of a nation of freemen but is steering closer to a system of collectivism and regimentation of finance, commerce, industry, and agriculture, directed and controlled by a colossal bureaucracy. The legislation enacted, as well as that now on the administration's program, furnishes overwhelming evidence that it is the purpose of the administration to make permanent the change in the character of government we have known for 145 years.

Congress and the country were assured by the President that the departures were temporary in character and to meet an emergency only, but now we are boldly told that many of them are to be permanent. The movement is a real conflict between the two ancient enemies—individualism versus collectivism—which have contended for mastery through the centuries, and which have resulted in some of the most desperate struggles recorded in the pages of history.

It is not a new struggle. It has raged down the entire highway of progress. The English-speaking people fought for a thousand years and shed their blood to throw off the shackles of state control. Our forefathers fought, bled, and died to establish the principle that governments were created for men, and not men for governments; to establish the right to live and plan their own lives, and pursue their own happiness in their own way—in a word, for liberty. These changes are being wrought by the party in power without submitting to the American people for their decision the question whether they want such a change.

Mr. President, if President Roosevelt's program is right in principle, then we have been wrong for 145 years; every statesman, regardless of party affiliation, from the time of Washington to the present has been wrong. If the present program is right, then both the great political parties have been wrong throughout their history. If it is right, then the Democratic Party was wrong in its platform in 1932, and Mr. Roosevelt was wrong in all of his public utterances before he became President of the United States and took upon himself a solemn oath to preserve and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

Mr. President, we have had entirely too much loose talk on the part of those high in authority about relegating those who believe in a rugged individualism to the museum. At the birth of our independence we declared in plain words:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

By that statement we founded a government based upon individual effort and rugged individualism, as distinguished from collectivism and regimentation of men. We established a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. We established the principle that the Government was for the individual and not the individual for the Government.

What is rugged individualism? It is the right to plan and pursue one's life in one's own way so long as he does not intrude upon the rights of others. It is his right to work, to toil, and to keep the fruits of his labor. It is nothing more than individual self-reliance, self-initiative, and self-help. It is synonymous with liberty. If individualism needs a defense, then that defense is best presented by the history of the United States, where it reached its greatest triumph and where it attained its greatest freedom.

I do not claim that our system is perfect. I do not contend that there have not been abuses. I do not maintain that all of the people have at all times been happy and prosperous under that system. But I do claim that during the greater part of our national existence there have been more happy, more prosperous people living under our flag than under any other flag in the entire history of the world. Under our system of constitutional government, with its fine guarantees of individual liberty, we have weathered many major business and industrial depressions and come out of each stronger, better, and more prosperous than before. It is my firm conviction that the ills from which we suffer today are caused, not by adhering to the time-honored principles upon which the Government rests but by a departure from those principles. Things will never be well in America until we get back to those simple purposes for which governments are established among men, until we get back to a government that devotes its energies to the protection of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness of its citizens. Most of our ills can be traced to the usurpation by the Government of the proper functions of its citizens. Our enormous and ever-increasing debts, our burdersome and ever-increasing taxation are largely occasioned by departures from the true purposes of government. When the Government gets back into the governing business and takes its hand out of every line of private enterprise, the cost of government will be in line with what people should pay for its protection.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the American people desire to exchange a government of the people, by the people, and for the people for a government by inquisition, by restriction, and by compulsion. While the American people have been patient as their individual rights have been invaded by the Government, they have been too long used to liberty to surrender them. Our liberty did not fall like manna from heaven, but came through years of sacrifice, suffering, bloodshed, and death. It is too precious to surrender without a struggle.

Mr. President, I am not an apologist for the Constitution. I believe in it. In my judgment, it is the greatest instrument of free government that ever emanated from the experience of man. We have had all of our prosperity under it, as well as this depression. The Constitution has not been repealed, but only disregarded and abandoned by those who have taken upon themselves a solemn oath to support and defend it.

Under the claim that an emergency exists, constitutional powers belonging to Congress have been delegated to the President, with the understanding at the time that it was for an emergency only. One after another of such powers have been given under this pretense, and now that the executive branch of the Government has them, the emergency pretense is audaciously abandoned with the avowed intention of making such delegations of power permanent.

I do not entertain the thought that the people have no right to modify or change their Constitution. It belongs to the people. It is their instrument of government, beyond which Congress has no right to go without their consent. They have a perfect right to change it in any respect or abandon it altogether. The people have the right to adopt any system of government they see fit to adopt—paternalistic, socialistic, communistic, or any system that suits them—providing they do it in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Constitution. They have the right to repeal the Bill of Rights, with its fine guaranties of individual liberty. But I deny the right of Congress to abrogate it or any part of it by legislative enactment. I deny the right of the President to destroy it to meet an emergency. Let the people vote upon the question of whether they want to follow the professors into sovietism or facism or desire the maintenance of constitutional government with its guaranty of human liberty.

Let me say, before concluding, that no man is good enough and wise enough to exercise dictatorial powers over a free people. No man who believes in American institutions and reveres American traditions desires to exercise such powers.

In this day of unrest every liberty-loving citizen should ponder this passage from Daniel Webster's speech at the centennial anniversary of Washington's birth:

> Other misfortunes may be borne, or their effects overcome. If disastrous war should sweep our commerce from the ocean, another generation may renew it; if it exhaust our Treasury, future industry may replenish it; if it desolate and lay waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again and ripen to future harvests. It were but a trifle even if the walls of yonder Capitol were to crumble, if its lofty pillars should fall, and its gorgeous decorations be all covered by the dust of the valley. All these might be rebuilt. But who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government? Who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity? No; if these columns fall, they will be raised not again. Like the Coliseum and the Parthenon, they will be destined to a mournful, a melancholy immortality. Bitterer tears, however, will flow over them than were ever shed over the monuments of Roman or Grecian art, for they will be the remnants of a more glorious edifice than Greece or Rome ever saw, the edifice of constitutional American liberty.

A marked rise in orders for shoes in wholesale quantities has been reported by St. Louis shoe manufacturers, and there has been an increase in employment in a number of St. Louis factories. Better commodity prices, including the prices on hides, have influenced the situation, officials of shoe companies pointed out, and retail stocks are running low. These conditions are reflected in increased buying by retail merchants.

REPORTS FLOOD OF UNFILLED ORDERS FOR COTTON CLOTH—TEXTILE ASSOCIATION SAYS MILLS COULD NOT MEET AUGUST DEMANDS

NEW YORK, September 12.—Further marked improvement in the country's cotton-textile industry was revealed today in figures issued by the Association of Cotton Textile Merchants.

Records were smashed during August, when sales of cotton cloth ran up a huge total of 510,531,000 yards, the largest monthly amount since comparative figures became available in January 1928.

Cotton mills were unable to turn out goods fast enough to keep up with the pace of the demand during August, and the month's sales, according to the association, were 282.4 percent of production, or 182.4 percent over the output.

As a result of the scramble by merchants to snap up all the cotton goods in sight, needing to replace stocks depleted by 3 years of business depression, a large backlog of unfilled orders developed.

"During the last 30 days", he said, "there has been a marked improvement in both the wholesale and retail drug business. I honestly believe things are on the mend."

BUSINESS IN AUGUST SHOWS SHARP UPTURN—ANNALIST'S INDEX OF ACTIVITY MAKES FIRST ADVANCE SINCE DECEMBER

NEW YORK, September 15.—The Annalist announced today that its index of business activity for August "shows an upturn for the first time since last December and the first advance of any magnitude since April 1931."

The preliminary index for last month is 54, against 51.7 for July and 73.5 for August 1931.

"A rise of 17.9 points in the adjusted index of cotton consumption", said the publication, "was the principal factor in the upturn. The adjusted indices of bituminous coal production and freight car loadings showed small increases, but all the other components of the index for which August figures or estimates are available declined. With the exception of the adjusted index of automobile production, which dropped to a new low record for the present depression, the declines were of comparatively small extent, so that the large increase in the adjusted index of cotton consumption easily turned the combined index upward."

TERMINAL FREIGHT INTERCHANGE GAINS; FIRST IN 3 YEARS—PRESIDENT MILLER REPORTS TRAFFIC INCREASE IN SEPTEMBER OVER AUGUST

Railroad freight-car interchanges by the Terminal Railroad Association are beginning to show an upturn after having declined steadily for 3 years, Henry Miller, president of the association, announced yesterday.

Interchanges for the first 2 weeks of September showed a gain of 970 cars over the first 2 weeks in August, despite the intervention of Labor Day holidays, which tended to hold traffic down.

The upturn has not been sharp nor prolonged enough for Miller to base a conclusion on it, but he was nevertheless greatly cheered by it.

The importance of the upswing as a barometer cannot be overestimated, since the moving of goods through the terminal here is the most reliable local index of business conditions. It is also a true measurement of the national business pulse, as the terminal handles interchanges for 28 connecting railroads whose aggregate mileage totals half that of the United States.

The increased service has to do entirely with freight movement.

It also was announced that traffic handled by the Missouri Pacific on Friday set a new record for the year, when revenue freight cars handled aggregated 3,699, while the previous 1932 record was 3,644 cars on January 9.

This will mean an additional expenditure of $30,000 a month, divided almost equally between labor and material, Baldwin said.

BANKERS AND INDUSTRIALISTS GET OPTIMISTIC REPORTS ON BUSINESS AND ECONOMIC RECOVERY—MORE CREDIT AND JOBS

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 22.—Optimistic reports, bulwarked by an impressive array of statistics, came before the banking and industrial committee of the Fourth District Federal Reserve bank today as guideposts along the path of business and economic recovery.

Indices of major items in the economic and financial structure of the country showed a 3 months' advance over a range of 4 to 200 percent.

"These recoveries", declared Col. Leonard P. Ayres, economic adviser to the committee, "make definitely the end of the financial panic. That is over.

"The business depression is still with us. But the best evidence that the corner is being turned is the fall increases now being reported in many kinds of business. There was no fall increase in 1930 or 1931."

ST. LOUIS DEPARTMENT STORE SALES BETTER THAN SEASONAL GAIN—CHECKS CASHED CLOSER TO TOTAL THIS PERIOD LAST YEAR

Department store sales in St. Louis have increased more than seasonally during the past 2 weeks, the improvement being reported in nearly all lines.

The St. Louis Clearing House Association yesterday also disclosed the volume of funds cashed through checks at its member banks has been making a closer approach during the past week or 10 days to the corresponding period of 1931. The last 8 business days reported, which include checks cashed up to and including last Saturday, total $100,000,000, a decline of only 9 percent under the 8 corresponding days of 1931, whereas the decrease had ranged from 25 to 50 percent during the greater part of the summer.

Bank clearings have been making a relatively better showing also, although the comparison here is vitiated by virtue of the Franklin-American clearings being included last fall. This bank has since been merged with the First National Bank.

Approaches last year

The increase in department store sales yesterday was described by Leo C. Fuller, vice president of Stix, Baer & Fuller, as the most genuine approach to the previous year's volume he has yet observed.

"It may be due in part to the general return of confidence, which has been evident since midsummer, and in part to some real improvement in fundamental conditions", he said. "At any rate, there is no mistake about the fact people are buying more freely.

"The actual number of units sold are equal to, if not above, a year ago, and we are confident the volume in dollars and cents will be above the corresponding period of last year by late fall. The reason why the dollar volume is behind now, of course, is due to the lower prevailing prices."

BUSINESS INCREASE REFLECTED IN HOTEL TRADE GAIN HERE—HOSTELRIES REPORT MORE SALES REPRESENTATIVES ARE COMING TO ST. LOUIS AND OPTIMISM IS FELT BY TRAVELING PUBLIC

All managers reported an increase in business during the last 5 or 6 weeks. Part of the new volume was declared seasonal, but it was generally stated sales representatives of all types of industry have been coming to the city in greater numbers than have been noted in the last 6 months or year.

The majority of these salesmen have reported a slow but definite resuscitation of business. Managers universally remarked a feeling of optimism among their salesmen guests which was not in evidence last year. Conventions were said to be better attended than last year, due to less anxiety over immediate business changes.

CHICAGO, ILL., September 22.—A heavy rush of speculative buying carried egg prices higher on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange today. An advance of five eighths of a cent a dozen brought the October delivery to 23⅛ cents and the November to 23¾ cents, the highest levels reached in more than a year. The volume of trading was the heaviest since May 13, 1930, sales totaling 467 carloads, or 5,604,000 dozen.

Dwindling supplies in storage and higher prices of stocks and grains gave the market its upward impetus.

The statements which are now appearing cover the quarter ended September 30. They show that the banks have further strengthened their liquid condition. Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, beginning with line 11, it is proposed to strike out through line 24, page 17, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

RESTRICTIONS ON LOANS BY MEMBERS, BROKERS, AND DEALERS

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any member of a national-securities exchange or any broker or dealer who transacts a business in securities through the medium of any such member, directly or indirectly, to extend or maintain credit or arrange for the extension or maintenance of credit to or for any customer for the purpose of carrying securities on margin.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment which I have just offered would be to strike from the bill that section which undertakes to regulate trading on margin account and substitute therefor a provision prohibiting margin trading.

One of the most difficult and controversial questions which the respective Senate and House committees have had to face in the drafting of the proposed Federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934 was the question of regulating so-called "margin accounts." The margin account is the technical name of that transaction by which the stock broker, having received from his customer a deposit in cash or securities known as a "margin", makes available to the customer credit for the purchase of stock-market securities. Ordinarily the customer signs an agreement authorizing the broker to rehypothecate whatever securities he may deposit and whatever may be purchased for his account, but he signs no note evidencing his obligation to the broker for that which is loaned to him. The account remains an open one, the customer's debit balance varying from day to day.

It follows from this simple arrangement that, on a rising market, when the value of securities goes up, the customer's equity is increased and he is able, if he so desires, to obtain additional credit for the purchase of more securities without being obligated to deposit any additional cash or securities. If, however, the market goes down, the broker calls upon the customer to put up more margin; that is, more cash or more securities, and if the customer permits his margin to be so nearly exhausted as to imperil the broker's security for the amount loaned, the broker has authority to sell the securities to protect himself, thus wiping out the customer's equity.

Of course, stock brokers do not have their own funds in sufficient amount to supply the vast volume of credit which is ordinarily loaned on margin, and, consequently, they become heavy borrowers from banks, rehypothecating the customers' collateral with banking institutions to obtain the funds to loan to the customers.

Margin trading is essentially a very impersonal transaction. It is not necessary that the broker have any personal acquaintance with the customer, or with his circumstances, nor is there any need for him to ask whether the customer can afford to take the risks which he necessarily assumes in purchasing stock-exchange securities. All that is necessary is that the customer shall deposit a margin, and the margin alone is the broker's protection. The bank from which the broker borrows is similarly protected because it knows the market price of the collateral deposited and knows that the broker is bound, in case of shrinkage of prices, to deposit additional collateral, or to force sales and pay off the loan. The broker, being under that obligation to the bank, is obliged to treat the customer's account with cold-blooded impersonality, and, in case of a falling market, must either exact from the customer additional cash or collateral, or, in the alternative, sell him out, whatever the loss may be.

The supplying of credit by a broker to a customer for the purpose of carrying speculative or investment securities creates a relationship which is fundamentally wrong, and that is the reason why the committees have found it difficult to regulate that relationship.

This bill is founded upon the theory that in some way an injury is inflicted on our business and financial life by the too easy flow of credit into the stock market. The bill frankly attempts to correct that evil by various devices. One is to limit the loans which brokers may make to their customers on each individual transaction. Another is an attempt to control the flow of funds into the stock market when such flow tends to become excessive, regardless of margins.

This attempt to regulate the extent to which brokers may lend to their clients, and the conditions under which they may borrow from banks or others for the purpose of effecting such credit extensions, is a recognition by the committees in charge of this legislation that margin trading in the stock markets is an element of danger. Yet the committees have both reported bills under which margin trading is to be permitted and protected. As a matter of fact, there is no sound reason which can be advanced why speculation on margins should be encouraged or protected by the Government at all, or even permitted.

What do the committee reports say about margin accounts and speculation? The Senate committee says:

> By the development of the margin account, a great many people have been induced to embark upon speculative ventures in which they were doomed to certain loss.

And again:

> Margin transactions involve speculation in securities with borrowed money.

The House committee, referring to the arrangements by which loans are made on margin, says:

> A magnificently organized lending machinery which operates by wire, can, with an offer of call-loan safety and 1 percent higher interest, draw funds from local banks which would otherwise seek moderate investment in local business enterprise, to finance the pool of a far-away metropolitan speculator distributing through the stock exchanges the securities of a huge corporate merger designed ultimately to swallow and destroy local enterprise. And there is a demonstrable direct relationship between easy credit for the purchase of new securities in the stock market and the trend toward industrial monopolies so accentuated since the war.

Of the speculation made possible by this magnificently organized lending machinery, the Senate committee says:

> Excessive speculation has caused acute suffering and demoralization. It has brought in its train social and economic evils which have affected the security and prosperity of the entire country.

And again:

> There can be little question that stock-market speculation is among the most potent of the factors which have contributed to the prolonged depression.

And again:

> When the crash finally came, brokers' loans were called, causing greater depreciation in the value of securities, including those held in bank portfolios.

Mr. President, we ought to be clear as to what we mean by speculation in securities. The word is used very loosely. The gentlemen from the stock exchanges have come down to Washington and told us that this country was built by speculation. That is true, in a sense. But certainly it was not built by the kind of speculation which went on in Wall Street, and, for that matter, in plenty of little Wall Streets all over the country in 1929 and again, in a small way, in July of last year.

Certainly no one wants to discourage the pioneer who is ready to risk his time, his money, long years of his life and the possibility of failure to launch another industry, a new enterprise which will add to our standards of living, our material comforts and give employment to large numbers of men. That is not the speculation which is aimed at in this bill. There is a difference between the man who builds a railroad, gives his fortune and his talents to the construction of new enterprise, and the man who goes into a broker's office in the morning to buy a hundred shares of railroad stock at one price on borrowed money in the hope that he may be able to sell it at a little higher price in the afternoon or on the next day.

This bill is aimed at speculation in securities. And by speculation in securities is meant the buying of securities, and chiefly common stocks, with the aim of making a profit out of fluctuations in the market price of those stocks. That is gambling. And that ought not to be carried on, under any circumstances, with borrowed money.

Men may differ about the ethical and economic and social effects of gambling. But there is at least one point on which there is no difference of opinion. And that is that no man should ever gamble with borrowed funds.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is not objecting to a man's gambling with his own money, as I understand?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is precisely the point. I realize that when a man wants to gamble with his own money, that is beyond our province.

Mr. LONG. But he is gambling.

Mr. BULKLEY. What I am objecting to is the providing of these exceptional facilities for gambling with other people's money.

Mr. LONG. There is many a little man today who has lost his bank account because his money was gambled on margin on the stock exchange. The man whose money was taken did not even have a chance to make a gain. They are gambling with the little people's money; that is what they are doing.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is exactly what is going on.

Security speculation is practically the only gambling game which can be carried on on credit, and with bank credit at that. You cannot go to a race track and make a bet on a horse race unless you have your money in your hand. There is no money desk in the betting ring where loans can be negotiated for betting purposes. And there ought not be a money desk on the floor of the stock exchange where any man, without any reference to whether he can afford it or not, whether he knows what he is doing or not, can borrow up to the hilt to take a flyer in any stock on the board.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DILL. How much does the margin trading amount to in 1 year in this country?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not know of any way of determining how many shares are dealt in in that way, but I can give the Senator information which will be helpful on that point. At the peak of the boom in 1929 there were approximately 1,300,000 active trading accounts on the books of members of the New York Stock Exchange. Of that number, approximately 550,000, or something less than 50 percent, were margin accounts.

Mr. DILL. I thought, perhaps, the Senator had found an estimate or some figures as to the total amount of money involved in margin trading.

Mr. BULKLEY. It is said that it would be impossible to compile such statistics, because trades on margin accounts are not separately recorded, but there is no reason to presume that the margin accounts are any more or less active than other accounts, and, therefore, we may say roughly that margin trading is between 40 and 50 percent of the amount of trading on the stock exchange. Of course that may vary according to the activities of the market.

Mr. DILL. Would the amendment, if adopted, go into effect in 1938?

Mr. BULKLEY. I was going to discuss that point a little later. If adopted in the exact form suggested, it would go into effect on October 1 of this year.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think there ought to be more time than that to work it out?

Mr. BULKLEY. I have no firm opinion on that point. I would be perfectly willing to make it effective at a later date. I do not think that is so material as it is to make the regulation itself.

As a matter of sober fact, the form of credit speculation to which I have referred is far worse than playing the horses on credit. A man goes to a race track and makes bets of a dollar or two, or five or ten, and manages to lose, if he is foolish, his week's earnings. But, on the stock exchanges, he throws away the savings of a lifetime.

Now this bill undertakes to control this dangerous practice by limiting the loans which brokers may make. A far better way would be to take the business out of the hands of brokers altogether.

There is a great deal of difference in the mere technique of making loans between the broker and the bank.

This difference is well stated by Mr. Woodlief Thomas, of the research staff of the Federal Reserve Board, in the hearings before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I quote from Mr. Thomas:

In the case of a bank loan the trader gives a note for certain specified amount. He signs the note. It is turned over to the bank. If he increases his commitments, he signs another note. As he makes payments on these loans, his note is credited by corresponding amounts and the debt is reduced. In the case of a trader operating through the brokerage house, all debits and credits are made on an open book account, under certain agreed-upon provisions, or rather certain requirements by the brokerage house as to what the customer shall do.

The customer may sign a slip covering these requirements, but he signs nothing showing the size of monetary obligation.

There is also a difference between a bank loan and a brokerage account in respect to title of the securities. In the case of a bank loan the individual borrower generally retains title in the security and simply pledges it as collateral for the note. In the case of a brokerage account the broker generally holds title to the security and has the right to hypothecate it in turn as security for his own loans at a bank. Generally, that right is given expressly by a little statement, which the customer must sign and which also appears in the broker's monthly statement, to the effect that the broker retains that right to hypothecate securities held on margin.

There is another distinction between bank loans and brokerage accounts, one which is rather important. In general, it may be stated that banks are a little more particular about whom they make loans to than a brokerage house. A bank will ordinarily make some credit investigation and find out about the credit standing of the individual. As a matter of fact, a bank will generally not make a loan to anyone who is not a customer of the bank, maintaining a deposit.

In the past, certainly in case of some brokerage houses and perhaps to a certain extent at present, it has been relatively simple to open up an account with a broker. The chief requirement was that the account should be adequately margined. If a man came in with $10,000 worth of securities and an order to buy or to sell, he generally found it relatively easy to open up an account.

Mr. President, we all know that the bank will not make a loan without requiring some credit information about the applicant. It does not make any difference whether the collateral offered is sound or not. A bank wants to know who is making the loan, something of the purpose of the loan, and whether the borrower is a good risk fundamentally.

The broker asks no questions. Anybody is a good risk who has the minimum margin required by settled market practice. In fact, brokerage firms have offices all over the country, issue market letters, carry on an incessant campaign of enticement to bring customers in. Their willingness to gamble is the first and chief requisite. If they have that, then the supplies of credit are practically inexhaustible.

Certainly if loans are going to be made for speculative purposes, the loans ought to be made by some agency which will be guided by sound lending principles and by sound banking practice, and it is certain that a stockbroker is not such an agency.

The subject of the technical operation of the margin account is so well discussed in a letter I have recently received from a constituent living in Cincinnati, that I am going to digress for a moment or two to read from that letter:

Now, extravagant speculation can only be fostered through the use of tremendous sums of borrowed money. First, millions of gamblers buy stock on margin. Then the brokers lend them the balance of the purchase price. The next operation is that the brokers borrow this money from the banks to cover their extension of credit to their customers, and thus brokers' loans are created. Now Congress is attempting to regulate the margin, whereas the margin is not the dangerous factor, except that 98 percent of the public lose their margins. The dangerous fact is the creation of brokers' loans that can never be liquidated except through the forced sale of the stocks in a panic, that always wipe out the margin.

This is too important a subject to gloss over, or to compromise.

I know that the brokers are bringing great pressure on Congress to continue marginal accounts, but the danger is not in the margins, it is in the brokers' loans that are created by the margins. Congress must understand that brokers' loans are the most unusual class of loan. Unlike any other commercial credit, brokers' loans have no element of self-liquidation. A non-self-liquidating loan is a permanent loan that can only be paid off through the forced sale of assets. Now brokers' loans can only be paid off at the end of a speculative era through the forced sale of the collateral stocks, which causes or accentuates a stock-market panic. Now, the stock-market panic on October 23, 1929: The first spasm ended on November 13 of the same year, but periodically, through a period to June of 1932, these brokers' loans were continually under forced liquidation until stocks were forced to 0.1 of their former prices. These loans were liquidated from eight and one half billion dollars down to $250,000,000.

Now you can see that the forced liquidation of brokers' loans caused everybody that had stocks on margin to lose their margin, and in this case the public took losses estimated between nine and ten billion dollars. There were no original margins big enough to withstand the shrinkage. No country can take these staggering losses without feeling the effect, and the effect was a terrific curtailment of the buying power of the public through these staggering losses, plus fear and the loss of confidence. The next effect was the terrific curtailment of business. We know this happened, and we know that this curtailment of business threw 12,000,000 people out of work, whose buying power was destroyed to the tune of $60,000,000,000 in the past 4 years. Nobody can dispute this fact.

But the disasters did not stop here, because with the curtailment of business to 25 percent of normal, the profits which normally used to pay interest charges disappeared, and thus there were billions of defaults in bank loans, mortgages, and bonds. This destroyed confidence in most credit and froze billions of credit. Now you begin to understand why the banks were affected, because they had much of the credit that was involved, either because it was in default or frozen. But in addition, since confidence in credit was destroyed, it demoralized the bond market, so that the bonds held by the banks had terrifically declined. Thus confidence in banks was shaken, and hoarding came in waves. Deposits declined from fifty-six billions to under forty billions, which caused the banks to liquidate their assets. But this was impossible to do, so 5,000 or 6,000 of them failed, many through no fault of their own. Thus confidence in the remaining banks was destroyed until President Roosevelt declared the bank holiday. England and Canada do not have wholesale bank failures, because they do not permit marginal accounts and brokers loans as we do.

In recounting the above I want to bring out the fact it was not the margins that caused the trouble in the first place. It was the liquidation of these brokers loans, which was the result of margins. Of course, the loss of margins started the lack of buying power. Therefore, don't you see, as a counselor, it is very dangerous for Congress to recognize margin accounts. You are legalizing the biggest gambling game in the world, of which the public know nothing, wherein 98 percent of them always lose.

Why should Congress get into hot water by recognizing marginal accounts and try to standardize them. You are simply standardizing the borrowing capacity of millions of gamblers who are not entitled to credit, who are able to put up their life savings as margin, thus they are gambling on a shoe string.

The economic conditions call for a discontinuance of margin accounts. Prevent the brokers from accepting marginal accounts wherein they have to borrow money on brokers' loans with their customers' stock as collateral. Prevent the banks from making these dangerous brokers' loans that have no element of self-liquidation. When a panic starts the banks and brokers liquidate brokers' loans by selling the collateral; that accentuates and continues the panic until it spreads to all lines where all values are liquidated, because economic pressure is exerted in every direction. This is too dangerous a subject to temporize with. It has always caused the period of distress to millions of people that starts a chain of disastrous events.

If Congress would adopt the process that I have suggested, it would force everyone desiring to gamble in stocks to go to their local banks for their speculative accommodations.

The banks would not lend money to their local customers unless they disclosed their financial statement, which would show that 80 percent of those desiring speculative accommodations were not entitled to them. It would establish an educational campaign against speculation where there is no possibility to win, because of brokers' loans, whereas the brokers always encourage the worst type and never look into the financial status of anyone.

Don't you see that the brokers should not be considered in this law, because the havoc they wrought in commerce, in banking, was terrific? The public and the United States should be given first consideration.

The proposed law is good in everything except the recognition of marginal accounts; and if you recognize marginal accounts, you have not corrected the weakness in our speculative system and the same conditions we had in 1927 to 1929 will be reenacted. It does not matter whether the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Trade Commission is given authority to regulate margins; public pressure will be brought to bear against them when they endeavor to raise margin requirements, but, no matter what percentage of margin they establish, it will be too late to stop the public when they become overconfident and when the easy facilities of gambling in stocks are ever present to them from every angle.

It is foolish to regulate margins. You must regulate the public, and this regulation can only be done by forcing them to go to their local banks for speculative accommodations, where they can be advised and cautioned against this hazardous game, where they can be refused speculative accommodations when they are not entitled to them. Think of the ribbon clerks, the janitors, the workingmen, small business men, and millions of employees who got into the market in 1929 because they had enough margin to buy two or three times the amount of stock they should have purchased, through the ease with which they borrowed the remainder of the purchase price, whereas if they had had to go to their local bank they would have been refused and thus they could not have speculated, which would have saved the United States of America from our present debacle.

The marginal system is all wrong wherein the individual who is not entitled to this class of credit borrows the remainder from the broker. Then he goes to the bank and borrows money without disclosing the fact that he has borrowed on stocks, but still considers his margins as cash or stocks, and so states it at the bank.

Furthermore, he goes to his merchandiser and gets credit for goods purchased. The merchandiser thinks he is O.K. In all cases his margin eventually will be lost, because 98 percent of those who buy stocks on margin lose their money. As a matter of fact, the granting of credit on securities should be concentrated in banks. Then the banks would actually know the financial condition of each individual. Take the case of the big men in New York City. Their company borrows money, they personally borrow money at the bank, in addition to which they borrow money on margin at the brokers, but they do not disclose this last fact. As a matter of fact, the individual very rarely knows he borrowed money from the brokers, because he thinks his margin is his only commitment. He does not have to sign notes with the broker for this borrowed money, and hence is not impressed with this fact, and eight and one half billion was borrowed this way in 1929.

If you compromise, the old speculative system is still as bad as ever.

Mr. President, the lending of money is the proper business of the banker and not of the stock broker, and it is important to keep all phases of the banking business in the banks. It is true that banks have been criticized for having in the past loaned excessively to support speculation, and it is true that the Congress felt impelled to write into the Banking Act of 1933 additional safeguards to prevent the excessive use of bank funds for speculative purposes. These safeguards are already in the law, regardless of what is written in the bill we are now about to pass.

But, after all, experience does show that the banker is much more to be trusted than the broker in the matter of loans on speculative securities. Back in the 1920's we saw the rise of the bootleg loan market, and we saw also the terrible consequences visited on us by that. In September 1926, $3,219,000,000 was loaned in the stock market on loans to brokers. Three years later, in September 1929, this had grown to the enormous total of $8,549,000,000. But the significant thing about this is that these loans, while handled largely through New York banks, were not all made with New York bank money. In September 1926, the New York banks had loaned $1,010,000,000 to brokers. That was only one third of the whole total. By September 1929, when the market was at its height, the total of loans by the New York banks of their own funds was practically the same—only $1,071,000,000.

It will perhaps surprise many to be told that these vast lendings in the stock market were not made by the New York bands, which we have grown to think are so wicked. Is it not plain that, if the banks had been in control of this situation, the extreme expansion of bank credit in the stock market would not have taken place?

In 1926 the New York banks' street loans were only one third of the total. In 1929 they were less than one eighth of the total. The reason why we had this expansion was that the brokers could go to all sorts of people for money, and that all sorts of persons and agencies could lend their money in the stock market.

We had before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee reports from corporations which used the stock market as a convenient and profitable place to lend their surplus cash reserves. For instance, there is in the record of the committee's hearings a report from one corporation—the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey—that it made loans every day ranging from $75,000,000 to over $97,000,000 in the month of September 1929. (See part 14, Senate hearings, p. 6365.) Another corporation, the Cities Service Co., made loans every month in the market, on one day as high as $40,000,000, and not one dollar of this money went through a bank. It was loaned directly to brokers and to customers. The Electric Bond & Share Co. in 1929 loaned one hundred millions daily.

Corporations, foreign lenders, institutions, investment trusts, wealthy persons, placed their funds in the market. A great deal of this money was loaned through the banks. That is to say, the banks were directed by the depositor to lend so many dollars in the call market. The bank had no discretion. If the bank refused, the depositor would take his deposits over to another bank. In 1929, $3,907,000,000 was loaned in the market by such lenders through their banks, and another $1,472,000,000 was loaned by them without the interposition of any bank—a total of $5,379,000,000 flooding into the stock market from corporations, institutions, and so forth, which are not in the banking business at all and have no business engaging in that kind of credit activity.

The way to put an end to this sort of thing is to prohibit the broker from making loans to his customers or from getting loans for speculative purposes on customers' stocks from banks. Then the man who wants to speculate will have to have something with which to speculate. There is no use trying to stop people from speculating or gambling. The pending bill does not attempt to do this. We have a right to say to people, however, "Speculate as much as you wish; but if you do so, you will have to do it with your own money."

Then, if a citizen wishes to try his luck in the stock market, he will have to use his own resources. Of course, if he has credit and can satisfy sound credit requirements, he will be able to borrow money to speculate; but we may be sure that he will have to have the basic requisites of bank credit before he can get money. He will not be able to go into a broker's office and get a thousand, ten thousand, a hundred thousand dollars without so much as making out a note. He will have to go to a bank to do his borrowing, and there he will be subject to the scrutiny which a bank gives to any loan. Now, we may say as much as we please about the foolishness of the banks in 1929, but here is the plain fact that the New York banks, which are supposed to extend this credit in Wall Street, called a halt on their own loans in 1926 and thereafter never expanded them until after the crash, when they attempted to save the situation. The banks that restricted market loans in that mad era can be depended on to do it again, and the brokers who expanded loans to the bursting point in that era can be depended on to do that again. They should be kept out of the banking business.

The loan which the broker makes to the customer for carrying a speculative account is in its nature not a legitimate loan, because it is not motivated primarily by the desire to receive a reasonable return on the amount loaned, although it is usual that the broker does charge the borrowing customer a higher rate of interest that he in turn pays to the bank from which he borrows the funds. The real motive of the loan is the stimulation of speculation, to the end that the broker may earn his commissions on the operations in the customer's trading account.

The great facility with which the lenders of money for speculative purposes may be protected by promptly closing out the borrower's accounts creates a situation of minimum risk for the lender and maximum risk for the borrower. It is at least impolitic, if not unconscionable, that we should protect a system by which the lender is induced by other reasons than the merit of the loan to extend credit in the first place and then is induced by self-interest and even compelled, for self-preservation, to use this extraordinary facility for collecting the loan by selling out the borrower's securities, even though it be to the great loss, or even the destruction, of the borrower.

An entirely different situation is created if the customer is required to bring in his own funds for speculative purposes.

If he must borrow he should be required to borrow from someone interested only in the loan and not in some other profit, and without such a one-sided advantage with respect to being able to destroy the equity of the borrower.

There is another aspect to this problem which ought not to be overlooked. When a broker buys stock for a client, he usually has the stock transferred to his own name on the books of the corporation. The result is that a large percent of the shares of many corporations will be found registered in brokers' names. The clients care nothing about this, but the brokers do. Back in 1929 it was common to see as high as 30 to 60 percent of all the common shares of a large corporation standing in the name of stockbrokers. The reports submitted to the Senate committee by corporations in response to our questionnaire give the facts. In the case of one of our big automobile corporations—Chrysler—64.52 percent of all the shares were registered in brokers' names in 1929. In the case of American Can, 39.49 percent of all shares were in the possession of brokers. We cannot overlook the seriousness of these facts. We have to ask ourselves whether it is a wise thing for American industry to have so immense a part of control over its affairs in the hands of men who make a living out of stock-market gambling and speculation. Is it any wonder that American corporations lent themselves to so many curious devices for the purpose of whipping up speculation?

The Senate committee has evidence in its reports from brokers that in 1929, throughout the whole year, the number of persons who operated on Wall Street on margin accounts was only a little over 550,000. It is difficult for many to believe this, in view of all we have heard about the millions of people who speculated in securities. Some five to seven million people bought securities and owned them, invested their savings in them, paid cash for them, and put them away because they were told these were the safest repositories for their life's earnings; but only a little over half a million people did the wild speculating we have heard about. But they visited their evil effects upon the five to seven million American investors who took no part in this wild game.

The investor comes into the market when he has surplus earnings to place. Obviously, he has surplus savings only in periods of prosperity. At such times these half million gamblers, big and little, professional and amateur, playing their game with stocks, instead of with dice or cards, and doing it with the money of the people which they borrow from brokers, but much of which comes out of banks and institutions belonging to investors, drive the prices of shares up to unreasonable heights. Uninformed and trusting investors are lured into buying shares at 2 and 3 and 5 times their true value; and when the bubble breaks, and the game blows up, it is these investors who are left with their losses. Such people have not shown that they can protect themselves.

We need not worry about protecting the speculators from each other; but we do have the duty of guarding the great mass of thrifty people who are made the victims of this game. The surest way to do it is to stop brokers from lending money to customers.

I quote from the committee report:

> It is estimated that more than 10,000,000 individual men and women in the United States are the direct possessors of stocks and bonds; that over one fifth of all the corporate stock outstanding in the country is held by individuals with net incomes of less than $5,000 a year. Over 15,000,000 individuals hold insurance policies, the value of which is dependent upon the security holdings of insurance companies. Over 13,000,000 men and women have savings accounts in mutual savings banks, and at least 25,000,000 have deposits in National and State banks and trust companies—which are in turn large holders of corporate stocks and bonds.

These are the investors who are maintaining the stability of American investments and of American business. These are the investors who are making possible the growth and development of our commerce, industry, and transportation. These investors need protection against a recurrence of the disastrous effect of the wild speculation engaged in by some half million margin traders; and it is far more important that these legitimate investors have that protection than that the gamblers on margin accounts should be protected against themselves.

In view of the importance of the elimination of margin trading, the committee's reason for failing to put such a provision in the bill seems wholly inadequate.

What is that reason? I quote from the report:

> The committee has deemed it unwise at this juncture to adopt a measure calculated to abolish margin trading because of the deflationary consequences which might follow. Nevertheless, it feels that the time has arrived to remove the control of credit in margin transactions from the hands of those who, by reason of their self-interest, are least qualified to administer such control—the stock exchanges and their members.

If the pending amendment should be adopted, it would, according to the terms of the bill, become effective on October 1, 1934, thus allowing more than 4 months for adjustments to be made, and to mitigate whatever of deflationary effect it might have. If it be seriously contended that this period is not sufficient, we may adopt another amendment to give this provision a later effective date. But we should not, through fear of a temporary effect upon stock-exchange prices, fail to take this opportunity to write into law a reform so much needed as the elimination of margin trading. There is always pressure for legislation coming from many different interests. It is not often that Congress gives its attention to the stock exchange, and while we are giving that attention, we should make our reform completely effective. The opportunity to do so may not soon come again.

There is another aspect to the question of legislation with respect to margin trading. This is the first time that Congress has undertaken any regulation of stock-exchange practices. Margin trading has therefore grown up and been tolerated, but has never been definitely sanctioned by act of Congress. Section 7 in the bill, as reported by the committee, is an official sanction to margin trading under regulation. It gives Federal protection to a device which experience has shown as not justified by any economic need, and which has been an important factor in bringing about the most disastrous consequences ever known in our financial history.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not approve writing into the law an official recognition and sanction of a provision protecting the device of margin trading.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have listened with pleasure to the admirable address of the Senator from Ohio, who has presented his case quite impressively. I must say, however, that I do not think we have reached the point when we can do away with marginal trading.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] asked what is the annual volume of marginal trading. I do not believe the figures have been segregated, but on page 50 of the very excellent report entitled "Stock Market Control", by the Century Fund, Inc., there appear statistics as to the amount of business done on the New York Stock Exchange.

It is shown that on January 1, 1934, the date of the statement, there were outstanding 1,209 issues of stock, and 1,293,299,937 shares had been traded in the year previous, having a market value of $33,094,757,244. That was the extent of the trading in stocks. During the same year bonds were traded in of the market value of $34,861,000,000.

The testimony before our committee was to the effect that about 40 percent of the business done on the New York Stock Exchange is marginal trading. Therefore, an amendment such as that pending would have a very drastic and a very serious effect.

Mr. DILL. The margin trading amounts to probably $25,000,000,000 annually.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; something like that annually, the total being $33,000,000,000 of stocks in market value, and about $34,000,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I take it the Senator will admit that the adoption of my amendment would not necessarily put to an end all of the business which is now done on margin, because some of the customers who trade on margin would be entitled to credit and might borrow the money from their banks; so that it is impossible to say exactly how much business might be prevented if this amendment were the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I cannot favor the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am reminded by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] that in the committee I voted for the proposal contained in his amendment, or a kindred proposal; which may be so. Unhappily, however, I did not vote for it with any expectation that it would be adopted. Congress is not opposed to stock gambling. That has been demonstrated over and over again. The Senate was not even interested in one of the most impressive speeches I have ever heard on the floor of this Chamber, the one just delivered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. At a liberal estimate, he had not a dozen Senators hearing what he was saying.

If I voted for the proposal in committee, it was with little expectation or hope that it might prevail but merely to emphasize my consistent attitude toward stock gambling. I do not think Monte Carlo is comparable with the New York Stock Exchange when it comes to outright gambling.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield for that purpose.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it would be futile to suggest the absence of a quorum for me, just as it would have been had I suggested the absence of a quorum for the Senator from Ohio, and not more Senators would listen to me on this problem than listened to the Senator from Ohio, if as many.

Four years ago I undertook in some measure to correct this frightful evil. I presented an amendment to a revenue bill which came over from the House, in which I undertook to define the difference between an investment and a plain, outright gamble on the stock exchange. I had one of the most competent actuaries in this country prepare for me the statistics and make a chart, from which it was shown that 12 years theretofore the average period a stock on the New York Stock Exchange was held was 67 days, and at the time the chart was prepared the average already had been reduced to 22 days. Yet they called that investment.

The only way to define the difference between a gamble and an investment is to introduce the time element. Nobody invests his money and then stands at a ticker to learn what the price of the stock will be 10 minutes, or 2 hours, or 2 weeks thereafter. Nobody invests his money for a month or for 2 months. He speculates, and in 95 percent of the cases, he gambles with the money.

I proposed, therefore, to impose a tax on all transfers of stock on the stock exchanges generally where the seller of the stock had not held the property for at least 60 days, and I could not get a member of the Finance Committee, even of my own party, to begin to sanction the proposal to assess a tax against these gamblers who periodically destroy the business of this country. Therefore I did not press the amendment. I attempted thereafter in some measure through banking legislation to abate the evil.

Had a tax of that sort prevailed in 1929 it would have put $6,000,000,000 into the Federal Treasury. We could have afforded to have abolished all other forms of taxation. Either that, or it would have tremendously abated this miserable gambling on stocks.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] a while ago asked the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] a question as to the extent of this form of stock gambling. One of the great New York newspapers which prides itself—yes, actually prides itself, and perhaps properly so—upon being an organ of the vested interests, stated in 1929, when brokers' loans exceeded eight and one half billions of dollars, that 90 percent of the transactions on the stock exchange for that week had been as much gambling as betting on the arrow at a roulette table. And that is true. It is not anything but gambling.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have always understood that the results from roulette betting are a little less drastic; that, at least, a man does not lose any more money than he puts up; in other words, he does not have a deficiency judgment against him.

Mr. GLASS. I have no doubt that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana can enlighten the Senate better upon that subject than I can. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, we have made some progress in trying to control this evil. In the first place, the Banking Act of 1933 penalizes the use of Federal Reserve banking facilities and member banking facilities for this purpose. The prohibition had been in the law since it was first enacted, but no penalty attached, and therefore little attention was paid to the prohibition; so little attention, indeed, that when the Federal Reserve authorities here in Washington undertook a mild admonition against the use of Federal Reserve facilities in New York for stock speculative purposes, the president of the then greatest bank in America practically told the Board to go to hell, and announced that on the next day, despite the textual prohibition of the law, he intended to rediscount at the Federal Reserve bank in New York to the extent of $25,000,000 and loan the amount to brokers at a specified interest rate. He ought to have been put off the executive board of the Federal Reserve bank before the lunch hour the next day, and yet he was permitted to serve out his term—and came pretty near serving another term.

On the New York Stock Exchange, as pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, the loans were not all made by the New York banks, as most people suspect. There were more loans—yes; three times the amount of loans—made on account "for others", meaning out-of-town banks, country banks, and, particularly, corporations, than were made by the New York banks to stockbrokers. I wish that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio might receive serious and favorable attention.

An hour ago in a session of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency a business man was complaining bitterly about the great tax upon industry under the Securities Act; that a corporation in his State of Kentucky had been compelled to expend $75,000 in order to make the report required under one of the provisions of the Securities Act.

Thereupon ensued a brief discussion of investment securities, as they are called—some call them speculative securities; I call them outright gambling—and I asked this gentleman if he would indicate, in his judgment, what percentage of persons who engaged in stock speculation on the exchanges had the remotest idea of the condition of the companies there represented by their stocks, as to whether they were paying dividends, or losing money, or anything about them, and it will surprise the Senate to have me state that his answer was that less than 5 percent, outside the professional speculators and brokers, had the remotest idea of the condition of the companies in whose stock they were buying and speculating.

That being so, it made me wonder how much good is to be accomplished by the provision in the pending bill to require detailed reports, and how many people who speculate in stocks, as the more polite call it, or who gamble in stocks, as I insist upon calling it, will know the meaning conveyed by such reports, or how many of them will take the time to look at one of the reports. Speculating in stocks is going on from one end of the country to the other.

One of my colleagues not now here present took the liberty of indicating to the gentleman I just mentioned that I was in favor of abolishing gambling on margin, and asked what effect it would have. His answer was that it would create chaos. I said, "My heavens, could it create any more chaos than was created in 1929, and that exists today in consequence of the chaos which was created in 1929 on account of marginal gambling?"

I have yet to receive his answer to that inquiry.

But I shall not longer detain the Senate. It is futile to try to convince Congress that a stop ought to be put to stock gambling.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. NORRIS. I prefer not.

Mr. President, in my judgment, we are about to vote on the most important provision in this bill, one which is more important than the bill itself. We have now an opportunity, by the adoption of this amendment, to do for the business world something which we have not had an opportunity to do for years, and which we will probably, as the Senator from Ohio says, not have another opportunity to do for years to come.

I have followed the activities of the Banking and Currency Committee as well as I could during the many months it has toiled on this question, and I want to say, Mr. President, that I think that committee are entitled to an unlimited amount of credit for the good work they have accomplished. They had a very difficult task, technical somewhat in its nature, one in which the country was vitally interested. As a partial result of that committee's work, we have this bill before us. However, what surprises me more than anything else is that the committee, laboring as it has for these many months, and having brought forth this bill, have left out of it what, in my judgment, is the most vital thing of all. We can entirely rectify that omission by adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. I wish every Member of the Senate, without anything else to bother him or to think about, could sit down quietly and read the speech just delivered by the Senator from Ohio, as well as the speech delivered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. It seems to me that every student who wants to help bring our country out of the dilemma in which it now is cannot help but reach the conclusion that this amendment is one of the most just and is the fairest of any proposition of legislation that has come before the Congress in many a year.

It deals with a subject of which the whole country has knowledge. In every hamlet in the United States men are buying on margin on the stock market in New York City; every man, woman, and child in the country knows that practice is going on daily and has been going on for years.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that they are not buying at all; they are betting on margin.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is a great deal better. Everyone knows the evil which is involved in that practice; we all understand it; but when the report of this great committee comes before us the chairman, in his brief opposition to the adoption of the amendment, says it is not time to do it now; that the wisdom of adopting this amendment at the particular moment is doubted. Nobody denies that it is right; no question is raised about its being just; no question is raised about its being aimed at the greatest gambling institution on earth; and yet it is said, "Do not do it now; let them gamble awhile longer and then we will remedy it." The Senator stated that a witness told him that chaos would come if such an amendment were adopted. Chaos did come in 1929, and chaos is yet with us. One of the reasons why it came—perhaps not the only one, but one of the reasons—is conceded by everybody to have been the gambling that was going on on the New York Stock Exchange on margin. Why should stockbrokers loan money to keep the institution going? If it be right to gamble on the stock exchange, then one ought to be able to play poker for money and still remain in good standing in the church.

Mr. BARKLEY. Should not one also have a right to borrow in order to play poker?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. President, if this amendment shall be adopted, the man who wants to gamble on the stock exchange will have to go to his bank or some other place to borrow his money. He cannot borrow through the instrumentality of the stockbrokers, who require him to put up a security and who look into nothing except the margin, who make no investigation of his character or of his financial standing.

Mr. LONG rose.

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana. If he goes to his banker to borrow the money, if it is for a legitimate purpose and he has got a good cause for borrowing, he may get it, but otherwise he could not do so. Suppose one were to go to this banker to borrow $10,000, and the banker asks, "What do you want the money for?" and the borrower replies, "There is a great poker game going on across the street and I am going over to play poker with the money", unless one were perfectly sound otherwise, and probably not even then, he would not get the money of any banker under those circumstances. If one should go to his banker and say, "I want to borrow $10,000 to gamble on margin on the stock exchange of New York", he would not get anything; the banker would not lend it to him. It would not be a legitimate loan; it would not be respectable, because it would be gambling.

I have no objection, if a man wants to gamble, to his taking his own money and going out and gambling, but a poker game is respectable compared to betting on margin; and, as I said awhile ago, when one engages in a poker game he uses his own money or he puts up his own security right on the table in the presence of everybody and they can see what it is.

Now I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that this amendment does not purport to do the terrible thing of stopping gambling. It merely applies the same ethics that obtain in a colored crap game or a poker game. It does not stop gambling; it simply prevents it from wrecking the other man who is not even sitting in the game.

Mr. NORRIS. The effect will be to stop gambling; at any rate, it will decrease it very much, because people will not be able to obtain the money with which to gamble on margin.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that it is not even the broker's money which they borrow? The broker borrows from the bank.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. And the whole banking system of the country is involved in the vicious practice.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. It is our money with which they are gambling—the depositors' money.

Mr. GLASS. Not much of it is mine. [Laughter.] But, at any rate, it is not the brokers' money. The brokers themselves borrowed $8,500,000,000 in 1929 from the banks and from the corporations to loan to people with which to gamble on margins. It was not even the brokers' money.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment does not prevent a bank from loaning money on a security. Therefore, if a man had enough money to put up a thousand dollars with a broker with which to buy a hundred shares of some stock upon which a thousand dollars was the margin requirement, the broker would take that stock and borrow from a bank the additional amount of money necessary to pay for it. That same man could take his thousand dollars and go to a bank and put up the thousand dollars with the bank, and the bank would buy the stock and loan him the balance sufficient to pay for the stock on the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. NORRIS. To pay the margin?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the difference.

Mr. NORRIS. If he is buying the stock, that is a different proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difference between the margin that he puts up with the broker or the banker and the total cost of the stock he would borrow from the banker, just as the broker borrows it from the banker and lends it to the investor or the speculator or the gambler, whichever he may be. I am wondering, therefore, so long as the banks are allowed to loan money upon collateral to an individual who, instead of going to his broker, goes to his bank and borrows the money, whether the amendment which is now under consideration would very largely curtail the speculation of individuals who had enough money to put up for margin either with a bank or with a broker.

Mr. GLASS. May I say to the Senator from Kentucky, although it is not particularly informing to him because he is well aware of the fact, but to the Senate, that we have gone a long way in the Banking Act of 1933 to prevent a bank from loaning its funds on speculative securities.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, but in the very bill we are now considering, we provide that a broker may not borrow any money on a listed security except from a member bank of the Federal Reserve System, so as to concentrate all their borrowings on securities with the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; but, as if to apprehend that some such thing as that would be done, fortunately in the Banking Act of 1933 we gave the Federal Reserve authorities for the first time complete supervision over bank loans for investment and speculative purposes, and we denied, under penalty the Federal Reserve banks the right to make speculative loans.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand it, the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky affords no reason why we should vote against this amendment. If the suggestion means anything it means that when we adopt this amendment there is still an opportunity to gamble on stocks. I admit that, but that it will very materially cut down the opportunity is admitted by everyone.

If I have money of my own, or if the Senator has money and he wants to buy on margin, he or I can put up the margin and buy. This will only prohibit the common practice of the stockbroker when the price goes down and more margin is required from borrowing it from a bank.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not very expert in these matters, and I know less about speculating in commodities than I do about speculating in securities, because I am not on the committee that deals with that subject, but suppose that a similar amendment were offered and adopted preventing the purchase of wheat or corn, or any other commodity, upon an exchange except for cash, what effect would that have on the price? I am asking the question purely for information.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I think I can answer the Senator's question. When we come to wheat there are two sides to the question. The same thing is true with reference to any commodity similar to wheat, such as corn or oats or any other product sold for future delivery. There we have what is known as hedging. A great many dealers and millers claim that it is necessary for their own protection to have the right to hedge. If they want to operate their mill they buy 50,000 bushels of wheat to be delivered 3 months from the date of purchase, when they think they will need it. If they did nothing else but buy at a certain price, and wheat went down and they had to pay the stipulated price, they would have to sell the flour made from the wheat in a lower market, and hence they would lose lots of money. To protect himself, the miller, the day he buys the 50,000 bushels of wheat, goes on the board of trade and sells 50,000 bushels of wheat, so one hand washes the other. If wheat goes up he loses on one purchase and gains on the other, and vice versa.

But there is no such element involved here. Let us take the stock of an automobile company. It is bought on margin. The stock goes down. The broker borrows the money or arranges so that the buyer can borrow the money to get some more of the stock, and it goes further down. The result of such practices is that thousands of clerks, workmen, business men, professional men, are started on the road to ruin by virtue of the fact that they think they know the stock is going up. They borrow some money and lose it. A bank clerk takes money out of the bank and gambles with it, with the honest intention of putting it back, and believing that he will, but he does not, because the stock goes down and he does not get the money he expected. He either commits suicide or goes to the penitentiary. The gambling goes on just the same.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not have in mind in my question the practice of hedging in the purchase of wheat or corn or cotton. I realize where a man makes large commitments for cotton or corn or wheat or any other commodity traded in on the commodity exchange for future delivery he must protect himself against an adverse market at the time when he would be required to fulfill his contract. I had in mind especially, not the man who is engaged in business of that sort but the man who speculates in cotton or wheat or corn, just as a man goes to some broker's office and speculates in stocks.

It is a fact that the securities of the country represent about one half of our total wealth. I was amazed the other night, reading an authoritative book on the subject, to learn that one half of our total wealth is represented by securities. Those securities are held by banks, insurance companies, endowed colleges and universities of all kinds.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and everyone of them suffers by reason of the fact that somebody else is gambling in their stocks.

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps so, and perhaps not always. What I have in mind is that they have invested in those stocks and bonds because they regard them as safe investments and because in an emergency they have a market for obtaining immediate cash because of the liquid condition of the stocks and bonds in the stock market. Admitting all the evils, which I do admit, in the promiscuous gambling or speculation in stocks just on a hunch that a stock is going up or its sale on a hunch that it is going down—admitting all that, the question that bothers me is, if we curtail transactions in stocks and bonds rather suddenly so as to destroy the liquidity of the market for those stocks and bonds which are held to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars by the banks, the insurance companies, colleges, and hospitals, and private individuals in the country, whether we have not created a greater evil for the time being than the one we are trying to correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I finally get the idea at which the Senator is driving. There are some evils on the board of trade which this measure will not remedy. Various committees of Congress and various State legislatures have for years been wrestling with some of those evils, but they have not yet solved them. That is no reason why we should not solve the riddle while we have it before us. The colleges and other organizations to which the Senator refers are not gambling in stocks. They are not buying stocks on margin. If they have to sell, they sell their stock. They can do that even though there is not a gambler who is buying on margin.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that they have invested their money, but if something is done that drives down the price of the stock they hold as a part of their investment, because we have crippled the liquidity of the market for it, they have been injured, although they, themselves, are not gambling.

Mr. NORRIS. That may occur, but we must remember if the value of any stock has been raised above its real worth—I do not admit that it has been, but just assuming that it has been—and if gambling in a stock has lowered its price on the market below its real worth and a dealer has to sell as a result of that fact, or if he has bought when it was forced up by virtue of gambling and sells on a lower market, he will lose money, of course. That is probably true at any time, no matter when we should put the provisions of the bill into effect. But that is no reason why we should not stop stock gambling if we can. That is no defense against our protecting millions of our people who are being robbed daily and yearly by gambling in futures and on margin. It is no defense against that protection to say that if we afford such protection stock may go down. If some stock has been artificially raised in price by virtue of gambling and we stop stock gambling, the stock will go down where it ought to be, and where it ought to have been all the time. If a man buys on a rising market and sells in a lower market, he may lose money, of course.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. May I suggest to the Senator that we did not interfere with the liquidity of the market in 1928 and 1929. We did not curtail market operations in 1928 and 1929. The insurance companies, the estates, the banks, the business institutions are suffering today for the very reason that we did not do it.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. GLASS. Insurance companies and railroads and thousands of banks are coming here to Washington every day borrowing the taxpayers' money from the United States Government because we did not interfere with the liquidity and curtail the activities of the stock gamblers at that time.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. Let me go a little further with that thought. By virtue of the gambling and manipulation that went on, every one knows that stocks and bonds in 1929 were higher than they should have been. There were artificial prices brought about in those years. Stocks and bonds had an artificial value far beyond their real value. That was brought on by virtue of this gambling. There came a time, as it will always come, when the bubble bursts. When the bubble bursts then the honest man and the honest investor, who have the stocks and bonds commented on by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], lose money.

Stocks and bonds went probably away below what they were really worth. But no man has a right to ask that the stock market be kept above what it really should be, and kept there by artificial means, merely in order to save his money. No man has a right to ask that it be crushed and put down below what it ought to be under normal business conditions, in order that he may make money.

Take away the gambling and to a very great extent we have found a remedy. I think the amendment on which we are about to vote has more essence in it and more good in it for the country and the people of the United States than the entire bill has without it, although I am going to vote for the bill whether the amendment is adopted or not, because I think it contains many valuable provisions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a few minutes.

I know of many communities that have been wrecked as a result of loans made upon margins. I know of a bank or two that was wrecked as a result of loans made upon margins.

As I said the other day, we had in New Orleans a splendid bank known as the "Canal Bank & Trust Co." The stock of the bank was worth perhaps about 100 cents on the dollar. A rumor got around the community that the Canal Bank was to be taken over by the Giannini syndicate. The rumor was started by stock manipulators. Margins began to be played against the bank's stock until it was run up to some $397 per share when it ought to have been valued at $100. The bank was not participating in the manipulation, but as a result an inflated value was created for the stock of the bank; and when the bubble burst, as it was bound to do, and the bank stock began to come down to somewhere near its normal value the community was excited, because it thought there must be something wrong with a bank whose stock would fall off 295 points out of 397 points. A run was begun on the bank, and very soon the bank was in such a condition that it could not go any further, because no bank's loans can be liquid.

Mr. President, this amendment is worth a great deal more than the whole bill. In all kindness to the Senator from Florida, I predict that he will be disappointed in the bill. I predict that within a year's time it will be circumvented or certain parts of it perhaps will be found to be unworkable, so that between the two he will be very much disappointed in the result of the enactment of the bill.

We might as well stop right now if we are not willing to prevent this measure from being used as a bucketshop and a market-rigging gambling contact. Then no other legislation that we enact here will amount to anything. A way will be found to get around it.

I have looked at some of the provisions of the bill. I guess they are as well written as they could be unless we prevent loans being made so that marginal gambling may be prohibited on the exchange.

Nothing is purchased in marginal trading. The man who goes in and buys 10 points on United States Steel does not buy any stock. He does not intend to buy any stock. He is gambling that the stock may go up, as against the other man who is gambling that the stock may go down, each paying a certain percentage of his gambling to some broker and to the stock exchange. Stopping marginal trading does not mean that we are stopping the sale of stock. If a man wants to buy 10 shares of United States Steel, under this amendment he can still borrow the money from the broker and buy it. This amendment does not prevent a man from buying any amount of stock and borrowing the money with which to do it; but it does prevent him from engaging in a marginal gambling transaction and using the money of the people with which to do it.

Mr. BULKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senate votes on this amendment I desire to call attention to the fact that not a single word has been said in opposition to the merits of the amendment. Not a single reason has been advanced why it should be voted down, except the fear that it may have some adverse effect on prices on the stock market.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is it not further true that when the subject came before the Committee on Banking and Currency, the vote was taken without any thorough discussion such as the Senate has heard today?

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course, that is true.

Even under the bill as drafted and reported by the committee, if the Commission shall do its duty, there will be some restriction and some diminution of margin trading; and so part of that alleged deflationary effect will come anyway, whether or not this amendment shall be adopted.

It is a question whether the adoption of this amendment will cause any very great amount of deflation; but in response to requests which I have had from friends of the amendment who have suggested that perhaps the effective date is a little too early, I now ask to modify the amendment so as to insert, after the word "unlawful", the words "after April 1, 1935." That will allow nearly a year in which to adjust matters to the situation which will exist.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is modified as requested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LONG. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to take more than a very few moments, and I have no personal interest in this subject one way or the other so far as it affects me; but I do wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this question was very carefully considered by both the House and the Senate Committees on Banking and Currency.

As the Senate knows and as the country knows, the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has been engaged for more than 2 years in an investigation of the practices of the stock market. The investigation was inaugurated by a resolution offered, I believe, by the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and his colleague, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], primarily for the purpose of investigating short sales on the stock market. The investigation went from one phase of the stock market to another, until within the 2 years since the adoption of the resolution we have gone intimately into every phase and every practice of dealing in stocks on the stock exchanges of the country.

After 2 years of investigation of the general subject of stock exchanges, and after several weeks or even months of hearings and consideration of this particular measure, both Committees on Banking and Currency decided that it was not wise at this time, at least, if at all, to prohibit the purchase of stocks on the exchanges of the country by what is known as the margin process. By that, of course, is meant part payment for a stock that is bought, whether it is bought for speculation or for investment, and borrowing on the New York Stock Exchange the balance of the amount necessary to pay for the stock.

I concede that there is a difference between the use of credit for the purchase of stocks for speculative purposes and the purchase of real estate by putting up a part payment and paying so much a month, or the purchase of consumers' goods generally on the installment plan.

There may be a line of demarcation, and there is a legitimate difference, between the purchase of stock on part payment and the purchase of a piece of real estate on part payment, or the purchase of an automobile on part payment, or the purchase of any other piece of physical property by putting up a portion of the amount required and obtaining credit for the balance; but in some respects the difference is more in the imagination than in reality.

One half of all the wealth of our country is represented by securities.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not mean to imply by his argument that stocks could not be purchased on margin even if this amendment should be adopted?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. That would still be permissible; but the money could not be borrowed in this particular way.

Mr. BARKLEY. I indicated a moment ago, in an interruption of the Senator from Nebraska, that even though this amendment should be adopted, anyone who had any money to put up as part payment on a given number of shares of stock might go to a bank and have the bank buy the stock, and put up his partial payment and borrow the balance from the bank, provided the bank was willing to loan it, and that the bank, of course, would hold the stock until the balance was paid.

Mr. NORRIS. The purchaser could do that without the intervention of a bank.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know how a purchaser would be able to do it. If he could not buy on the stock exchange by putting up a partial payment, and could not get the money from a bank, the only other place to which he could go would be the home office of the company where the stock was issued. He could go there and say that he wanted to buy some stock.

Mr. NORRIS. But could not the purchaser go directly to a broker and buy the stock in the same way, without the intervention of a bank or anyone else?

Mr. BARKLEY. He could buy it if he had the cash with which to pay for it.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment merely provides that the broker shall not loan the speculator money on margin, and shall not help him to get the money on margin.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course that means that the broker cannot sell any stock unless the purchaser has the cash with which to pay for it in full.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes. If I wanted to buy a hundred shares of stock and had $2,000 in cash which I wanted to use to make a partial payment, under this amendment I could not go to any broker and buy that hundred shares of stock and put up my $2,000, and have the broker lend me the difference between my $2,000 and the price of the stock. I could not do that.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that; but the Senator must concede that if I wanted to buy stock, or, as in the case the Senator puts, if the Senator wanted to buy it on a margin, he would put up the margin with the broker. If another margin became necessary, he would have to put that up with the broker.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the amendment I could not buy it on margin. I could not buy it from the broker by having him lend me a single dollar in order to enable me to pay for it.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that I could not even buy it from him unless I had the cash to pay the entire amount.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. There is no use undertaking to fool ourselves. The Senator knows perfectly well that in most cases, I would not say in nine cases out of ten, but in pretty nearly that proportion, the Senator would not want to buy the stock.

Mr. BARKLEY. I admit that in nine cases out of ten I would not want to buy it, but in the one case out of the ten, if I wanted to buy the stock, I could not buy it as an investment through a broker, although he might be willing to lend me the difference between what I had and what the stock might cost.

Mr. GLASS. That might be a hardship on the Senator, but to permit nine other fellows to gamble in the same stock, and bring disaster to the country as they did in 1928 and 1929 certainly would not be for the benefit of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not intend to go into a lengthy discussion of this matter. I did not intend to discuss it at all. But I think it might be well for the Senate to consider the conclusions reached by a very distinguished organization known as the Twentieth Century Fund, Inc., the trustees of which are Mr. Edward A. Filene, of Boston; Hon. Newton D. Baker, of Cleveland; Mr. Bruce Bliven, who is a regulator contributor, and has been, to the New Republic, a rather progressive magazine of this country; Mr. Henry S. Dennison; Mr. John H. Fahey, who is now the head of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and was before us this morning on some legislation; Mr. John G. McDonald; Mr. Roscoe Pound, who is dean of the law school of Harvard University; and Mr. Owen D. Young.

Their conclusions, which are contained in the book I hold in my hand, present an impartial, detached, viewpoint of the whole stock-exchange situation and its control. After discussing the question of margin transactions on stock exchanges, this distinguished committee has reached the conclusion which I am going to read it to the Senate, because it expresses the views which I entertain at this time even more forcefully than I myself could express them:

We are opposed to measures designed to eliminate margin trading, and our reasons for this, briefly stated, are as follows:

1. Speculators would borrow on collateral directly from banks and other financial institutions if they were forbidden to borrow from brokers. This might be advantageous from some points of view, but it could scarcely be expected to reduce the volume of speculation materially.

2. If, in an extreme effort to stop speculation on borrowed funds, all collateral loans were made illegal, there would be grave danger, in our opinion, that a bootleg loan market of tremendous proportions would come into being. This would aggravate whatever evils now exist in the system of granting loans against security collateral and of buying and selling securities on margin.

3. Furthermore, if all collateral loans were forbidden, injury would result to many owners of securities, both individuals and institutions, who at times find it necessary or advantageous to make collateral loans for purposes other than speculating in the security markets. Lenders could scarcely be expected to exert effective control over the use borrowers made of the funds advanced to them.

4. It does not seem economically sound or wise to prohibit the purchase of securities on credit as long as credit is permitted in the purchase of commodities and real estate, and in connection with ordinary business transactions of all kinds, including installment buying by consumers. This statement is made with the full realization that the purchase of securities on margin presents several fundamental differences from transactions involving the use of credit in other fields.

5. Corporate financing would be impeded if corporate securities were made ineligible for loans.

6. Above all, perhaps, the elimination of an overwhelming proportion of speculative activity would seriously hamper the important functions of security markets.

It seems to me that the six conclusions outlined in this little publication afford sufficient reason to cause us to hesitate at this time to adopt the pending amendment, which I believe and fear would materially, without warning, reduce the liquidity of stocks which are listed on the stock exchanges, to the great damage and injury of legitimate institutions and legitimate business in the United States.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. As I heard those reasons advanced, most of them relate to a proposition to limit loans on collateral security, which is not at all the proposal contained in my amendment. But if the able committee from whom the Senator is quoting do not appreciate the difference between a loan by a banker and a loan by a broker to establish a margin account, I suggest one very fundamental difference. I do not think the Senator ever heard of a banker calling up a customer and suggesting to him to go and gamble on the stock market, and that he would lend him the money with which to do it, whereas the customer's man in the broker's office is engaged today—in this year 1934—in calling up on the telephone to ask domestic servants, and others who should not be engaged in stock-market transactions, to go in and make investments.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be much easier, and I think much wiser, probably, to adopt an amendment preventing any customer's man from calling anybody up on the telephone to suggest that he buy a stock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], which I transfer to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and vote "nay."

Mr. McGILL (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STEPHENS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who is necessarily detained, and vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the absence of certain Senators as previously announced, and add the absence of my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH]. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

I also beg to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are detained from the Senate on official business. I further beg to announce that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is detained on account of a death in his family.

Mr. COPELAND. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. METCALF. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEBERT. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has a pair on this question with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I am advised that if the Senator from Idaho were present he would vote "yea", and that the Senator from Mississippi, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 48, as follows:

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I offer certain amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 8, to strike out lines 1 to 3, both inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(15) The term "Commission" means the Federal Trade Commission.

On page 8, beginning with line 21, to strike out through line 21, on page 9, and to insert in lieu thereof:

PROVISIONS RELATING TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

On page 9, line 22, to strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 4. (a)".

On page 10, line 5, to strike out "(c) The Commission" and insert in lieu thereof "(b) For the purposes of this act and of the Securities Act of 1933, the Commission".

On page 10, line 8, to strike out "this act" and insert in lieu thereof "such acts".

On page 10, line 11, to strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

On page 11, after line 4, to insert the following new paragraph:

(d) The Commission shall hereafter be composed of seven commissioners who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and not more than four of whom shall be members of the same political party. The two additional commissioners who shall be appointed pursuant to this act shall continue in office through September 25, 1936, and September 25, 1937, respectively, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 7 years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. No commissioner shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment, or hereafter effect any transaction in any security (other than an exempted security) unless 10 days prior to such transaction he shall notify in writing the other members of the Commission of his intention to effect such transaction, and shall also notify in writing the Commission that such transaction has been effected, which later notice shall immediately be made a matter of public record by the Commission.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this group of amendments is to substitute the Federal Trade Commission for the special commission planned in the Senate bill. The amendments would add to the present Federal Trade Commission two new commissioners to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In so doing the theory of the House bill is adopted.

May I say before speaking on the merits of the amendments, that they all relate to the same subject, and, if practicable, I should like to have the consent of Members of the Senate to vote on them en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator will be granted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. For the information of Senators who have a copy before them, I perhaps should add that lines 11 and 12, on page 2, of the Senate print have been stricken from the proposed amendments. It is believed that the question there presented may properly go to conference and be determined hereafter. The elimination of those lines serves to simplify the end in view in offering the amendments.

Mr. President, I desire to say that, so far as I am aware, this is the only important remaining proposed change in the stock-exchange regulation bill which now needs the attentive consideration of the Senate. Other subjects in dispute, including the highly significant question whether the control of credit, as distinguished from the supervision of stock exchanges, is to be regulated by the Commission specified in the bill or by the Federal Reserve Board, will, or at least can, be determined in conference, as the administration may desire.

Here, however, is a chance—and perhaps a last chance—for the Senate to express its independent judgment on a vital feature of the pending legislation, thus declaring its convictions or preferences.

The House definitely favored the Federal Trade Commission as the body to administer this act.

The Committee on Banking and Currency, when it came to pass on this question, was closely divided, as stated by the able chairman in his opening address 2 days ago. Indeed, the chairman of the committee, as he frankly declared, was one of those who preferred the Federal Trade Commission to a separate commission.

There are only a few phases of the subject which call for discussion at this time. Perhaps I should emphasize at the outset that the Federal Trade Commission, as all Senators know, during the last year has been charged with the administration of the securities law. The Federal Trade Commission, which was created to curb unfair practices, for some years has had jurisdiction over, and has been conducting an exhaustive investigation, particularly of electric-power and gas-utility companies in the United States. During that time it has acquired, deservedly, a high reputation for its efficient analysis of financial management and various problems connected with corporate structures and practices of many leading corporations of this country. It is therefore safe to say that there is in the Government at this hour no Federal agency so well equipped as the Federal Trade Commission to assume the public responsibilities with which the bill now before us deals.

It may further be asserted with confidence that if a new commission be now created that commission will start handicapped by the lack of the important facilities already available in the Federal Trade Commission. Indeed, a reasonable estimate of the period which must elapse before a new commission could begin to function efficiently would probably be about 6 months. In contrast, the Federal Trade Commission could instantly be effective if entrusted with the administration of this bill.

One merit, then, of these amendments springs from the fact that under them command may at once be taken of a situation which, if postponed, and left to the handling of a commission not now in existence, may develop dangerous results. It is entirely conceivable that within the next few months before a new Federal agency could begin to operate effectively there might be stimulated an otherwise preventable return of one or more of those forced stock inflations or depressions which in recent years have so seriously affected the business life of America.

The second point I wish to make with respect to the value of the use of the Federal Trade Commission is that it represents a more economical method of meeting our legislative issues. I publicly mentioned this feature the other day, and subsequently the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], referring to the discussion then had, stressed the fact that the cost of the administration of this proposed law under provisions both of the House bill and the Senate bill is to be imposed upon the stock exchanges, not the Treasury, of the country. That is true. However, regardless of the wisdom or unwisdom of such a legislative provision or practice, the clause does not impair the fact that the Federal Trade Commission will be a more economical agency, whether judged from the viewpoint of taxpayers or from the angle of the cost to stock exchanges.

A conservative estimate of the cost of setting up a new Federal agency, as proposed in the Senate bill, with five commissioners, each with a salary of $12,000 a year, required to equip itself with office staffs, including experts, shows approximately $500,000 annually in excess of the cost of utilizing, with the additions provided in the pending amendments, the present facilities of the Federal Trade Commission. Members of the Senate are, therefore, earnestly urged to weigh this aspect of the value of amendments which reasonably correspond to similar provisions of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

Turning from economy to efficiency, the Senate will surely take into account the fact that the Federal Trade Commission has for years in notable investigations built up such an expert organization that the Commission is prepared to move immediately into the efficient performance of its tasks if authorized to act and this bill becomes law.

How different will the situation be if a new commission is created. How long will it take the members of such an untried agency to orient themselves in relation to problems already familiar to the Federal Trade Commission and its staff? On each of these grounds, therefore, the argument for these amendments may well be thought unanswerable.

Another feature of the Senate bill deserves attention. The history of the development of the proposal of a new and independent commission is worth noting. So far as I know—and I trust that nothing I shall say will be misunderstood or regarded as a reflection on anyone here—the first suggestion of an independent commission came to the Banking and Currency Committee from Mr. Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, on February 28, 1934. On that day, long after he first appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee and was subjected to searching cross-examination, during which he endeavored to paint a picture of innocence with respect to stock-exchange practices, Mr. Whitney suddenly advanced his new proposal, somewhat different, to be sure, from the proposal incorporated in the Senate draft, but, nevertheless, so similar in some respects that it deserves attention.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it ought to be stated that when Mr. Whitney appeared as a witness before the committee in the early stage of its hearings on this particular bill he suggested an independent commission, but he suggested an entirely different kind of independent commission from that which we have set up in the bill. He wanted a commission composed, in part, at least, of men who had had experience on the stock exchange, and he went so far as to suggest that the stock exchange be allowed to submit a list of names from which the President might make the appointments. Of course, we have nothing of that kind in this bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Kentucky has correctly stated the facts. I was about to read Mr. Whitney's proposal.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. In addition to what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has said, I assume that the Senator from Colorado knows perfectly well that Mr. Whitney did not stand hitched to his own proposition, which he made in February, because he came down here with an entirely different proposition, submitted on the 27th of March, in which he proposed to commit the whole matter to the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. COSTIGAN. To follow the figure of speech of the able Senator from Virginia, Mr. Whitney was always running away from the traces; he stood hitched to nothing, so far as I was able to discover.

Mr. GLASS. That being so, it does not seem exactly appropriate for the Senator from Colorado to keep him hitched to the traces out of which he has broken. [Laughter.]

Mr. COSTIGAN. My sole purpose in referring to the origin of the independent-commission proposal was to bring clearly home to the Senate the fact that behind that original proposal was a sinister purpose, not, of course, reflected in any action taken by the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I say that owing to illness I did not hear a word of Mr. Whitney's testimony nor have I read a word of it since, so when the Senator speaks of the origin of the proposal, which was made by me in committee after conference with the President and with the Federal Reserve authorities, and which was drafted by the expert draftsmen of the Federal Reserve authorities, I reply that I offered the proposal without knowing or caring what Mr. Whitney's attitude was on the subject. Consequently there is nothing sinister in the proposal submitted by me.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia evidently misunderstood my statement, which was definitely to the effect that there was nothing sinister in the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency. No one in the Senate entertains higher respect for the independence, ability, and integrity of the able Senator from Virginia than do I. I am sure that anyone who has listened to me with care will acquit me of any charge of the slightest suggestion which could be taken as reflecting on the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I had not supposed the Senator intended any reflection upon me, but it is quite evident that the Senator wants to prejudice this particular provision of the bill by assuming that only Mr. Whitney, of the New York Stock Exchange, had sense enough to originate a proposal of the sort. As a matter of fact, as pointed out by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], Mr. Whitney's proposed independent commission was to contain at least two members of the New York Stock Exchange in its membership. It was to contain the Secretary of the Treasury and one other ex-officio Cabinet member. It was entirely a different proposition from the one which the committee embodied in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. My recollection is that Mr. Whitney's proposal was that there should be one member of the commission named by the New York Stock Exchange——

Mr. GLASS. No; two.

Mr. FLETCHER. And one member named by the other exchanges of the country.

Mr. GLASS. Two stock-exchange members.

Mr. FLETCHER. One from the New York Stock Exchange and one from the other exchanges, and three Cabinet members.

Mr. GLASS. And Mr. Whitney did not adhere to that proposition. He came down a month later and proposed something else.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator with the understanding that I expect to place in the RECORD Mr. Whitney's statement so there cannot be any doubt about his proposal.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to call attention to the fact that the interdepartmental committee, which was appointed by the President to inquire into and make recommendations with reference to control of the stock market, on January 23, 1934, made its report to the President, in which it suggested an independent commission for the purpose of administering any law Congress might enact on the subject.

Mr. GLASS. The only point I wanted to make was that Mr. Whitney was not solely responsible for the suggestion.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With utmost respect for members of the Banking and Currency Committee, with which I am associated, I now venture to proceed to say that the proposal of an independent commission was dramatized by the president of the New York Stock Exchange when he appeared before the committee in February of this year. I ought to add that about the time of his statement, to the best of my recollection, a petition was sent to Congress by employees of stock-exchange houses urging the same sort of legislative supervision.

I am now particularly anxious to refer to what Mr. Whitney had to say on February 28, so there can be no misunderstanding. The Senate proposal is an independent commission, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, consisting of five members, with salaries of $12,000 per year.

Mr. Whitney's proposal was somewhat different. This is what he said, and at the conclusion of his remarks he indicated that what he spoke was considered the view of the New York Stock Exchange, adopted by its governing committee, which had given him authority to present it to the Banking and Currency Committee. I quote Mr. Whitney:

> It is the purpose of the New York Stock Exchange to assist in every possible way in the prevention of fraudulent practices affecting stock-exchange transactions, excessive speculation, and manipulation of security prices. We should be glad to see a regulatory body, constituted under Federal law, supervise the solution of these grave problems. We suggest in principle, and subject to the requirements of law and the constitutional power of Congress, an authority or board to consist of 7 members, 2 of whom are to be appointed by the President, 2 to be Cabinet members—who may well be the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce—and 1 to be appointed by the open-market committee of the Federal Reserve System. The two remaining members—

This is the language to which the Senators from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and Virginia [Mr. GLASS] expressly called attention—

> The two remaining members to be representatives of the stock exchanges, one to be designated by the New York Stock Exchange and the other to be elected by members of the exchanges in the United States other than the New York Stock Exchange.

Reverting to what I said a moment ago——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am glad to yield to the able Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator does not mean to leave the impression, I am sure, that the Committee on Banking and Currency reported the bill embodying the suggestion of the president of the New York Stock Exchange?

Mr. COSTIGAN. On the contrary, I think I have twice disclaimed any such intention, and I repeat the disclaimer lest there be any remaining doubt in anyone's mind. What I am endeavoring to do, I will say to the able Senator from Missouri, is to indicate part of the history of the development of the suggestion of an independent commission—that, and that alone.

Mr. President, I return to my earlier suggestion, which is that there was something sinister about the proposal by the New York Stock Exchange of a commission to regulate the business of the stock exchanges of this country, in the face of an investigation of stock exchanges which shook the country from shore to shore. No taint, of course, attaches to the proposal of the committee responsible for the pending bill. I speak of these developments to emphasize the great gravity as well as the history of the problem which is presented to the Senate in the amendments I have tendered and to emphasize the importance of utilizing the most efficient agency now serving our Federal Government available for this highly important purpose.

It is a fair inference, I think, that in recommending the use of technically equipped representatives of the stock exchanges of the country in a Federal supervising body it was the purpose of the New York Stock Exchange to go as far as it could to gain a firm foothold to regulate the official regulators to be established by law.

No one here needs to be told that there are hundreds of millions of dollars involved in refunding issues due to be offered by public-utility companies during the next 12 months; and the desire to have the registration of these offerings under other supervision than that of the Federal Trade Commission, with its voluminous records of the financial practices of power companies and with its staff of experts intimately informed on these and allied matters is easy to be understood.

For these among many unassigned reasons I urge the adoption of the amendments which I have sent to the desk. Perhaps it will be serviceable briefly to restate some major specifications.

First. There will be hazardous delay and substantial organization difficulties if we adopt the proposal in the Senate bill.

Second. Economy and efficiency will be promoted by using the Federal Trade Commission, which has an expert staff, already experienced in matters closely related to many of the duties that will inevitably devolve on the administrative agency to be provided.

Third. The registration of new issues under the Securities Act of 1933 and the pending legislation would involve much duplication of work which would be eliminated if we use the Federal Trade Commission as the agency for both.

Fourth. If we employ the Federal Trade Commission's assistance, there will be cooperation in other divisions of that Commission's work of experts who have gained familiarity with many aspects of corporation finance relating to the security business in connection with such duties as the enforcement of the antitrust laws, and the investigation of many important corporate structures; notably, those of the electric power and gas utilities.

Mr. President, from the beginning of the discussion of this bill until the present moment nothing has been said on this floor with respect to the Federal Trade Commission except in praise. It is unnecessary at this hour or in this body to enumerate the remarkable services that governmental agency has performed during certain periods of its existence. Ten or more years ago that Commission effectively demonstrated in services of the most noteworthy character the legislative needs of the meat-packing industry. In more recent days, the investigation of the utility corporations has justly attracted the attention of public-spirited people everywhere.

It certainly now seems in the interest of the proper handling of the public business of the country to use the Federal Trade Commission in the present emergency; and if there be those here who believe that additions to its membership should be made, in the amendments, which correspond in substance to the House bill, will be found provision for the selection of two additional members of the Federal Trade Commission, who can help lighten the multiplied burdens now resting on that body. To mention a minor matter, in view of the circumstances that members of the Federal Trade Commission have salaries of $10,000 a year, while the proposal in the Senate bill is to appoint commissioners with salaries of $12,000 a year, it will be seen under the amendments now offered we are, so far as expense goes, in effect merely adding the equivalent of one commissioner with a salary of $10,000 a year.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is there not this difference in the two bills? As I understand the bill now before the Senate, reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, the expense involved is borne entirely by the stock exchanges through a tax levied by the Commission, and therefore the new commission will not be an expense upon the Federal Government. Is that correct, and does the Senator take that into consideration in discussing the subject?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The provision of the House bill as passed—section 30, on page 56 of the draft, which I have here—reads as follows:

> Every national securities exchange shall pay to the Commission on or before March 15 of each calendar year a registration fee for the privilege of doing business as a national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year or any part thereof. Such fee shall be in an amount equal to one five hundredths of 1 percent of the aggregate dollar amount of the sales of securities transacted on such national securities exchange during the preceding calendar year.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator's amendment substitute any of that language in the Senate bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Let me say in answer to the able Senator from Delaware that what I have read is the language of the House bill. The language of the Senate bill differs somewhat, and I shall now read its provisions, to be found on page 10, subdivision (d) of section 4 of the bill. That language is:

> The amount of all expenses incurred by the Commission in connection with the administration of this act shall be assessed by the Commission against exchanges subject to regulation under this act in such manner and in such amounts as the Commission deems to be fair and equitable. The Commission shall levy semiannually upon such exchanges an assessment sufficient to pay its estimated expenses and the salaries of its members and employees for the half year succeeding the levying of such assessment, together with any deficit carried forward from the preceding half year.

In other words, the House bill calls for a definite assessment. The Senate bill calls for an assessment based upon estimated expenses. That language is not touched by the amendment I have offered.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I wished to inquire.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will further say to the Senator from Delaware that one reason it was not touched was that this subject can perhaps be dealt with in conference as well as if handled by amendment on the floor. Perhaps I am in error about this conclusion, but that is the judgment I formed.

TARIFF ON SUGAR

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, we are advised in the afternoon newspapers that the President, exercising his existing flexible tariff powers, has reduced by one half cent the tariff on Cuban sugar, and upon other sugars in proportion. I desire to read his precise language:

> Acting upon the unanimous recommendations of the United States Tariff Commission, I have today signed a proclamation, under the so-called "flexible tariff provisions" of the Tariff Act of 1930, reducing the rate of duty on sugar.
> Using 96-degree Cuban sugar as the unit of measure, this results in a reduction of the duty from 2 cents to 1½ cents a pound on that sugar.

Mr. President, today is the first time that any of us have been able to see the report of the Tariff Commission upon which this action is based. Today is the first moment that any of us who are interested in the problem of the maintenance of the domestic-sugar industry and the tariff on sugar, and particularly the Cuban phase of it, have been able to know what it is that the Tariff Commission has been recommending to the President in this connection. We were left to guess regarding the contents of this significant document all through the recent debates on the sugar control bill, although the report of the Commission is dated February 8, the day the President sent us his original sugar message.

I have had the report for a few hours, I repeat, for the first time; and I assert without fear of successful contradiction that the report does not justify any reduction whatsoever in the sugar tariff. I think that becomes textually plain on the face of the report of the Commission. I assert that the President's action is not justified by the exhibit upon which it is based.

I refer first to page 1 of the Commission's report, which clearly indicates that in ascertaining the differences in cost of production at home and abroad in respect to sugar the Tariff Commission has depended upon the 3-year period 1929–30 to 1931–32. In other words, its survey of the cost of producing sugar stopped with 1932. That becomes a controlling fact, as I shall presently indicate.

Mr. President, let us turn over now to page 7 of the report, which indicates the costs and the differentials in costs of production at home and abroad which were found in this period preceding 1933.

We find a calculation which shows that the average differential between the cost of producing sugar in the United States and in Cuba is reported at 1.495 cents per pound of raw sugar. That is the weighted average. It is an average cost which is secured by averaging not only the cane costs in the United States and the beet costs in the United States, but also the cane costs in Hawaii. In other words, it would be impossible to bring this figure down to approximately 1½ cents—that being the figure which is used to justify the tariff reduction—except as the Hawaiian costs of production are joined with the domestic costs. I do not believe it is fair to include Hawaiian costs in a computation which is presumed to reflect production costs in continental United States, where practically all conditions are substantially different and substantially higher. This inevitably jeopardizes the protective rights of American industry and agriculture. But this is not in any sense the major basis of my protest. My real protest rests upon incontrovertible grounds which do not admit of argument.

But I particularly call attention, in passing, to the fact that when this average differential is brought down to 1½ cents, it is nearly 1 cent less than the admitted differential in respect to the cost of producing Louisiana cane sugar. The Commission admits that the differential between Louisiana cane and Cuban cane sugar is 2.723 cents per pound. Yet the tariff is reduced on the theory that the differential is only 1.495 cents per pound.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LONG. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. VANDENBERG. From page 7.

Mr. LONG. That is where they have our Louisiana cost at 2.7 cents?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. As I understand, they have added in Hawaii and Louisiana?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. I wonder why they did not get the Fiji Islands and bring it down three eighths of a cent more. They might as well have done that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They might as well have included the Philippine costs and decrease the tariff to 1 cent.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I might call the Senator's attention to the record made in the Finance Committee on the question of a tariff by the Chairman of the Tariff Commission, who stated boldly, and to the world, that the Tariff Commission in these matters did what the President wanted done, and did not exercise any independent judgment. Bearing that in mind, it seems to me there is some explanation as to why the Senator did not know about it before.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observation. I read the report of the Senate committee hearing today very carefully, to see whether or not the Chairman of the Tariff Commission had been direct and categorical in that quoted statement. If he had been direct and categorical, I would have been in favor of impeaching him. It would have been a violation of his responsibility under the law. He was not categorical and he was not direct, but he left the obvious inference that the Commission is quite willing to do anything the President wants it to do. The able Senator from Delaware is justified in his interpretation. It is an amazing thing. But I revert to the sugar report.

Mr. President, the worst vice in respect to the use of this report of the Tariff Commission to justify this reduction today in a tariff on sugar is not the matter of the average. That is incidental. I remind the Senate again that the Commission admits, on page 1 of its report, that its study of production costs is based on a 3-year average, which ends in 1932, and that there is not a single production cost surveyed or canvassed or contemplated after 1932.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What inference does the Senator draw from that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am proceeding not to an inference from it but to a direct conclusion which I think even the Senator from Arkansas will gladly concede proves an unfair deduction on the part of the President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator for putting me in the class that even I may be able to understand a statement made by himself.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not say that, but I will make that concession to the Senator from Arkansas.

Let me state again that these production-cost surveys ended in 1932, and every penny of the differential which the Tariff Commission found at the end of 1932 on the basis of those costs has been used to justify this reduction in the tariff on sugar. There is no margin of safety left even on these 1930–32 figures. But what has happened to sugar-production costs since this survey ended? What has happened since 1932? That is the important point which I am bringing to the floor of the Senate to justify the initial statement which I made this afternoon, namely, that the report does not warrant a reduction in the sugar tariff.

Since 1932 all sugar processing has gone under the N.R.A. That is exhibit A. I have seen the certified accountant's analysis of the result of the N.R.A. upon sugar-processing costs, and the average increased cost of processing is 40 percent. There is an increased processing cost of 40 percent, which must be added to the figures upon which the Tariff Commission bases its report. But that is not all.

Under the sugar control bill, a minimum-wage provision is provided, which we are told is calculated to increase the labor costs per sugar-beet acre from $13 to $20. That is an increase of 54 percent in labor costs.

There is a 40-percent increase in processing costs as a result of the N.R.A. We face a contemplated labor increase of 54 percent. I do not complain. I simply state a fact. Those are rather staggering percentages. Yet not one single penny of those already existing and immediately contemplated increased costs of production is included within the base which the United States Tariff Commission has submitted to the President as a justification for this reduction in the tariff on sugar. It is against this unfairness, this distortion, that I complain.

I think the exhibit upon its face demonstrates the justification for the statement which I made, that the report of the Commission itself does not justify the proclamation which the President has issued. The report goes back entirely to precode days and is as antiquated as if it were 50 years old. It is utterly irrevelant. But even that is not all.

In this report, at page 25, I find a rather ominous further communication from the chairman of the Tariff Commission to the President, dated April 11, 1933, in which he says:

In view of the possibility of early action by our Government in regard to tariff bargaining, I venture to send you certain conclusions that have been reached by the Tariff Commission from our study of the sugar industry.

This would indicate clearly that the preliminary discussion of the use of the tariff bargaining power has related directly and specifically to the possible further reduction of the tariff on sugar, in spite of this challenging exhibit which is contained in the report of the Commission. In other words, our jeopardy has only just started. There may be more of it if and when the President gets the bargaining powers for which he is reaching in the new tariff bill.

Mr. President, all I want to say is that I think the report of the Commission clearly demonstrates that the President's proclamation is not justified, that the reduction in the sugar tariff is not justified, and I desire to state that this type of tariff thinking and this type of tariff tinkering will ruin what is left of American agriculture if it is persisted in. I wish to take my stand with the President, not on May 9, 1934, but on October 25, 1932, when he was speaking in Baltimore 1 month before his election, when he said:

It is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products.

It continues to be absurd, and especially when based on an outmoded report of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope the leaders of both parties will at least deal with us along honest lines of fact, not only in Congress but in the departments. If they cannot juggle us out of a tariff on honest figures, at least I hope we will not sit here and be a party to a dishonest calculation. I do not mean by that to intimate an ill motive on the part of the Commission, but it is a farcical statement which has been used as a justification for reducing the tariff on sugar by one half cent a pound, to the detriment of the people of Louisiana.

It is only a few lines contained on page 7 of this report that have been used as a basis of computing the cost of producing sugar in Louisiana as compared with the cost in Cuba. Let me read these three lines to the Senate found in paragraph 13:

Combined average excess of domestic costs.

Listen to this:

The three figures of the excess of domestic over foreign costs shown in paragraphs 11 and 12, namely, 2.723 cents for Louisiana sugar, 1.363 cents for Hawaiian sugar, and 1.407 cents (raw basis) for beet sugar, taken together, give a weighted average excess of domestic over Cuban costs amounting to 1.495 cents per pound of raw sugar.

Mr. President, on its face that is a fraud on the law, that is a positive forgery in the face of the facts. Computing the cost of producing Louisiana sugar under the law, and comparing it with Cuban sugar, making the Louisiana cost 2.7 cents plus, and then weighting it down by loading in the cost of producing sugar in Hawaii, and reaching a common average, is a fraud against the people of the State of Louisiana, and the people of Florida, and the domestic sugar interests of the United States in General.

What we were entitled to was a consideration of the difference in costs, under the law, of producing sugar in Cuba and producing sugar in the State of Louisiana. On the facts contained in the report the cost in Louisiana is given as 2.7 cents a pound, and instead of giving us anything like what the law calls for, we are given what our average is when compared with sugar produced by the slave labor of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The cost of producing sugar in Louisiana, I believe, is higher than it is anywhere else in the United States.

Mr. LONG. It is a little higher.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Can the Senator state how much higher?

Mr. LONG. According to this report, it is about a cent and a quarter a pound higher.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator understand that in arriving at the cost of production of an American commodity the Tariff Commission necessarily takes the highest cost?

Mr. LONG. I think we are entitled to our Louisiana cost.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I merely wanted to point out to both Senators that the logic of the position they take, as I understand it, is to contend that it is the obligation of the Commission in ascertaining the cost of production to fix the figure at the highest cost in any part of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Unless the sugar business is going to be put out of Louisiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not talking about what is going to be done with the sugar business, if the Senator will pardon me. I am speaking about the standard or the tests prescribed in the flexible-tariff provision and in other provisions of the tariff law which authorize and require the Commission in certain cases to find the cost of production. There have been a good many different methods resorted to, but I do not know of a single instance in which it has been held that the highest cost is the true standard. Of course, it is necessary to find some kind of an average. For instance, let us say an inefficient concern operating to produce a commodity will produce it at a much higher cost than the well-managed and well-operated competitor; manifestly it is not the intention of the law to put a premium upon inefficiency and incompetency. So, necessarily, there arises the duty on the part of the Commission to find a standard with respect to the cost of production that would be fairly reflective of some average.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the Senator a question. If we are going to reach that sort of average—I do not agree with that—but let us say that we take the basis which the Senator suggests; is it, then, fair to put Hawaii in with Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am not certain that if I were a tariff commissioner charged with this responsibility, I should proceed in that way, but certainly we should take the cost of producing beet sugar——

Mr. LONG. We will take that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And the cost of producing cane sugar, and I am not certain that under the statute the Commission was not entirely authorized to put in Hawaii, being a part of the United States. The quotas limit the amount of sugar that may be imported.

Mr. LONG. If they can put in Hawaii they can put in the Philippines and bring the cost down to 1 cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think they would be prohibited from putting in Hawaii. I do not understand that the law prohibits that. I think there must be, necessarily, some method of arriving at the average cost of production.

Mr. LONG. I know, but the Senator will admit that we should not put in the Philippine Islands, and I know that we should not put in the colonial possessions, because if we do, we would have no tariff on sugar. The cost of raising sugar in the Philippine Islands is probably less than the cost of raising sugar in Cuba.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think there is some force in the Senator's statement, because we have assumed from the beginning that the costs of production there—the labor charges particularly—are much less than in the United States.

Mr. LONG. Much less. And if they had followed, as the Senator from Arkansas very graciously says, the average cost of production of beet sugar and cane sugar, Mr. President, the average of the two being 2.5 cents plus above the cost of Cuban sugar—on that basis referred to by my friend from Arkansas they had no right to issue this order. They have gone in the teeth of their own findings with respect to this—and God knows they have never been too liberal in their fact findings, so far as we are concerned—but on the basis of the facts which they have been able to find for themselves, they have given the average cost of production of beet and cane sugar in this country as 2.1 cents above the cost of Cuban sugar, and now they put Hawaii in and slice off a half a cent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that I was complaining less about the use of an average cost. I quite concur that some sort of average is necessary. I was complaining less about that than I was about the fact that the entire survey of the cost of production ended in 1932, and that the cost of production in the United States, under the N.R.A., and under the contemplated increased wage scales required by the sugar control, is an added factor to the extent of an average of 50-percent increase in cost of production, which is totally excluded from contemplation in the Tariff Commission's report upon which the President has acted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In connection with the statement just made by the Senator from Michigan, it is well known that the investigation of the cost of production of sugar is a very difficult and complicated subject matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I recall that some years ago, when an investigation was made, it extended over so long a period that I felt justified in doubting the value of the information, because it seemed to me that much of it might have in the meantime become obsolete.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Which is what happened here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That may be worthy of consideration. I merely wish to point out that it is difficult, almost impossible, to have cost-of-production data up to date or to keep it up to date. The reduction in this tariff offsets the processing tax and thus prevents increase of cost to consumers.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Michigan says, and we would be perfectly willing to be penalized and be brought down to the average cost of the domestic beet-sugar crop and the domestic cane-sugar crop. Of course, there would be no sugar business in the United States today if were not for the cane-sugar industry. Cane sugar, Mr. President, was the pioneer sugar industry in this country. Sugarcane was planted in this country long before there was ever any thought of such a thing as a beet-sugar industry. If we had not been faced with the necessity of taking care of foreign investments which have been made in Cuba—or rather the domestic investments made in a foreign country—we would never have had this question raised to trouble us. But now they begin talking about tinkering with the tariff.

We had a commitment from the President of the United States that he did not intend to reduce the tariffs on any agricultural commodities. That was the declaration made by President Roosevelt in the last campaign. I remember when Mr. Hyde, a member of Mr. Hoover's Cabinet, attacked Mr. Roosevelt for having made that statement, claiming it was inconsistent with the previous statements made by him, that Mr. Roosevelt made the statement that he had thoroughly made up his mind, and that all agriculturists might know that there was no intention on his part at any time to interfere with the tariffs which were being maintained on agricultural products.

We in the State of Louisiana have tried to comply with the law. Though it has discriminated against us at every turn, we have tried to place ourselves in keeping with the law. We had a law which we did not want, which permitted flexible tariff rates to be made with regard to sugar. The Tariff Commission investigated and finally found that the cost of producing the Louisiana sugar is 2.7 cents, and then they said—

> We have got to average that with the balance of the sugar which is being produced in the United States, which brings the difference in the cost of production down to 2.1 cents a pound.

Then they said—

> No; that is not low enough. We will go out 3,000 miles away from this country, and we will bring in Hawaii, and add the cost of producing sugar in Hawaii, and divide the cost of producing domestic cane and beet sugar and Hawaiian sugar, which brings the cost down to 1.4 cents, and therefore we will lop off one half a cent.

There is no reason on God's earth why they did not put in the Philippine Islands. The next thing they will do is to bring in the Philippine Islands. Then the next thing they will do, if that is not enough, is to bring in Puerto Rico; and when they bring in the Philippine Islands and when they bring in Puerto Rico, they will find out that the Cubans have been penalized, because it costs more to produce sugar in the island of Cuba than it costs to produce it in the colonial possessions of the United States of America.

Is that the kind of political and bureaucratic situation we have gotten ourselves into? Are we going to permit such chicanery? Is the Senate going to stand for that sort of manipulation against the interests of the people who are born under this country's flag, and who are just as much citizens of this country as anyone else? Are we going to stand for actions which are said to be taken under the law as a result of which the Louisianian will be brought down to the same status as the Hawaiian? Is that what this tariff-tinkering process means to our country? Are we planning to extend this process in order to negotiate some trade agreement with Cuba?

If that is what we are going to do, then the next thing we will do will be to have a trade agreement with Cuba by which we will give Cuba the same advantage with respect to importations into the United States as the Philippine Islands have.

I do not care whether my friend from Michigan agrees with the Senator from Arkansas or not. According to the Senator from Arkansas and according to the Senator from Michigan, the authorities have cheated the people of Louisiana, on their own figures, out of six tenths of 1 cent a pound on sugar which is raised in this country. That is what has been done.

Up to the year 1898, before we got into a war which we never had any business to get into, following which time the National City Bank and the financiers of the East became interested in Hawaii and in Cuba, there never had been any thought of imposing anything like this on the people of Louisiana or on the people of the West; but now, on the admitted facts, if the Tariff Commission cannot find one thing which will bring down the average cost, they will find something else to bring it down. That is why the people of this country have lost all confidence in boards and commissions. That is why the people have lost all respect for Congress because of its abdicating its functions and placing them in the hands of bureaucrats. That is why the people of Louisiana and the other people of the country are insisting on a legislative form of government; that the taxing be done by Congress; that laws be enacted in the ordinary way, in a constitutional manner, rather than to delegate authority to boards to ascertain differences in costs, and so forth. Especially is that true in view of the fact that this particular board, when it cannot find, according to its own tabulations and statistics, that there is sufficient difference in cost to justify its recommendation, will go 3,000 miles away and bring in costs under coolie labor in order to average the people of Louisiana and the people of the West with that coolie labor so as to bring down the price sufficiently to justify such a proclamation as the one in question.

This is just what is wrong with agriculture in the United States today. In order to take care of the Cubans, in order to take care of the Filipinos, we constantly neglect the agriculture of this country. If we shall go forward with the flexible tariff bill and shall not at least except agricultural commodities, we will commit an absolute violation of the promises and of the party pledges that were made by Mr. Roosevelt to the farmers of the country. This report goes to show the necessity for protecting the farmers in line with what has been the constitutional law with reference to tariff making.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion. The President today issued a statement for the press when he signed the so-called "sugar bill", H.R. 8861. I shall ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD. There is a paragraph in the statement as follows:

Under the terms of the act, the rate of the processing tax shall not exceed the amount of the reduction on a pound of sugar, raw value, of the rate of duty in effect on January 1, 1934, as adjusted, by our commercial treaty with Cuba.

I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT MADE BY PRESIDENT UPON SIGNING H.R. 8861 PERTAINING TO THE SUGAR INDUSTRY

MAY 9, 1934.

On February 8 last, I sent to the Congress a message setting forth certain facts and problems pertaining to the sugar industry. I said then that "the problem is difficult but can be solved if met squarely and if small temporary gains are sacrificed to the ultimate general advantage."

I have today signed H.R. 8861, which I am advised will permit a rapid approach to the solution of the many vexing and difficult problems within the industry. I hope that this act will contribute to the economic improvement in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Philippines, Cuba, and among continental sugar producers. These are the objectives outlined in my message to the Congress last February.

Under the terms of the act, the rate of the processing tax shall not exceed the amount of the reduction on a pound of sugar, raw value, of the rate of duty in effect on January 1, 1934, as adjusted, by our commercial treaty with Cuba.

Acting upon the unanimous recommendations of the United States Tariff Commission, I have today signed a proclamation, under the so-called "flexible tariff provisions" of the Tariff Act of 1930, reducing the rate of duty on sugar. Using 96° Cuban sugar as the unit of measure, this results in a reduction of the duty from 2 cents to 1½ cents a pound on that sugar. The rate of the processing tax must not exceed the amount of the reduction as adjusted to this unit of measure.

This means that the processing or compensatory taxes will not increase, in themselves, the price to be paid by the ultimate consumers and at the same time our own sugar producers will have the opportunity to obtain in the form of benefit payments, a fairer return from their product.

To cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the provisions of this act, I have designated an informal committee from the Cabinet. This committee includes the Secretary of Agriculture; the Secretary of the Interior, who is charged with the administration of Hawaii and the Virgin Islands; the Secretary of War, who is charged with the administration of Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands; and the Secretary of State, who is charged with the conduct of our negotiations with Cuba.

Those engaged in this industry have an opportunity to improve their economic status through operation of this act. I urge their cooperation in carrying out its provisions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There was released also a statement by the United States Tariff Commission on the subject of sugar which supplies some information pertinent to the discussion that has just been in progress in the Senate. It appears from that statement that the sugar-cane production of the State of Louisiana is 4 percent of the total consumption of sugar in the United States. I ask that the press release of the Tariff Commission be also printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUGAR

The Tariff Commission announces today that the President has approved the findings of the Commission with respect to sugar, and has reduced the rate on 96° raw sugar from Cuba to 1.5 cents per pound, and on sugar from other countries to 1.875 cents per pound. Rates on other degrees are changed in proportion. The new duties become effective June 8. Today's action marks the close of a comprehensive and careful study by the Tariff Commission. The President at the same time signed the Jones-Costigan Sugar Bill which makes sugar a basic commodity under control of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and subject to a processing tax "not greater than" the reductions in the tariff rates.

Sugar, under the Tariff Act of 1930, paragraph 501, is dutiable at 2½ cents per pound for 96° raw sugar full duty, and 2 cents per pound for Cuban.

The action reducing those rates is based on a comparison of the costs of production of cane and beet sugar in continental United States and of cane sugar in Hawaii with the costs of production of cane sugar in Cuba, the principal competing country. This means a reduction in the rate on Cuban sugar, testing not over 75°, from 1.37 to 1.0275 cents per pound, and in the differential for each additional sugar degree from 0.03 to 0.0225 cent per pound. The rate on 96° sugar from Cuba will thus be reduced from 2.0 to 1.5 cents per pound. Since the United States imports of Cuban sugar are entitled (under the Cuban convention of 1902) to a reduction of 20 percent from the general rate on sugar, the general or world rate under this proclamation will be 25 percent higher than those specified above on Cuban sugar.

The findings of the Commission, with respect to refined sugar, state that the differences in cost of production between that produced in the United States and that produced in Cuba, during the cost period 1929–31, do not warrant any change in the relationship in the duty on refined (100°) sugar to the duty on raw sugar prescribed in the act of 1930, and that, consequently, any reduction in the duty on raw sugar should be accompanied by the same percentage reduction in the rate on refined sugar. The rate on 109° sugar imported from Cuba, therefore, by the proclamation, is reduced from 2.12 to 1.59 cents per pound. The Commission, however, calls attention to a new situation which is developing during later years which may call for a new relationship. This is the building of refining facilities in connection with raw-sugar mills.

The Commission, in connection with its investigation of the difference of costs between domestic and Cuban sugar conducted for the purpose of section 336, made a general investigation under section 332, and its report to the President calls attention to certain facts ascertained therein which have a major bearing on public policy with respect to sugar. These include a comparison of the costs of production of raw sugar in Puerto Rico and the Philippines with costs in Cuba, together with an analysis of data concerning the supply and demand for sugar, the trend of prices, and other pertinent facts.

It finds, in this connection, that a change in duty rates alone would not settle the chaotic condition in the sugar industry since the supply of sugar available for the American market is so great, and the competition to supply the American market is so keen as to depress the market price far below costs. Thus, while the 3-year-average costs of 96° raw sugar in Cuba delivered to Atlantic and Gulf seaport refineries was 1.923 cents per pound, the average price delivered at New York was only 1.49 cents per pound in 1930, 1.38 cents per pound in 1931, and 0.925 cent per pound in 1932.

And, further, that the most effective way, based on the information ascertained by investigations of the Commission, to improve the situation, both in Cuba and in the United States, is to lower the Cuban duty and at the same time adjust to market demand deliveries of sugar, not only from Cuba but from all other areas contributing to the American supply.

The consumption of sugar in continental United States is supplied almost entirely from three major sources, namely, the continental United States itself, shipments from the insular areas of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, and imports from Cuba at a duty of 20 percent below the general rate prescribed by statute. Of the continental production the great bulk has for many years consisted of beet sugar, which is produced chiefly in the Western States, with a limited output in certain North Central States. The remainder of the domestic production is cane sugar produced chiefly in Louisiana, which in no year since 1923 has represented as much as 4 percent of the total consumption. In the last few years Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands have been not far from equal to each other in importance as sources of supply of sugar to continental United States.

The relative importance of the three major sources of supply above specified remained roughly unchanged from about 1910 to about 1925. Since that time the share supplied by Cuba has fallen greatly, and the share furnished by the insular areas has risen greatly. The proportion furnished by the production in continental United States averaged about 23.5 percent of the total for 1912 to 1921, but declined to about 18.5 percent for the period 1927–30, and again increased to slightly above 23.5 percent for 1931–32.

Of the total quantity of domestic sugar consumed in 1932, 1,232,000 tons was beet sugar and 150,000 tons chiefly Louisiana cane sugar. Of the total quantity supplied by the insular areas that year 957,000 tons came from Hawaii, 851,000 tons from Puerto Rico, and 974,000 tons from the Philippines. Imports from Cuba in that year amounted to 1,647,000 tons, over 30 percent less than that imported during the 3 years immediately preceding.

The total cost of production and of transportation and other delivery charges to the principal market regions for the period 1929–30 to 1931–32 as reported by the Commission was 4.424 cents per pound for domestic beet sugar and 2.918 cents per pound for refined sugar produced from Cuban raw sugar, the excess of domestic over foreign costs thus being 1.506 cents per pound of refined sugar. This is equal to 1.407 cents per pound of raw sugar, 107 pounds of raw sugar being required to produce 100 pounds of refined sugar. The total delivered costs for raw cane sugar produced in Louisiana was 4.646 cents per pound, 3.286 cents per pound for that produced in Hawaii, and 1.923 cents per pound for that produced in Cuba. The excess of the domestic over the Cuban costs was 2.723 cents per pound for sugar produced in Louisiana and 1.363 cents per pound for sugar produced in Hawaii. The weighted average excess of the cost of the two domestic cane areas and the beet costs, raw basis, over Cuban costs amounted to 1.495 cents per pound of raw sugar.

A supplemental statement submitted by Commissioner Edgar B. Brossard is included in the report. He approves a limitation of imports by quotas to bring about a reasonable price for sugar and shows by cost comparisons calculated by three different methods that the difference between United States and Cuban costs ranges from less than 1½ cents to more than 2 cents a pound for raw sugar, depending upon the method of cost comparison chosen.

MOLASSES AND SUGAR SIRUPS DUTIABLE UNDER PARAGRAPH 502

The Commission made no findings with respect to the costs of molasses and sugar sirups under paragraph 502 of the Tariff Act of 1930 in its report to the President. Subsequently, he requested further information on the relationship of the duty on sugar to the duty on molasses and sugar sirups.

In response to this request the Commission reported that in view of the different types of molasses and sirups imported and the great variety of domestically produced sirup it would not only be difficult to select imported and domestic molasses and sirups which were comparable but any cost differences which could be determined would not be significant in determining the proper relation between the duty on sugar and the one upon molasses and sirups.

Of the imports in 1933, about 9,600,000 gallons, or 85 percent, were imported from Cuba. Of the Cuban imports, about 3,150,000 gallons were molasses used for the extraction of sugar in refineries of the United States, and the remainder, about 5,822,000 gallons, was invert cane sirup made from raw sugar in Cuba and imported under the provisions of paragraph 502.

Imports of edible molasses and sirups from countries other than Cuba were 1,687,157 gallons in 1933. Of this amount, about 770,000 gallons were invert sirups made from raw sugars similar to the product imported from Cuba, and the remainder, about 918,000 gallons, was a highly colored and flavored edible product of the type known as Barbados molasses.

The Barbados type of molasses is used largely for blending purposes in the making of table sirups. The relatively large imports of the inverted cane sirups made from sugar are utilized in this country principally as a sweetening material in industry.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as the Senator from Arkansas well knows, the penalties which are prescribed against domestic peoples of all kinds, particularly the agriculturists, do not apply against the foreigners who are producing sugar. Therefore they do not have to take into account, in computing their cost of producing sugar, the same things the American farmer has to take into account in computing his cost of production, which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] said in some instances run as high as 50 percent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the processing tax was added to the Philippines.

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendments offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, with regard to the pending amendments submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], I do not disagree at all with all the Senator from Colorado has so well said on the subject. I cannot, however, follow him and vote for his amendments because the Committee on Banking and Currency, by a vote, as I recall, of 11 to 8, voted for the provision for the establishment of a special commission. Of course, I am standing by the bill as reported by the committee.

I am all the more inclined to do that because if the Senate shall accept the Senate bill and create the special commission of five, which will have jurisdiction of the administration of the measure, the matter will go to conference.

The adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado would mean that the Senate agrees to the proposal of the House bill, which provides for the administration of the measure through the Federal Trade Commission, and there would be nothing in conference on the subject. The Senate bill now provides for the establishment of a special commission. The House bill provides for jurisdiction to be lodged in the Federal Trade Commission. If the Senate agrees to the committee provision and disagrees to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, our purpose is to move to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, and therefore the whole matter will be in conference, the provisions of the Senate bill and the provisions of the House bill, too, and then we may thrash out the question and determine which is more desirable, whether to have the measure administered by the Federal Trade Commission or by a special commission. The conferees no doubt can get together on the matter.

There are many people who think there ought to be a special commission, and there are various arguments submitted in favor of that plan. In the first place, it would be an independent commission appointed by the President, who will have in mind the particular qualifications for service in connection with the work involved. Members of the commission will be confirmed by the Senate. I think we would get a good commission, beyond all question.

Many people, Members of Congress and others elsewhere, feel that a special commission ought to be provided to administer the measure because the provisions are largely technical, and we ought to have men experienced in business of the kind involved. We can find them, I am sure. Some feel that the Federal Trade Commission has not had the kind of experience that would be required for an efficient administration of the provisions of the measure. It is felt that we would get better results at the hands of a special commission.

There is one thing about which I am quite clear, and that is that whether we place the work in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission or in the hands of a special commission, the Securities Act and this measure ought to be administered by the same authority, because they are so intimately related and the provisions of the one correspond so closely to the provisions of the other, particularly those provisions with reference to reports and that sort of thing required of issuers and corporations. It will prevent much duplication of work and save some burden on the industries if we require only the one report in each instance. That report would be made to whichever authority has charge of both of the measures. I think that is highly desirable.

In an amendment which I have had printed and which I shall offer I propose to amend the Securities Act and then to transfer all the functions of the Federal Trade Commission in reference to that act to the special commission provided for in this bill, so as to carry out the ideas of the committee with reference to the establishment of a new commission. That amendment will be submitted at a later time.

If the Senate shall vote down the Costigan amendment and then shall agree to the Senate provision for a special commission, the question will go to conference, because the provision of the House bill is along the lines of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. If we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, we would practically agree to the House provision with reference to the Federal Trade Commission having jurisdiction over the administration of the bill, and then there would be nothing in conference on that subject. If we shall pass the Senate bill, disagreeing to the pending amendment of the Senator from Colorado, the whole question will be in conference, because the House bill gives jurisdiction to the Federal Trade Commission, while the Senate bill provides for a special commission. So, my judgment is that it would be wiser for us to leave this question to be settled in conference between the House and the Senate.

While agreeing entirely with what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] has so well said about the Federal Trade Commission and its work up to this time, and other features of his amendment, I think it wiser for us to pass the Senate bill, and thereby have the whole matter go to conference. If we should agree to his amendment, there would be nothing in conference with regard to the administration of the act. For that reason I feel that we should stand by the Senate bill as it is, and reject the amendment.

It is getting late, Mr. President, and there are other Senators who desire to discuss this matter before we vote upon it, and who cannot do so this afternoon. I think, therefore, that at this time we had better lay aside the bill until tomorrow.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, during the present session the Senate has been able to give such consideration to its calendar that comparatively few bills remain on it; and many of those bills have been called so often as to indicate that they cannot be acted upon under the usual agreement for the consideration of bills by unanimous consent.

Since we last considered the calendar, quite a number of bills have been reported from the various standing committees of the Senate, and a number of Senators have expressed a desire for an opportunity to consider the calendar for unobjected bills.

I, therefore, desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, which, I understand, is agreeable to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the latter being in charge of the unfinished business. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today, it adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, and that at the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION LOANS TO INDUSTRY

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read an amendment, which I shall offer whenever Senate bill 3520, authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to industry, may be brought up in the Senate.

The amendment is only seven or eight lines long, and I ask that it be read at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any Federal, State, county, or municipal official, any member of any national, State, or county committee of any political party, or any other person except a bona fide and regularly employed officer, agent, or employee of the person or corporation seeking a loan under the provisions of this section, to seek to influence in any way any agent, officer, or employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in connection with a loan or any application therefor, under the provisions of this section; and if such unlawful influence is used, the person or corporation seeking such loan shall be disqualified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the calendar.

WILLIAM A. ROBERTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, with reference to the nomination of Mr. William A. Roberts to be additional people's counsel for the District of Columbia, in fairness to the nominee I desire to say that on several occasions I asked that the nomination go over for the purpose of making a thorough investigation to satisfy myself as to certain records. I now withdraw all objections that I had to the nominee. I desire to speak in the very highest terms of the nomination, and ask that it be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William A. Roberts to be additional counsel of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, to be known as the "people's counsel."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DANIEL D. MOORE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Daniel D. Moore to the collector of internal revenue, district of Louisiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement, adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Thursday, May 10, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Lord, we rejoice that Thy glory fills the heavens and the earth; Thy righteousness standeth like the strong mountains; Thy judgments are like the great deep. We praise Thee for Him who is the light for the world's dark, and where He abides gloom cannot tarry. Heavenly Father, sometimes our zeal takes the place of our judgment; sometimes our desire displaces our better understanding; sometimes our egotism causes us to be unmindful of our need, and we wander aside. Blessed Lord God, may we see ourselves. Do Thou broaden our moral culture, and may we be truth-loving and full of honor. Inspire us with the very best intuitions, and may we be prompted by the noblest purposes to engage ourselves, with the utmost enthusiasm, in the wisest course for our people, whom we serve. We pray in the holy name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order tomorrow to move to take a recess until 7:30 p.m. for the consideration only of bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, beginning with the star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Would it not be possible to assign a day for the consideration of the Private Calendar, instead of coming here nights? It does not appear that we will have very much essential business for the early part of next week.

Mr. BYRNS. I am hoping that that can be done, but there are more than 400 bills on the Private Calendar that have not been called, and I think if we could have a session tomorrow night for the consideration of private bills perhaps we could work in a day next week and consider most of those bills. I think Members are entitled to have them called.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree with the gentleman and I will not object to tomorrow night being set aside for that purpose, but, when business is slack, I think we might take up these bills in the daytime. Everyone is interested in them and we should get them through.

Mr. BYRNS. I hope that will be possible.

Mr. GOSS. Would the gentleman be willing to make it Friday night?

Mr. BYRNS. There are a great many Members who leave here on Friday and who are gone over Saturday. They may have bills pending upon the calendar and will want to be here. I think Thursday night would come nearer meeting with the wishes of the House than any other night that could be selected.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Personally, I think Thursday night would be more agreeable.

Mr. GOSS. Would the gentleman not be agreeable to letting it go over until next week? I have taken some interest in these calendars—not that I want to hold the House up, but in our particular subcommittees on Military Affairs we have been sitting morning and afternoon for 9 weeks. Some of us are way behind in our work. I wish the gentleman would let it go over until early next week and agree on it day to day—say, Thursday night.

Mr. BYRNS. I endeavored to have a meeting last Tuesday night.

Mr. GOSS. If the gentleman made the announcement today I am sure the House would be willing to cooperate.

Mr. BYRNS. No. I told so many Members that I was going to ask for Thursday night that I would rather make the request. Of course, it is a unanimous-consent request, but I do hope the gentleman will not object, because we should dispose of these bills.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object. There are many people who are interested in private bills who cannot be here tomorrow night, and I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Well, the gentleman does not necessarily have to be here.

Mr. MILLARD. I can be here any night except Thursday night.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, if the gentleman wishes to take that responsibility, it is his privilege. I do not have a single bill on the Private Calendar, but I am willing to come here and stay until 12 o'clock, if necessary, to get these bills passed.

Mr. MILLARD. Any day or any time except tomorrow night, and I will not object.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman does not have to be here necessarily. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that the gentleman asked for Thursday night, in preference to some other night, in order to accommodate some of the gentleman's Republican colleagues over there?

Mr. BYRNS. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No. The gentleman asked for Tuesday night and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objected to it.

Mr. BLANTON. But agreed that we could meet on Wednesday or Thursday or Friday or Saturday night.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICH. I have heard some conversation, and I feel almost confident that the reason they are asking for next Tuesday night is to accommodate men on the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. We are willing to have tonight, or Thursday or Friday or Saturday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, the 15th, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, what was the request?

Mr. HOEPPEL. To address the House for 15 minutes on next Tuesday, the 15th.

Mr. BLANTON. On what subject?

Mr. HOEPPEL. On the question of temperance and its relation to liquor control.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman turned from an extreme wet to an extreme dry?

Mr. HOEPPEL. If the gentleman will be present on Tuesday, if I am authorized to speak, that will be evident.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad the gentleman has had a change of heart.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

IMPORTANCE OF HIGHWAY LEGISLATION

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on road legislation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, some may inquire why an authorization for further highway work is proposed separately in H.R. 8781 and not made an item in a bill to cover a broad program of various types of public works such as was contained in the National Recovery Act of 1933. I should like to remind those who offer this suggestion that highway work is different from other types of public works and it is proper that it should be considered in a different category from the general public works.

In the first place, highway construction is a continuing responsibility upon the Government. The Federal Government since 1916, until last year, made provision for annual appropriations for highways, and, of course, the emergency appropriation of last year took the place of the routine Federal highway allotment. That fund of $400,000,000 was allotted to the States in June of last year. A number of conditions which were new to the States were prescribed by the Public Works Administration. These required that the States should submit a plan showing the use which the State proposed to make of its funds, divided among different classifications of projects. Not less than 25 percent of the State allotment was required to be spent within municipalities, not more than 50 percent on the Federal-aid system, and not more than 25 percent upon secondary roads outside of the Federal-aid system. Before any other progress was made the State was required to await Federal approval of its entire program under its allotment. Since the activity within municipalities and upon secondary roads was a departure from previous Federal-aid practice, there was an initial delay in getting work under way. This was overcome in a remarkably short time, for by an early date in August contracts on highway work were beginning to be awarded in the various States.

From August to this date 87 percent of the $400,000,000 has been obligated or actually placed under contract. Today definite knowledge is in hand which enables the Bureau of Public Roads to plot the activity which will be carried on by the entire highway appropriation. Such a chart in terms of employment was submitted to the Roads Committee by Chief MacDonald. It has been printed as part of the hearings. This chart shows that employment—which was the impelling motive behind the entire Public Works program of the National Recovery Act—will reach a peak during June, July, and August of this year, and that following August employment will drop off very rapidly, reaching a vanishing point by the end of this calendar year. No other type of projects authorized under the National Recovery Act has reached a similar stage of development. It is not yet possible to prepare similar charts with any degree of accuracy for the great bulk of projects other than roads, which will be paid for by the funds of the National Recovery Act of 1933.

Without additional Federal funds highway work, then, unlike other Federal works projects now authorized, would rapidly approach a premature shut-down after September of this year. With no additional funds in sight all plans by the United States Bureau of Public Roads and the States for 1935 road work would come to a halt. This must not occur. It is, therefore, urgent that Congress make provision for additional funds to continue this participation of the Federal Government with the States in road work.

This bill—H.R. 8781—for which a special rule has been granted, is the only measure pending before the House which would authorize the additional Federal highway funds which are so important and necessary to extend the Federal highway activity within the States. This bill was reported favorably to the House on March 21 by the unanimous vote of the Roads Committee. I now ask your favorable consideration in order that this measure may be passed to the Senate for its consideration and action.

The bill deserves to rank with the important measures which are to be scheduled for our attention in the few remaining weeks of this session of Congress.

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call to the attention of the House at this time the fact that nearly 2 months ago the President of the United States sent a special message to Congress requesting action on an appropriation so that the Federal Government might continue its exhibit at the Chicago World's Fair this year. The bill was passed in the Senate making the appropriation. It is a very, very important piece of legislation, not only to the World's Fair people but to the Government itself, which has an enormous exhibit in Chicago. We have invited foreign governments to exhibit there this year. The buildings are in a dilapidated condition.

The fair will open in 2 weeks, and nothing has been done by this House, because, forsooth, a Member of the House is carrying in his pocket a rule to bring this legislation up at any time, and because no jobs, no petty jobs, went into his district, he is more or less attacking the World's Fair in that way.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say——

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman will wait just a moment, the $405,000 to be appropriated for the fair is for use and expenditure by the Government itself, for the Government's own exhibit. Nearly 2 weeks ago today the Committee on Rules reported out a rule. A Member of the House is carrying that rule in his pocket, and I think it is a shame, Mr. Speaker, that of all the great exhibitors at the fair last year, the only recalcitrant one is the Federal Government itself.

The situation that will present itself will be that when the other buildings are completed, when the other exhibits are completed, the Federal Government will be lagging behind, because some Member of the House has not received a few jobs for his district from the World's Fair people.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say in response to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] that the gentleman to whom he refers as having this rule for the purpose of reporting it to the House, has been most persistent ever since the rule was adopted in his effort to get time to present that rule. I want to say in all kindness to him, and I do not mean any offense when I say it, but he has pestered me nearly to death in his effort to get that rule before this House. And I assured him it would be considered at the very first opportunity.

Its nonconsideration has not been due to him in any sense of the word; he has been most diligent in his efforts to get that rule considered. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] will assist those of us who are trying to get the pending bill through at an early hour this afternoon, I think I can assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] that the gentleman from Illinois who has the rule, has been given assurance that he can call it up for consideration this afternoon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] said that the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was carrying this rule around in his pocket.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I did not say the gentleman from Illinois; I said the Member of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But the gentleman meant the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was carrying this rule around in his pocket. The fact is, that immediately after the rule was reported from the Rules Committee, Mr. SABATH reported it to the House, and it is now on the calendar.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then why does he not call it up?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is quite a different question from the unwarranted charge that he is carrying the rule around in his pocket. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has not been able to call up the rule because it has not been on the program as set by our leaders; but he has been trying every hour of every day to bring the rule to the floor of the House. Because it was not in the program, however, he could not call it up. Why, Mr. Speaker, if the distinguished gentleman from Illinois had not pressed for the rule it would not have come out of the Rules Committee. The gentleman has been the sole champion of the measure and is more entitled to credit for it than any other Member of the House. The other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has done nothing, to my knowledge, to bring this measure before the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then why does not the gentleman call it up?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman has tried many times to have the rule considered.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the majority leader promise that the rule will be taken up this afternoon?

Mr. BYRNS. It can come up this afternoon if the gentleman will help dispose of the pending bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will help dispose of it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the charges made by my colleague are willful, deliberate, coldly calculated, and are made for the sole purposes of discrediting, creating prejudice, and to promote unfair attacks upon me by the Chicago newspapers, and at the same time to get some publicity for himself.

Only 15 minutes ago I talked with the Speaker of the House and with the majority leader urging and pleading that I be allowed to call up this rule. I have sought an opportunity to call up the rule from the moment it was reported. Upon my earnest pleading the Rules Committee accommodatingly granted the rule. The very next day I was charged with delay because I had not reported the rule, whereas the next day we held memorial exercises and there was no chance to report this rule. Four other rules have been reported. The agreement was that the Chairman of the Rules Committee would report his rule only, which would make in order the stock exchange regulation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I gladly yield.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman from Illinois yesterday got a bill passed to aid the fair by getting exhibits released, did he not?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I did; but my colleague [Mr. BRITTEN] was not here.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's Republican colleague, however, gave the gentleman no credit for that whatever.

Mr. SABATH. I do not want any credit from him; but I do naturally resent these unfair and unjust charges; and I could properly say that they are false, because I have done everything within my power to effect consideration of this special rule to make in order the bill authorizing the small appropriation the President has kindly recommended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think it is necessary to add anything to the assurance already given by my associate on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], as to the extreme diligence exercised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] in reference to this matter in the Committee on Rules for several weeks. He has been most persistent in securing the adoption of this resolution. The gentleman brought it in in the regular way, and it was placed on the calendar.

Under our system of procedure, there were matters of major importance that the majority leader and the Speaker put on the party program for consideration. I may say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] that there is no justification on earth for the statement the gentleman made which sought to reflect in any way upon the diligence with which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has pursued this matter. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is deeply interested in securing this authorization for the Government's participation in the fair. The gentleman is just as much interested in it as is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has not slept upon his rights in connection with this matter but has pursued it with extreme diligence.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in my desire to give way to the message from the President I failed to say that I have talked to the Speaker and the majority leader only a few moments ago, and they assured me that I will have a chance to call up this afternoon the resolution referred to a few moments ago, and they informed me further that they believed that the Johnson bill, which is now pending, would be completed and passed by the House by 3 or half past 3 and that I would then have a chance to present my request and get action thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman agree to call up the resolution tomorrow if the bill now under consideration is not finished this afternoon?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, I will; and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] knows that I have been trying to get this rule through for the last week. May I say that that was the assurance given to me 5 minutes before my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] made the charges against me; in fact, he must have observed me while I was talking to the Speaker and Mr. BYRNS at the Speaker's desk.

PROCEDURE OF PUBLIC-UTILITY COMMISSIONS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 752), to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrator boards.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 752, with Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAIBORNE].

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Chairman, it is indeed a pleasure to address the House on a subject devoid of politics and of which I have intimate acquaintanceship. As a member of the State and Federal bar of Missouri for the past 30 years, I know something of the procedure in the State and Federal courts of Missouri.

I was rather shocked to hear the inferential charges of delaying trial leveled at Federal judges in cases where Federal injunction was sought to hold up rates fixed by rate-making bodies. I say, frankly, that the Federal judges of Missouri, the 2 at St. Louis and the 2 at Kansas City, have at no time been under the influence of any utility corporation, or, for that matter, of any corporation or person. I would also point out to the gentlemen who criticize the Federal judiciary that at this time it stands out in bold relief when contrasted with the State judiciary in the field of criminal prosecutions. If it had not been for a Federal court in Chicago I dare say that Al Capone would still be at large. I would much prefer to defend a man charged with crime in a State court than in a Federal court, and that for the obvious reason that the chances for an acquittal is greater in the State court than in the Federal.

It has been argued that time can be saved by forcing the utility companies, when applying for injunctions to restrain the putting into effect rates, to file their suit in a State court. That is not so in Missouri. My experience teaches that litigation moves faster in the Federal courts than in the State courts—I do not know about the Federal dockets of other States—I do know that in St. Louis, Mo., you may file your complaint in a Federal court, have a hearing, win or lose, go to the United States court of appeals, argue and get a decision all within a year if both sides wish it. I have done it. If you lodge your case in a State court you are a year in getting to trial; and if you take an appeal, you are from 2 to 3 years in getting a decision in the Supreme Court, even though both parties are ready at all times. A utility case taken before a Federal court in Missouri proceeds more rapidly than if taken before a State court.

Then, in connection with this matter of speed, bear in mind if you try a utility case before a three-judge Federal court you have a hearing, the appeal goes direct to the United States Supreme Court. You jump over the United States Court of Appeals. But if you lodge the same case in the State court, you have a trial, then you go to the State supreme court, and then to the United States Supreme Court. So your record gets to the United States Supreme Court quicker by the Federal route than it does by the State route.

I should like to ask the Members if they would have less difficulty in serving their country were they elected for life than they have in serving it when elected every 2 years. Taking this as a rule by which to measure the conduct of a trial judge, do you feel that a trial judge could hear a case better if chosen for life, with no regard to renomination and reelection, than a trial judge who sits on the bench for 6 years and must necessarily listen to the voice of his constituents if he wishes to sit on the bench for more than one term?

The reason ofttimes for going to the Federal court is to get away from local prejudice, and local prejudice is not confined to corporations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. In closing let me make this point: One day a number of truck drivers retained me to bring an injunction suit to restrain the putting into effect of an act of the Missouri Legislature. The legislature had passed the bus and truck act. It delegated to the public service commission the duty of putting that act into effect. These little, humble truck drivers thought that the act was taking their property without due process. I filed my case in the Federal court at Jefferson City. I asked to restrain the Missouri Public Service Commission, the Governor, the attorney general, and so forth, from enforcing the act. I got a three-judge hearing in Kansas City. The whole matter was disposed of in less than 6 months.

Now, why did I go to a Federal court? I went there with these little truck drivers for the reason that I felt three Federal judges would be more likely to hold an act of the Missouri Legislature unconstitutional than a State judge would be likely to so hold when he, in turn, had to run for office. If a State judge declared a rate unlawful, it might beat him in the next election, regardless of merit, but not so with a Federal judge.

If you carefully read the Lewis amendment, I believe you will find that it remedies present evils complained of without being harmful to the interests of the public or utilities. Under the amendment a utility company seeking an injunction from a three-judge Federal court would bring before the court the transcript of the record of the proceedings, including evidence taken before such administrative board or commission with respect to such order, prepared at the expense of the complainant, with the proviso that upon the application of any party the court may take additional evidence if it is material and competent and the court is satisfied that such party was by the board or commission denied an opportunity to adduce it.

However, in case no record was kept or the board or commission failed to certify such record, the court may take such evidence as it deems necessary. To me this seems eminently fair and proper. I cannot understand how any American lawyer could object to such reasonable conditions.

The Lewis amendment further provides that a Federal court shall not have jurisdiction if the complainant has theretofore commenced suit in a State court having jurisdiction thereof to contest the validity of such order on any ground whatsoever. This prevents a utility company from asking an injunction in a State court and, during the course of trial, dismissing suit and then seeking an injunction in a Federal court.

In conclusion, let me remind the House that the stocks and bonds of the great utility companies of America are largely owned by financial institutions, insurance companies, trust estates, widows, and others dependent upon income from public-utility investments.

Are we to deny such a large number of alien citizens the right to have their property protected against confiscation resulting from unjust rate?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 8 minutes on a nonpartisan issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. In fact, it is not only a nonpartisan matter, but a little unusual for me, because it upholds the present administration. [Applause.]

I must again call public attention to the shocking and terrifying activities of the Communist Party, this time operating under the euphonious title "All-America Anti-Imperialist League." With headquarters in New York City, it is creating disorders, and strikes in Cuba, our friendly neighbor.

The Cuban Government is making a great struggle under the leadership of President Mendieta to bring about a recovery from the economic depression and the misrule and corruption of the Machado regime. But it finds itself beset on all sides with Communist foreign labor agitators, who are attempting to overthrow the present government of Cuba, which is well on its way to restore economic and political stability.

It is our duty to oppose the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, or any other like organization of Communists, and expose their campaign of terror and destruction in Latin America. We see in Cuba what damage it can perpetrate and the seeds of poison and hatred that it can plant in Latin American countries against the United States.

We have extended the hand of friendship to Cuba. She lies close to our shores, and we owe it to her to drive out a common enemy, especially when that enemy is operating in Cuba from headquarters within our own boundaries. It is in our own interest to see Cuba restored to the great economic position she once held. She was our third largest buyer of American goods, purchasing from us in normal years approximately $200,000,000 of our commodities. Under the Machado regime she dropped to a low point of about $30,000,000 of American purchases. We want that purchasing power restored. Cuba, under its new administration, is eager to enter into friendly, reciprocal relations with us.

Cuba at last has a leader selected by popular acclaim. All parties united in the choice of President Mendieta. He is a man of the highest ideals, a veteran of the Spanish War, who has devoted his life for the welfare of his country. Possessed of a most intimate knowledge of Cuba's many problems, President Mendieta has patiently and courageously gone forward with progressive reforms, despite all obstacles. Our State Department, under the able guidance and advice of Assistant Secretary of State Sumner Welles, who, in my judgment, is the best-informed American on Cuban affairs, was quick to recognize the Mendieta administration. I had the pleasure of knowing President Mendieta when he was in exile in our country during the Machado regime, and I am pleased to state as a Republican and as ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that Mr. Welles displayed wise and excellent judgment in recommending prompt recognition of President Mendieta's government.

Since President Mendieta has been in office he has made rapid strides toward recovery for Cuba. It is, indeed, deplorable that the difficult task which he is performing so well is being made so much more difficult by the bombings and shootings which occur almost daily in various parts of the island. These outrages are traceable to professional Communist agitators and to an irresponsible group of Communist students who have been supplied with arms and bombs to kill and maim innocent people.

Notwithstanding, President Mendieta has acted with indomitable courage and perseverance. Supported by an overwhelming majority of the Cuban people, who seek peace and an opportunity to earn a livelihood, he has in the short span of 6 months introduced reforms in the public interest. For the first time in years all government employees are receiving a living wage, and they have even received their back pay. The pay of the sugar workers under the present administration has increased materially—in some instances more than doubled. No longer will cheap contract labor be permitted to be imported into Cuba. Now, by government decree, 75 percent of people employed must be Cubans.

Already its import duties have increased from about $500,000 per month to approximately $2,000,000 for the month of April 1934.

When the present administration came into power there were only 23 sugar mills in operation. More than a hundred additional mills have been opened up under the new order. All strikes have virtually ended, and complete protection has been afforded to foreigners and foreign property.

President Mendieta opened up the great National University of Havana under its own Government after its doors had been closed by Machado. Its professors have now returned from exile, and several thousand students are now back at their studies.

A civil service has been created for public employees, a homestead law has been established, and legislation has been enacted for the establishment of agricultural credit banks. A council of state has been created, under the able leadership of Dr. de la Torre, former chancellor of Habana University, to advise on constitutional reforms to be submitted to the people at the next election.

These constructive measures have already begun to show beneficial results for the country, both politically and economically. Already many of the commodity prices have moved upward, including sugar, its principal product.

Cuba can and will recover and become again a great market for our manufactured products, if she can rid herself of the Communist agitators and trouble makers, who are nothing more than political opportunists seeking to take advantage of the deplorable economic conditions in that country.

Our Departments of Justice and State should combine in making a thorough investigation of the activities of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League, which is using the United States as a base of operations to spread its creed of class hatred, strikes, and industrial unrest among the Cuban laboring people. We owe it to ourselves and to the Cuban people to put an end to these revolutionary Communist activities. [Applause.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who speak may be granted 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, this is no time for anyone to engage in baiting public utilities. They have their troubles; they have their uses; they bring into our lives useful things that lessen our labors and add to our enjoyment and make our lives more complete and more wholesome.

So I decry anything that may be said on this floor that will tend to make their burdens greater or to affect their good standing before the public.

But, Mr. Chairman, the question before us is simple. It is not a question of corporations or of utilities, but a question of court procedure only.

We have heard the eminent gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] say that this is an attempt to defeat the whole structure and processes of the Federal courts and to tear them up by the roots. The gentleman is one for whom I have the highest respect on account of his wisdom, his learning, his ripe experience, his beautiful rhetoric, his forceful logic and eloquence, and his charms of speech and person. But he is mistaken in this instance.

He it was who spoke about going to some foreign State and putting a nickel in the slot and then bringing home a charter to do business as a corporation in the home State. That is exactly what is done. They get their charter, their corporate existence from some foreign State—possibly Delaware—and then they come back to their home State and ask for valuable franchises so that they can go out and use your streets, your highways, your air, your water, your streams rolling down to the sea to engage in some sort of public-utility business. They come back to their home State for the purpose of exercising the people's right of eminent domain. They come back to condemn private property and appropriate it to their own uses and purposes. They come back home for police protection and for franchise rights, and for all the thousands of good things that the State confers upon them.

Why should they not submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the State courts? Who rises here to say that the State courts shall not be trusted? They have been the bulwark of our liberties. Property rights and human rights, principles as well as dollars, are intrusted to their keeping, and they have always kept the faith. It ill becomes a citizen to go into a foreign State and accomplish his incorporation and then come back to his home State to ask for franchises, rights, and privileges which the home State alone can give him and then turn around and say that he does not want the State court to protect the very rights that he has received from that same State. If the State grants him a franchise, why should he object to testing his rights in a State court? If a State gives him the only valuable thing that he expected to get when he joined a company incorporated in a foreign community, then why should he stand here to argue that he must be given the right to ignore State jurisdiction? And this appears all the more when we know that the most humble citizen as well as the richest corporation is bound always to receive the protection of the Federal Constitution. No tribunal, no rate-fixing body, no State officer can take away from the most humble citizen or the most arrogant corporation the rights which the Constitution of the United States confers. The Governor of a State cannot do it; the lower courts of the State cannot do it; the supreme court of the State cannot do it. Always and overshadowing all these persons and things and institutions stands the Constitution of the United States of America. There is no process or practice under the heavens by which a man or a utility can be prevented from having his constitutional rights and having them protected in and by the Supreme Court of the United States of America. The Johnson bill fully protects them. It little matters what court originally may try a case so far as they are concerned, because the Supreme Court here in Washington has jurisdiction and will always have jurisdiction to take and try and hear and determine any case which affects such rights and to grant relief upon appeal such as the facts and the law will warrant. Knowing then that wherever the case may originate or whenever it may be tried, whether in the local courts or State courts or elsewhere, the Supreme Court of the United States will protect the most humble as well as the most powerful utility, what fear can there be on the part of the gentlemen who ask for these important franchises and grants, which are in nature monopolies and must of necessity be monopolies, as against the improper acts of State rate-regulatory and rate-fixing bodies.

Neither does the Johnson bill put any stigma upon Federal courts. The very statute that it amends has within it 28 subdivisions, and each subdivision grants jurisdiction to United States courts. Some of these subdivisions are long and involved and contain many grants of jurisdictional matters. The Johnson bill amends only the first of these subdivisions, and it does not even amend that subdivision except in a slight way. I have not seen any figures, but I dare say that the Johnson bill will not affect the jurisdiction of Federal courts except in a small fraction of 1 percent of the cases. While we must not go bear baiting the utilities, neither must we cry, "Wolf! wolf!" There is no wolf. The structure of the Federal courts and their jurisdictional prerogatives are affected to a small extent only. Let no one mistake the issue or be deceived. The application of the Johnson bill, when enacted into law, will be rare and attenuated.

But, gentlemen say that a State can, without the enactment of the Johnson bill, and at this time and under existing statutes, protect itself from being forced into the Federal courts. At best this will be found to be a very peculiar provision and to be a poor weapon for defense of the State-utility order, because the State is compelled to stultify itself by applying for a stay order against putting into force its own acts and regulations. It must get an order staying the operation of the very regulations which it asserts are fair and lawful. It seems to me that the procedure should require that the other party to the litigation should apply for and get the stay order. But the State utility commission is bound, under the rule, to get an order staying itself from enforcing its own regulations. In the meantime, the public is left unprotected by any supersedeas bond. This seems to me to be a trick with a hole in it.

You make an order which you believe is just and right, and then you apply to the court to stay your own order, and thus your adversary avoids the necessity of giving any bond or supersedeas, and the utility proceeds to go on charging and collecting rates and dues that are believed to be unfair and that lie at the very bottom of the litigation. This is an illogical method. When that statute was generated, if the man who prepared it did not laugh aloud he certainly must have allowed some slight and fleeting smile of satisfaction to mar for a moment the serenity of a calm and quiet imperturbation.

But if this really grants what is claimed for it, if it really protects the orders of the State commission, if it really takes away the rights of the utilities to enter into Federal courts, then, certainly it does what the Johnson bill does; and those who speak for such an illogical method of procedure and those who claim that such procedure is wholesome and correct are in logic bound to agree that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in such cases is not requisite or even desirable. How can any man believe that the Johnson bill is wrong because of taking jurisdiction away from the Federal courts and still say that the regulations in section 266 of the Judicial Code, which do the same thing, are correct and wholesome?

Now, the fact is that trials in Federal courts are attended with great expense, with much delay, with hearings held oftentimes at great distances, and with great inconveniences to common people. On the other hand, certain utilities are ubiquitous and have their offices and attorneys spread throughout the land; oftentimes their arms and their arts are not limited by space. Like the sailor, they have friends and perhaps sweethearts in every port, and they can try these cases as well in one place as another. Likewise they are oftentimes not limited by time. They have an artificial duration and, like the brook, they run on and on forever.

My distinguished friend, Mr. CLAIBORNE, the gentleman from Missouri, about half an hour ago assured us that the Federal courts were expeditious down there in his State. I have not found it so. In one little case that I was interested in, involving utility rates, we went to his great city of St. Louis and argued the case and it took the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit almost 2 years—not quite—after the case was submitted before it made its decision and handed down its opinion; and the opinion, when finally made up, was one which could well have been written within 1 day, and surely inside of 1 week. Indeed, that case took almost 4 years from the time it was started until it went through the weary processes of Federal procedure and was finally decided.

I do not impugn the integrity or good faith of the courts. But I say that Federal courts are human institutions and are not always infallible. Why, just the other day the Supreme Court of the United States finally passed upon a utility case from Chicago which has been pending in Federal courts for more than 10 years, and it was finally decided against the utility. Justice delayed is justice denied.

The Johnson bill is not hostile to utility companies. It is fair to them, as well as to rate-making bodies and to the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, the 5 minutes which were just allotted to the gentleman from Iowa were to come out of the time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER]. I have been requested to allot the remainder of that time, which is 13 minutes, to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Chairman, the issue before us today is between the Johnson bill as it passed the Senate, and which is sponsored by the minority of the Judiciary Committee, and the substitute or Lewis bill reported by the majority of 1.

I speak in favor of the Senate Johnson bill, as reported by the minority.

Both minority and majority reports recognize existing evils which make legislation imperative. Each seeks to remedy these evils, but by different methods.

The minority, through the Johnson bill, offer a remedy that is definite and clean cut. It will end once and for all the jurisdiction of the lower Federal courts to enjoin the orders of State regulatory commissions.

It compels the utility to confine its appeals to the courts of the State involved, with the final right to appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

And to me this is but common sense and justice.

Manifestly if a utility comes into your or my State and does business there under regulation of the State public-service commission or similar body, its recourse on appeal should be in the courts of that State.

The present right to appeal from the decision of a State regulatory body to the Federal district courts, seeking to enjoin the order of the commission has resulted in the evils of great expense and ridiculous delays which we are now seeking to correct.

On the other hand, the Lewis bill allows the utility to choose by which path it will take its appeal, the State courts or the Federal district courts. Inasmuch as the path through the Federal courts has allowed the utilities to delay their case they will still choose the Federal courts.

The language of the Lewis bill may be construed to allow introduction of additional exhibits such as accounting and valuation evidence by the utility claiming it was not afforded sufficient time before the commission, and so as the language of the Lewis bill reads was "denied an opportunity to adduce."

In such cases the existing evils of expense and delays would still continue.

The old cry of constitutionality was raised yesterday against the Johnson bill. Beyond question, the Congress has the right to decide the latitude of the jurisdiction of all Federal courts except the United States Supreme Court, which is the only constitutional court.

Now let me cite an anomaly which exists where the right is given utilities to leave the State courts and enjoin through Federal district courts. Thereby we place property rights above human rights.

For example: If a citizen of New Hampshire commits a capital crime in the State of Massachusetts and flees back into his own State, he is arrested by Massachusetts authorities and extradited to Massachusetts to stand trial. He cannot then plea in court that he is a nonresident of Massachusetts, where he is to be tried. He is tried in the State courts and his appeal is to the higher State courts with possible Federal appeal to the United States Supreme Court. This individual cannot elect where he will take his appeal, cannot then plead in court that he is a nonresident of Massa- thereby delaying the administration of justice in his case; yet a utility, in contrast, after the hearing before the State regulatory body, can elect to leave the State's jurisdiction and go into the Federal courts.

In the case of the man charged with murder only human life is at stake, and his case cannot transfer to Federal courts, but in rights of property, as in the case of the utility, this privilege is given, which has resulted in the undue expense and outrageous delays in the administration of justice. These evils the Johnson bill will eliminate.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, a proponent of the Lewis bill, claimed yesterday that the United States Supreme Court will only pass on questions of law and will take the facts as found by the State court of last resort. Then he quoted from an opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes, written more than 20 years ago.

As against this the Supreme Court, through Justice Hughes, said in the Crowell against Benson case:

> In cases brought to enforce constitutional rights, the judicial power of the United States necessarily extends to the independent determination of all questions, both of facts and law, necessary to the performance of that supreme function. The case of confiscation is illustrative, the ultimate conclusion almost invariably depending upon the decisions of questions of fact. This Court has held the owner to be entitled to "a fair opportunity for submitting that issue to a judicial tribunal for determination upon its own independent judgment as to both law and facts."

Let me also cite the Dayton Power & Light case, on which an opinion was rendered by Justice Cardozo 1 week ago. In this opinion fact after fact was considered and commented on so that the opinion of the Supreme Court is based on the facts as well as law.

Some exponents of the Lewis bill will tell you that the American Bar Association is opposed to the Johnson bill. Had I the time I could demonstrate some inconsistencies in that statement; it will not stand up under careful examination of the facts, but in this connection I should like to read into the RECORD from a letter written by Charles E. Clark, of the Yale University school of law to Hon. Paul Holland, chairman of the committee on law reform of the the American Bar Association, in which he says:

> The American Bar Association and its members can hope to have little influence in public life if it and they consistently and, as I believe, without careful and impartial consideration of the opposing views, strike out against judicial reform believed to be necessary by large groups of our citizens.

The Senate report well says:

> The congestion of our Federal courts is acknowledged by all.

That itself is the cause of delays which often constitute a denial of justice. The President himself has communicated with Congress about this congestion. Manifestly the passage of the Johnson bill would contribute relief to this situation, for it is estimated that the work of the Federal Judiciary would decrease from 25 to 40 percent if this Johnson bill becomes law.

Who wants this Johnson bill?

The State public-service commissions or similar bodies of 45 States earnestly ask for passage of the bill for the taxpayers.

If the average citizen of this Nation understood the entire matter, there is no question in my opinion about their getting behind this legislation.

President Roosevelt, while Governor of New York in 1930, sent a special message to the legislature calling attention to the evils accruing from the rights of the utilities to go into the Federal district courts. He pointed out that the State regulatory body is laughed at by the utility seeking refuge with a special master to be appointed by the Federal court. He says the special master becomes the ratemaker. The public-service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy. He referred to the interference by Federal courts with regulatory powers by public-service commission from his experience as Governor of the State of New York. Former Governor Johnson, of California, gives similar testimony, and in my own administration as Governor of New Hampshire I had similar experiences.

There will be no denial of justice to any utility if the Johnson bill becomes law. It simply compels them to keep their case on appeals in the State courts and then to be carried to the Federal Supreme Court. It estops the utility corporations from wearing down their opponents through delays of long litigation.

Let State courts settle State difficulties, and place individuals and utility corporations on the same basis as they seek justice.

Each of us is here representing a sovereign State. We have faith in that State and its institutions. When you and I are urged to vote against the Johnson bill we are asked, in effect, to reflect upon the justice and integrity of our own State's judicial system. By such action we imply that our higher State courts are not tribunals free from local bias. Is there one amongst us who will allow himself to be placed in the position of yielding to the suggestion that the path to justice lies through the Federal courts in a greater degree than through the courts of his own State?

I close with this statement from the now President of the United States, who, when Governor of New York, in referring to the evils which the Johnson bill seeks to overcome, said:

This power of the Federal court must be abrogated. Only the Congress can give the remedy. Legislation has been introduced in the Congress to carry out this purpose.

Mr. Chairman, fellow Members, such legislation is before us today. Let us adopt the minority report and pass the Senate or Johnson bill and put an end once and for all to the recognized evils.

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. HOIDALE. I do not want to interrupt in any spirit of hostility or controversy. I am sitting here, like a good many other Members, listening to these debates with the idea of determining what is best to do in the situation. This question occurs to me: Assuming that the Lewis bill is adopted, and assuming that there are in the gentleman's State or in my State two utilities, that both of those utilities go before the local State commission upon the same controversy, upon the same state of facts. The decision of the commission is identical in the two cases. One of those utilities companies elects to go the State way and the other elects to go the Federal way. The decision in one case is favorable to one utility and to the other case is unfavorable to the utility, and all upon the same state of facts. Where does that leave the State or the utility?

Mr. TOBEY. I think it leaves them hanging between nothing and something. The only way to handle that is for the gentleman to vote for the Johnson bill and put them in the State courts once and for all.

Mr. HOIDALE. It looks that way to me.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. I have no intention of discussing further the merits of this bill. I only rise to deny the intimation contained in the speech made by my esteemed colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], and later, in a more pointed way, by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD]. Both seemed to intimate that my advocacy of the Lewis bill was insincere and that I did not desire any legislation. Such is not the fact. On the contrary, I believe the Lewis bill is a wise and constructive piece of legislation. Sooner or later it should be enacted. I tried to indicate that as my opinion in the speech that I made to the House yesterday. The only possible justification for the imputations of my motives is this: Before the Committee on Rules I did bring to its attention the grave question whether it was wise in this critical industrial situation to give this measure a preferential status. I did so because it seemed to me unquestioned that the holders of utility investments are profoundly concerned about the Johnson bill. I may believe in a major operation, but I do not want a major operation at a time when it may be fatal.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECK. No. Pardon me. My time is short. I feel that this country is now trembling on the uncertainty whether it will have a relapse or whether it will continue in its convalescence. Ten million investors, whose aggregate holdings are estimated at $28,000,000,000, are affected by this legislation. I thought the Lewis bill could more profitably come up early in the next Congress, when the country was in a less critical condition, and I saw no such urgency as to require its immediate passage, when millions of investors are likely to take fright by even the discussion of the question.

I do want my friend from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], and my friend from Washington [Mr. LLOYD], with whom I am pleased to collaborate in the Committee on the Judiciary, to acquit me in their generous hearts of playing the double part of pretending to favor the Lewis bill, in the preparation of which I collaborated, when, according to their suggestions, I am opposed to any remedial legislation. Such is not the fact. The Lewis bill sooner or later should become law. [Applause.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] to yield the remainder of his time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], amounting to 30 minutes, I believe.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I say there are two additional speakers on this side at this time. I understand, of course, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] has the right to close. I do not know how many additional speakers he has or what is the arrangement on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KURTZ]. My colleague, Mr. OLIVER of New York, and myself, are the only remaining speakers on our side.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago I was corporation counsel of the city of Syracuse, and I have had some experience with public-utility rate cases. I know from that experience that such a case is a protracted, tedious, technical, and costly piece of litigation, even when the matter never gets beyond the public-service commission. If it is taken into the State court or the Federal court, or both, the expense and the delay in reaching a final determination are, of course, vastly increased. The municipalities of the country justly complain against the extravagance of our present legal machinery and the slowness with which it moves in rate cases. The public-service commissions of the various States are practically unanimous in their demands for relief from these two things—delay and expense.

Let me quote a few typical statements made by public-service commissioners in behalf of the Johnson bill, before the Lewis bill was drafted, so you may know the grounds on which they support it:

Out of our experience we know it is urgently needed for the speeding up and fair determination of important rate controversies. (K. F. Clardy, chairman Michigan Public Utilities Commission and chairman National Association Railroad and Utilities Commissioners committee on legislation.)

The passage of this bill would remove complaint of long delays in matters of rate adjustments before commissions. (Tennessee Railroad and Public Utilities Commission.)

If the Johnson bill should be adopted and utilities should be required to test the validity of the commissions' orders in the State court, much time and expense would be saved. (Lon A. Smith, chairman Railroad Commission of Texas.)

The department favors the proposed act for the reason that it believes the same will be a great step forward in regulation, and that it will result in a considerable saving, both in time and money. (E. K. Butler, director Department of Public Works, State of Washington.)

We believe that the business of the commission could be greatly expedited if the utilities were compelled to go to the State courts, and we know that the expense incident to this kind of litigation would be greatly reduced, both to the utilities themselves and the commission. (George L. Goode, commissioner, Georgia Public Service Commission.)

That is enough, I think, to let you know the evils that are complained of and which ought to be cured by proper legislation. The Johnson bill is widely supported because it is designed to save both time and money in the class of cases under discussion. There is not a man on the Judiciary Committee, and probably not one in Congress, who does not favor the accomplishment of those objectives.

But the Johnson bill seeks to attain them by divesting the Federal courts of all jurisdiction in public-utility cases except the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States after the final decision of the State court of last resort. Let me say, parenthetically, that the right of appeal in a rate case is an empty thing. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held itself to be bound by the findings of fact of the State courts. If there can be no review of the facts, an appeal to the Supreme Court is a vain and futile proceeding, because the rates are based on valuations. If the Supreme Court cannot pass on the valuations, it cannot pass on the rates.

The present practice has been explained here a number of times. If a rate case is of some importance, it is necessary for the municipality involved to employ special counsel and expert accountants to fight its case before the public-service commission. Sometimes months are consumed in the taking of testimony and a voluminous record is made. If the utility is dissatisfied with the commission's ruling, it may appeal to the State court, where the case is reviewed on the record made before the commission. It may also obtain a review in the Federal court by alleging that the rates fixed by the commission are confiscatory and constitute a taking of property without due process of law, and suing for a restraining order. In the latter instance the record of the proceedings before the commission is not in evidence; the case is tried de novo and the evidence as well as the expense of the original proceeding must be duplicated. By denying jurisdiction of the Federal courts the Johnson bill saves the expense and the delay caused by such duplication of effort and it is for that reason alone that the bill has popular backing.

The majority of the Judiciary Committee believe that the ends sought can be reached without doing violence to the constitutional rights of a large and important class of American citizens. The result of that conviction is the Lewis bill which we are considering today. The gentleman from Washingon in his remarks on the bill saw fit to question its parenthood. He suspects that its father is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] rather than the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], and he implies that if such is the case the bill ought to be killed.

The provisions of the Lewis bill were suggested by one of the lawyers who appeared before the committee. Doubtless others have made similar suggestions. Whoever the father of the bill may be, he has reason to be proud of his child. The gentleman's implication that Mr. BECK's advocacy of the bill, of his possible authorship, in any way discredits it will not be accepted here or elsewhere.

Under the Lewis bill, the rulings of a State regulatory body may be judicially reviewed either in a State court or a Federal court, but not in both. The company must make an election and be bound by it. If the case is brought in Federal court, it shall be determined on a transcript of the record of the proceedings before the State commission, except that additional competent and material evidence may be taken upon the application of any party to the action if that party was improperly denied an opportunity to present it to the commission.

That is all there is to the Lewis bill and it is enough to prevent effectively the annoying delays and extravagances which are possible and sometimes occasioned under the present law. No one can logically defend a bill that goes any further.

Let me call your attention to these words of the Johnson bill:

> No district court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to enjoin the enforcement of any order of a commission of a State where jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States where such order affects rates chargeable by a public utility.

That is but a partial quotation, but it contains the language I wish to emphasize. The diversity-of-citizenship provision is not important in this discussion. Any State may require a utility company to obtain a State charter and become a citizen of the State in order to do business there. Rate cases are taken into the United States courts on constitutional questions.

The Johnson bill would take away from one class of citizens the rights all others enjoy. It would deny to public-service corporations all access to the Federal courts for protection against orders of State bodies repugnant to the Federal Constitution. That proposition is shocking to Americans, and there are still many millions of them, who have a deep and abiding respect for the Constitution and the rights and safeguards of American citizens under it.

As Members of the Congress of the United States it is our duty, and should be our pride, to preserve the integrity of the Constitution of the United States and to uphold the dignity and authority of the Federal courts which were created by Congress to protect the constitutional rights of the citizens of the United States.

I will not impose on you by discussing the constitutional aspects of the Johnson bill. Others have done so more ably than I can hope to do. Permit me simply to point out that the Johnson bill deprives a class of citizens of the equal protection of the law, that it denies them the refuge of the Federal courts when deprived of property without due process of law; that it violates the universally accepted doctrine that the jurisdiction of the United States courts must be as broad as the rights and duties created under the Federal Constitution and the Federal laws.

People ask, "Are not the State courts as capable of enforcing constitutional guarantees as the United States district courts?" That is begging the question. The real question is, Shall the Federal courts be divested of their propery functions, shall they be deprived of jurisdiction which has been theirs since their creation, almost as long established as the Constitution itself?

I may say that I do not regard the judiciary of my own State as inferior in character or ability to the Federal judges. Neither do I believe from any observation I have been able to make that public utilities need to fear harsh, arbitrary or unjust treatment at the hands of the Public Service Commission of New York. I think their rights are fully protected by that body.

Why do we have a written Constitution? What is its purpose? Is it not to protect the people of the country from hasty, capricious, unconsidered acts of governmental bodies in times when waves of popular emotion or hysteria throw us temporarily off balance?

There is a steadily growing feeling of animosity toward public utilities. The executives of many large companies have been amazingly stupid in their public relations, in their failure to make the slightest effort to cultivate the good will of the people they serve. There is great public irritation because of the fortunes that have been made by rigging the securities market and juggling stocks. The Johnson bill will not reach those men. It is hoped to control their manipulations through the Securities Act, the Securities Exchange Act, the income-tax laws, and certain penal statutes.

The overwhelming majority of officers and employees of public utilities are honest, law-abiding citizens of a high type who are devoting their lives to useful and necessary service of the public. The Johnson bill hits them.

One gentleman who appeared before our committee testified that 10,000,000 American citizens are investors in public-utility stocks and bonds. They have put $28,000,000 of savings into them. If you add the numbers who are policyholders in insurance companies, members of fraternal organizations, depositors in banks, beneficiaries of thousands of educational and charitable institutions, all of which are large buyers of public-utility securities, you have an army of interested people, after allowing for duplications, that includes a substantial proportion of the people of this country. These are the people who own the public-utility companies. For the most part they are thrifty, hard-working, honest folk. Are you going to penalize this army of investors? Are you willing to say to them "The security holders in companies engaged in other types of business are entitled to the shelter of the Federal courts; you are not"?

Permit me to touch on one other point I have in mind. I spoke a moment ago of the necessity of constitutional safeguards as a defense against sudden outbursts of strong popular feeling. One witness who testified before the committee offered to put in the record a dozen newspaper accounts of speeches of a certain Governor directed against public utilities and calculated to arouse feeling and prejudice against them. They were excluded upon the objection of a member of the committee. However, an article purporting to be an Associated Press dispatch was printed in the RECORD during the discussion of the Johnson bill in the other body. I will not mention the Governor or the State, because I do not wish to offend my friend from that State, who objects to it and questions its accuracy. In substance the article stated that the Governor was determined to reduce utility rates. He removed from the State buildings the telephones of eight telephone companies opposing rate reductions and threatened others; he ousted his entire public-service commission and replaced them with men of his own selection.

He announced that he would personally campaign against any judges seeking reelection who had granted injunctions against the orders of his commission.

Perhaps that story is not true. Perhaps the rates in that particular State were outrageously high. But the story illustrates one of the dangers which must be guarded against. It is easy to imagine a political candidate for high office in some State at some time waging a campaign against utilities for his own selfish purposes. Rate cases always have political aspects. Every family pays for the services of public-utility companies, and popular sympathy is always with the public official who fights for lower rates, whether they are justified or not. Arousing popular sentiment against the gas, light, heat, power, and water companies and the trolleys and railroads is the principal stock in trade of many a demagogue. A situation might easily be developed, particularly in those States where judges are elected for short terms, in which a public utility could not obtain justice. The constitutional provisions, which the Johnson bill violates, provide a refuge from the political persecution I have described.

Frequently during the present Congress legislation has been enacted that creates problems more difficult than those the legislation is designed to solve, that produces evils more serious than those under attack. If our political doctors today became medical men and surgeons and followed their principles, they would scalp a man to free him from dandruff and amputate his arm to get rid of a hangnail.

The Lewis bill is a temperate, moderate, intelligent piece of legislation. It will accomplish the purposes which are universally desired. The Johnson bill will also accomplish those purposes, but in doing so it will weaken and in part destroy constitutional guaranties and safeguards. No sound reason or justification has been advanced or can be advanced in defense of its drastic provisions.

If the roof leaks, repair it, but do not tear the house down.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, during the last half century there have grown up in this country two systems of court procedure: The State courts, generally used by ordinary people, where legal disputes are tried, facts weighed, and the causes settled; and the Federal courts, with almost coordinate jurisdiction. Their powers have been greatly extended since the passing of the fourteenth amendment. These Federal courts are chosen in preference to State courts by powerful litigants, especially by the utilities. The gulf between the two methods of court procedure has constanty widened.

Greatly do I admire our brilliant colleague from Pennsylvania. I listened with rapt attention to his encomium on members of the Federal courts. I do not share in his worship of the Federal bench. To me they are just ordinary men; not necessarily supermen, who, often through pull, political intrigue, and the influence of entrenched wealth have been able to secure appointments to this bench. Too often, all too often, the judges are men who have been attorneys for utilities, being temperamentally and habitually for the favored few when they don the judicial ermine. These Federal judges are appointed for life. They are often forgetful of the masses and not in sympathy with advancing social development. Even the Supreme Court of the United States, functioning for 145 years, has been, partially at least, on every side of many questions. Repeatedly have the courts held that net earnings of 6 percent on utility stock is confiscatory, even when the stock has been watered many times. These courts have repeatedly held that franchises, the gifts of the people to the utilities, have a value upon which the stockholders are allowed to earn excessive dividends. These franchise values often amount to millions of dollars. Our Federal courts have produced very few liberals like Justices Holmes and Brandeis. The unjust and inequitable railroad rate structure has been repeatedly upheld by the Federal courts.

I notice those speaking for the so-called "Lewis amendment" state that the original bill is an entering wedge to break down the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. I sincerely hope this is true. I need no stronger argument to convince me that I should vote for the Johnson bill. I would favor, right now, an amendment to the Constitution limiting the term of judges to a reasonable number of years. The Lewis bill is a mighty weak substitute for a reform long overdue. The Johnson bill will do more to restore the confidence of our people in the Congress and in the courts than any other act of the Seventy-third Congress.

There is nothing the ordinary citizen dreads more than to be dragged into the Federal courts. First, the cost, usually beyond his means; second, the long distance from home; third, the unthinkable delays running into years preclude the ordinary citizens from appealing to these courts.

The finely spun decisions are often quite impossible for the ordinary mind to comprehend. The almost total indifference to personal rights, when in conflict with property rights, has produced the condition in our country which makes the passage of the Johnson bill an imperative duty of representatives of the people. Had it not been for the activities of the Federal courts in acquiring jurisdiction over the utilities, men like Insull would never have been able to build up holding companies, pyramided one upon the other. The financing of these companies made it necessary to extort from the people excessive rates for electric power far beyond the value of the services rendered. I am a great believer in public ownership of all utilities. The greatest hindrance to the advancement of public ownership is found in the Federal courts.

We, Members of this House, have today the opportunity to use our influence and our votes to curtail this rising menace to justice and right. Property rights have their place in the scheme of things, but they should be subordinated to personal rights and the good of the entire people. Practically every utility commission in the United States has felt the tyrannical hand of the Federal courts when attempting to revise rates in accordance with the investments and the ability of the people to pay. The utility commissions of the country ask us to pass the Johnson bill. In my State—Oregon—we have a very able utility commissioner in the person of Judge Charles Thomas. He has held hearings, caused evidence to be produced that has materially justified reducing rates on the railroads and rates charged by electric-power companies. When attempting to make effective his orders rendered in the interests of justice, he has often found his work thwarted by the Federal courts.

Throughout this Nation, from ocean to ocean, the Federal courts are the great reliance of the specially privileged interests, who are bearing down so heavily in this hour of distress upon the masses of people. This is the most clear-cut issue I have faced since I have been a Member of this House. The friends of the common people and of public interest are on one side and the friends of the special interests are on the other. Many Members will perhaps vote today under a misapprehension for the Lewis bill. All Members in this House who desire to vote in the public interest will be found voting for the Johnson bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to myself.

Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the arguments for and against the Johnson bill I thought of an article written by a literary genius who lived in the early part of the nineteenth century, which is one of the gems of English literature. It is entitled "The Dissertation Upon a Roast Pig."

The scene is laid in China, far back in those distant days when the people of that ancient land were just emerging from the mists of barbarism. The son of Hoti, being a careless lad, set fire to the house in which were not only the articles of household furniture, but likewise the pigs belonging to the family. The building was burned to the ground and the culprit, frantic with grief, tried to save some of the things that were not completely consumed by the fire. In stirring around among the ashes he found a young pig and burnt his fingers when he touched it. Immediately applying his fingers to his lips, he for the first time tasted the delicious flavor of roast pig. This was so savory that from that time on in every community surrounding his home there were fires whenever there were litters of pigs. He burned down houses and sties in order to have roast pig, little dreaming that it was not necessary to destroy the structure and that more splendid roast pig could be secured by roasting in the proper and approved style of today.

When I thought of that story by Charles Lamb, I felt that a good many of those who are interested in this Johnson bill are like the son of Hoti of old. They are in the act, perhaps unconsciously, of destroying the Federal courts of the United States in order to secure justice which we all desire and which could best be secured by taking care of the courts as they exist at the present time.

May I say that so far as the members of this committee are concerned those favoring the Johnson bill and those opposing it are all guided by the highest and noblest motives. It is only a question of procedure. There are two schools of thought. One school of thought believes in the Federal courts and feels they should not be limited in their jurisdiction. The other school would destroy the Federal courts, or at least insert an entering wedge that would split and in my opinion ultimately destroy them.

May I further state that in my opinion the great trouble that has heretofore characterized many utility cases was brought about by the enormous delays in their determination. These delays are traceable to the fact that there was no possibility of using the testimony taken before a public-service commission in a Federal court. The testimony taken before a public-service commission could always be legally used in State courts but never in Federal courts. By reason of this fact, the Federal courts had to start anew, and the trouble was not with the Federal courts themselves but with the Congress of the United States, which never gave to the Federal courts the power to use, under any circumstances, testimony taken before a court not of record. A public-service commission is not a court of record.

The Lewis bill, which some of us favor, attempts at this time to permit the use in Federal courts, and provides for use in the Federal courts, the testimony taken before public-service commissions. So far as delay is concerned there would then be no delay whatsoever. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts would then not be limited and all cases would be proceeded with to the end just as speedily as can be done in any State court. It was our fault, the fault of Congress, in not giving the United States Federal courts heretofore the power which we intend to give them in the Lewis bill. I cannot understand why there should be serious objection to the Lewis bill if you will examine into the question carefully and note the permission to use the testimony taken before a public-service commission in the Federal court.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KURTZ. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Is it not a fact that the question as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of rates always depends upon a state of facts which can appear only generally from the record made before the commission that hears the case?

Mr. KURTZ. Largely so. That is why the Lewis bill provides that the state of facts developed before the public-service commission of the State shall be used in the Federal courts.

Mr. MAY. Is there not a lot of economy and savings brought about in the case of litigation under the Lewis bill which authorizes the use of the commission records in the Federal courts?

Mr. KURTZ. I think so, unquestionably.

Mr. MAY. Should not these matters be heard if an injunction is brought in the Federal court on the facts developed before the State commission?

Mr. KURTZ. I think so, and that is the intent of the Lewis bill, to permit the Federal courts to decide the matter on the testimony that has been had before the public-service commission of the State.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KURTZ. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Might not the objection to the taking of the testimony before a public-service commission be the fact that the testimony there taken would not be taken under the rules of evidence of a State court?

Mr. KURTZ. That is always the case, but this is obviated by the fact that whatever testimony is taken before the public-service commission under the Lewis bill can then be used in the Federal court, whether it is taken under the rules of evidence or not.

Mr. DONDERO. I am in favor of shortening up the time and making it easier for litigants to obtain a decision in such cases.

Mr. KURTZ. That is what every member of the Judiciary Committee is anxious to do, and I may say I believe that if there had been any member of the committee who did not favor, conscientiously, the shortening of time and the saving of expense, he would have attempted to kill the Johnson bill in committee. There was no attempt to do this. They could have possibly killed it there and not permitted it to come to the floor of the House, but they wanted to see the wrongs that had been placed upon litigants righted, and therefore a majority of the committee, both Democrats and Republicans, came to the conclusion that the Lewis bill is the proper bill to shorten the time and also to save expense. Therefore they reported it upon the floor of this House, believing that an injustice had been done heretofore, not only to the Federal courts of the United States of America but the litigants before them in cases of this kind.

I may say further that when the question comes up as to whether or not the Lewis bill can be enacted into law at this late date in the session, which seems to me to be another point that has been raised here, that just day before yesterday there was a conference committee appointed to meet with a conference committee of the Senate on bills that were as contradictory as are the Johnson and the Lewis bills. We expect to get those particular bills ironed out and have them become law before the Congress adjourns. If we pass the Lewis bill I am sure we could appoint a conference committee, and the Senate could appoint conferees, and we could have the Lewis bill become law before this session of Congress adjourns. Every member of the committee wants to have some kind of law placed upon the statute books of the United States so that the Federal courts, when they act, can act expeditiously.

I desire to say further the thought with me and with a good many other members of the committee is that State courts may be more amenable to political propaganda and political passions than the Federal courts. The courts of England are noted for their justice and impartiality, and the judges of the courts of England, as I understand, are appointed for life. They are taken away from the maelstrom of political activities and political passions and, therefore, justice is more certainly had. In some States of the Union we have the same rule, particularly in the State of New Jersey, and every lawyer in this body knows that when a man is appointed to the bench for life and is removed from political activity he gives his days and nights to the deciding of the causes of litigants who come before him, free from influences. Therefore, we find in the equity books of New Jersey the most splendid and just and equitable decisions conceivable. They are quoted approvingly, not only in all the States of the United States of America but they are likewise quoted approvingly in the courts of Great Britain. There are other States where the judges are elected possibly every 4 or 5 or 10 years, where they are amenable to the passions of political strife. Our Federal judges are appointed for life on good behavior and are, therefore, free from political influences.

We want all courts to be thus free. We want untrammeled justice and we want a court that is not affected by the politics of any particular side.

Our whole system of jurisprudence is founded upon impartiality. In selecting a jury in any State of the Union no person can be placed upon the jury if he is related to a litigant. He dare not be prejudiced in any way. Our whole theory of jurisprudence is a theory of impartiality to the litigants. This can always be had in a Federal court.

I do not say that the State courts are always amenable to political passions, but I do say that they are more likely to be amenable to political influences. Only a few years ago you heard a cry going over this land asking for the recall of judicial decisions by popular vote. The American people decided this should not be done and that it was not a proper policy for a free people, because in cases of that kind the man who had the most relatives or the man who had the greatest political pull would be the one who would be likely to win his lawsuit.

So I believe there will be just as much expedition in the Federal courts as in the State courts, and they will likely be freer from political passions and political prejudices than the State courts.

The question of the congestion of the Federal courts has also come up. I may say that the congestion of the Federal courts has been brought about largely by the prohibition question. Thousands and tens of thousands of such cases have been brought and have clogged the wheels of justice, but this is a question of the past. We do not have to contend with such cases now and therefore the Federal court, freed from the passions and prejudices of the community, set apart in an attempt to do what is right, seem to me to be the proper place to decide questions of public interest such as utility questions.

Therefore, as a member of this committee, and as one who has studied these questions for a considerable time and with some degree of interest, I feel that greater justice can be brought about by giving litigants the privilege of going into the Federal courts in case they desire to do so; but, mark you, when they once get into the Federal courts they must stay there until the litigation is finished, and when they once get into the State courts they cannot get out of the State courts under the provisions of the Lewis bill. They elect the court in which they wish to try their cause and remain there until a decision is reached. A change for delay or other cause is not permitted.

So, taking all these matters into consideration, I wish to say that we who favor the Lewis bill over the Johnson bill do so after careful thought. We do so because we think it is right. We do so because we feel that ultimate justice would be more nearly attained in most cases through the Federal courts than in any other way, because these courts are removed from the passions and prejudices of the community. I not only favor the Lewis bill in contradistinction to the Johnson bill, but I shall vote that way.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KURTZ. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. It has not been my privilege to have been in the Chamber during all the debate, which I presume has been very interesting, nor have I made a close study of the bill, but I want to ask the gentleman if I am correct in the thought that all the doors of the Federal courts will be closed to public-utility companies under the Johnson bill?

Mr. KURTZ. They will.

Mr. ADAMS. And under the Lewis bill the litigants will have an election—that is, the doors of both courts will be open, and they can elect to which one they will go for justice.

Mr. KURTZ. Yes; and furthermore I want to say that the municipality, before the utility company attempts to make the election, if the municipality desires to proceed in the State court can do so and the Federal court will be ousted from its jurisdiction.

Mr. DOBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KURTZ. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOBBINS. The gentleman has stated that the litigant could go into the Federal court in case he so elects. The gentleman is referring only to the complainant, and it is the public-utility company that generally complains. If the utility company elects to go into the Federal court, then the State or municipality is bound to follow whether they wish to or not.

Mr. KURTZ. Yes; but the State can forestall that by going into the State court before the utility company goes into the Federal court.

Mr. DOBBINS. But suppose the State or the municipality is satisfied with the decision?

Mr. KURTZ. If it desires to remain in the State court, and wants to forestall the utilities going into the Federal court, it can go into the State court, although it is satisfied with the decision.

Mr. DOBBINS. Would it not be rather devious and farcical for it to go into court appealing from a decision with which it is satisfied?

Mr. KURTZ. Nevertheless such right would obtain.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the question we are about to decide comes rather close home to anyone coming from Lexington, Ky. For 9 years we have had pending in the Federal court and before the railroad commission the Lexington gas-rate case. On yesterday the City Commissioners of Lexington voted to put through a compromise that deprived the people of Lexington of an opportunity for reasonable gas rates that this law would have given them if they had had it 9 years ago.

With your permission, I want to give a statement of one of the commissioners who introduced the compromise, as to why he thought it ought to be adopted.

He said that the reduction agreed upon by the compromise would give the people the money now, that it would save further costly litigation, and that they needed it more now than they would 4 or 5 years from now.

All he could see ahead was 4 or 5 years more of litigation, with its expense to the taxpayers. I regret to see our city commission weaken in the people's fight. The rate agreed on is not fair to the small user of gas. It is not truly a compromise, but is in reality a surrender to the gas company. With every other commodity depressed in the past 5 years the company is to be allowed a rate in excess of that charged prior to 1927. This so-called "compromise" is yet to be submitted to a referendum and will be corrected when the people voice their opinions on it.

The city of Lexington is paying 60 cents a thousand for gas. One hundred and thirty miles away, at Ashland, Ky., they are paying 32 cents a thousand for gas. There is no sense in that. The city of Lexington went into court to correct it. Our State railroad commission ruled that 45 cents is a reasonable rate. The gas company took it into the Federal court, and for 9 years they played around, and we are no further along now than we were when we started, and our city commission, seeing no hope in the future, agreed to a settlement that is worse than no settlement at all. I do not want to be misconstrued. The city commissioners of Lexington are high-class men. All five of them are friends of mine and I respect them, but it is a good illustration of honest men being hoodwinked by powerful utilities, because they have no recourse at home where they can get justice for their cause. They cannot see any hope, because endless litigation is all they can look forward to, and it is expensive litigation, and so the people of Lexington are going to have to give back to the gas companies almost half of the impounded fund collected during the past 9 years and submit to a rate that is higher on the low user of gas than the old rate was. It is an illustration of powerful interests being able to force down the throat of the city commission something that the people of that town, I know, cannot approve; and while those men are my friends, as a friend of theirs I know that they have made a mistake, and they, too, I am sure, will realize it before the controversy is over.

We have had a lot of experience in Kentucky with utilities and with the influences they can bring to bear. Two years ago in the State legislature we passed a bill allowing cities and towns to buy their light plants. Utilities were powerful enough to have the Governor veto that bill. This year they were powerful enough to bring it out and kill it on the floor of the House. They were powerful enough down there to pass a utilities-commission bill with a specific provision written into it to regulate municipal plants over the protest of all municipally owned plants in Kentucky. They have been powerful enough to do everything there that they want to do; and now, with the Lexington gas case settled, our people will be compelled to pay almost twice as much as the people of Ashland, a town smaller than Lexington, and they are subjected to that because 10 years ago Congress had not passed this very bill that we are now about to enact into law. I say to you gentlemen who are honestly going to support the Lewis bill, do not be misled by the pleas that the Johnson bill will work any injustice. On the contrary, they have their high-powered lobbyists and their lawyers to plead their cause, and all that the people have to depend on are you gentlemen, their Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am reminded by the majority report of this committee of the old story told in 1896 about the fellows who talked on the money question and the gold standard. It is said that it would be a fine thing to let the foxes in this country build the hen houses so that we might protect the poultry industry in this country. This Johnson bill ought to be passed, and this amendment ought to be voted down and I will tell you why. I come from over in Joplin, Mo., where there is as honest a bunch of Republicans as you have ever known. They are nearly all Republicans, but a good many of them have got a little sense, and they will watch you fellows over on this side today. All of them voted for Roosevelt except those who were running for office, and he is just as strong now as he was when he was elected last election.

In my town we have the Empire District Electric Co. The old company that the Empire District took over were charging the people of my town 18 cents per kilowatt-hour for electric-light juice. They had the city charged with six hundred and some odd lights at $120 a year per light. When we finally voted bonds and built a municipal light plant and went around and counted the lights, we found they did not have a third of the lights that the taxpayers were paying for. We built a city light plant. They went into the Federal court before Federal Judge John S. Phillips. He has been dead a number of years. He was considered the greatest Federal judge that ever sat on a bench, and my father thought he would go to heaven when he died, but I had a different opinion of him, and I think he ought to have died when he was young. I knew him well, too. They went in there and they got an injunction before Phillips to keep us from opening our city light plant. He issued an injunction. He said they had a perpetual franchise, notwithstanding that the constitution of my State provided that no perpetual agreement can be entered into with any company, that it cannot be that it could have a perpetual franchise from my State. They went in there and he issued an injunction. Judge Phillips let them give a fraudulent and fake bond. It was not worth 10 cents. They brought us to the Federal Court. I thank God we had an honest man on that Court, Judge Charles Evans Hughes, and he is sitting there now, and you radicals don't like him, but, thank God, we have got him. You do not like him, but the people love him, and thank God for it, and men like Justice Hughes and Justice Brandeis and the beloved Judge Holmes.

Some of you when you are at home take up more time defending corporations than you do the rights of the people. I know some of you. [Applause and laughter.] I know what business you have been engaged in. I think this is the greatest Congress that was ever convened in the United States. If this Congress follows Mr. Roosevelt and the American people today and follows HIRAM JOHNSON—and, thank God, he supported Roosevelt, too, he knows an honest man when he sees him—I thank God for GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska. I thank God for LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin; but I don't think so much of some of the Republican leaders of Indiana and Ohio. [Laughter and applause.] I hope and expect them to be replaced by Democratic Senators who are in sympathy with the new deal.

Mrs. KAHN. How about HUEY LONG?

Mr. LEE of Missouri. He is a credit to both of them. [Laughter.] The primary vote in Indiana indicated that we will have a progressive Democrat from that State in the next Senate, and I have faith and confidence, Mr. Speaker, that Ohio will also send a progressive Democrat to the next Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LEE] has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEHR].

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Chairman, in the closing moments of this debate I feel it is very important to the members of this committee that they have a correct and true understanding of the situation as it existed in our committee, particularly in view of the statements which were made on the floor yesterday and which I wish to quote from yesterday's RECORD. I just want to preface that statement by saying to you that in my humble opinion every single man on the Judiciary Committee feels with reference to the situation just exactly as does the gentleman from Kentucky. His argument made on the floor today is an argument absolutely in favor of the Lewis bill just as much as it is an argument in favor of the Johnson bill.

We were all united on this proposition—that we all appreciate what the objections are. We all appreciate what the objections are that have grown up in this country during the last few years with reference to public utilities going into the Federal courts. What we are concerned about is how to apply the remedy. As members of the bar we feel we owe a solemn duty to the people of America to protect the judicial system of this country and not see it dragged down. I have no sympathy with a great many of the judges of the Federal courts. The experiences some of us have had only recently in the city of Chicago in investigating Federal judges have convinced us that it is not the the judicial system that is wrong, but it is the men who have been appointed to those posts, and the arrogance they have taken unto themselves, that is subject to just criticism. But I want you to know that not a man on this committee has attempted in any way to defeat the Johnson bill.

Yesterday the gentleman from Washington, a distinguished member of this committee, made this statement on the floor, speaking of the gentleman from Pennsylvania:

He—

Referring to the gentleman from Pennsylvania—

suggested the able member of the committee who should write the substitute amendment.

And he further said the gentleman from Pennsylvania has never been in favor of this amendment.

Let me say that after 3 days of serious hearings, in which we listened to some of the leading members of the bar of this Nation and representatives of the public utilities, our only thought was, How can this be done without affecting the Federal Courts?

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHR. In our meetings the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] was suggested, possibly by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but he was designated by the chairman of the committee to draft an amendment.

Then the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD] further said, at page 8341 of yesterday's RECORD:

As a matter of fact, I may say in passing that the Lewis substitute was never seriously considered by the committee. It was never read in committee; it was never discussed in committee; it was never open for amendment in committee. It is simply an attempt to defeat the Johnson bill.

Oh, I hope the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD] will take the floor and correct those misstatements, because that amendment was considered in the committee. It was read in the committee by Mr. LEWIS. It was open for amendment if anybody wanted to make any amendment.

It was duly considered, and after seriously considering this matter a majority of the committee, from a legal standpoint, voted in favor of that amendment. The gentleman from Washington said, "It is simply an attempt to defeat the Johnson bill." Had there been a desire on the part of a single member of the Judiciary Committee to defeat the Johnson bill, a motion would have been made to lay that bill on the table, and undoubtedly, by the vote here, if we who favored this majority report were in favor of defeating the Johnson bill, we would have voted to lay the Johnson bill on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEHR] has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I yield the gentleman from Michigan 1 additional minute.

Mr. LEHR. But we did not do that. We voted to support the Lewis bill. We brought that out in good faith. Then the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD] says:

> Here is what they expect to happen, here is what will happen, if you adopt the substitute. It will go over to the Senate, the Senate will refuse to concur, and the result will be that no legislation will pass, and that is exactly what they want and what they expect.

I say to you that if it does go to the Senate and they do not concur, then some of us may think that the proponents of this original Johnson bill in the other end of the Capitol may be hiding behind the prejudice and passion against public utilities, in an attempt to tear down the Federal courts of this Nation, which, as lawyers on this committee, we are opposed to. If they want to destroy the Federal judiciary, let them bring in a bill for that purpose. We of the majority of the committee know that the Lewis bill will correct every fault that now exists and will at the same time safeguard the Federal jurisdiction. This bill will safeguard the interests of the people and the jurisdiction of the Federal judiciary.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I hope not to take all the time allotted to me.

This is one of the most important items of legislation upon which Congress has been asked to pass judgment in a long time.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] made a wonderful address yesterday. I listened to it with much interest. The gentleman discussed the legal questions involved and made some reference to constitutional questions. The gentleman introduced mythology and Shakespeare—and I like to hear him do it for he does it so well—but I am going to ask those witnesses to stand aside and shall talk to you a few minutes with regard to this bill and the situation in which we find ourselves.

For one, I have no desire to get even with the corporations. I recognize that public utilities are necessary in this country. I recognize that public policy has got to be such as to induce people to put the necessary money into public utilities to afford the conveniences and the necessities required by the people. If there are any legislative or judicial determinations which harass utilities and make investments in them dangerous, people have to pay for them as sort of an insurance policy.

There is no question but that we used to have a dual system of government. We of each State used to have two constitutions; but we have grown together at the points of governmental contact until at last we are a Nation. We have but one Constitution. In the sense that it is written it is in part the Federal Constitution, and in part the State constitutions; but, as a matter of fact, the constitution of a living government is not written, never was written, and never can be written; it is rooted in the governmental concepts of the people or it is a dead thing, merely some document put away in a library.

What are we going to do about this? What is the present legal status? Let us see where we are, and let us see what is involved. I am going to talk in just a plain, conversational sort of way. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said yesterday that if a State desires to avoid adjudication of a rate in a Federal court, existing law provides the method and the remedy. If this statement be true—and I do not challenge it, although, of course, it has not yet been determined by the Supreme Court—if this be so, then the issue before the House is not whether these matters may be determined in the Federal court or in the State court insofar as the determination of the State itself is concerned. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that if a State desires to have these rates determined by its own courts it can bring an action in its State court to enforce the rate fixed by its own regulatory body, stay those rates, and have the matters determined in the State courts with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. This is the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with reference to existing law. I am not prepared to agree fully with the gentleman that this is existing law, because the section of the code upon which this opinion is based is written in very involved language. If it be true, however, and the gentleman made the legal argument in major part for those supporting the Lewis amendment, then the differences here would seem to be more as to form than substance.

The section of the Federal code referred to—section 266—provides—I do not want to read it; I think I can state the substance of it—that in the event an interlocutory injunction of a rate is sought, the State may go into its own courts to enforce the determination of its regulatory body and ask that the rates of that body be stayed until the matter is finally determined. One of the questions is whether or not, after a matter has been concluded in the State courts, resort by the corporation may not be had to the Federal courts. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am inclined to think this would be held res adjudicata, but I am not sure.

Then there is another question as to whether or not, in the event a temporary restraining order is granted by one judge prior to the convening of the three-judge court, the State may thereafter go into the State courts. One of the Federal courts in a Kentucky case held that a State could not go into the State courts after the temporary restraining order had been granted by one judge prior to the convening of the three-judge court.

What does this Johnson bill propose? This Johnson bill proposes to make clear and definite, in substance, the procedure which it is claimed may be had now in a roundabout, confused, irritating way. I do not think I am incorrectly stating that fact.

I believe fully, Mr. Chairman, that we must choose between subjecting these public utilities to the control of the States where they operate and the socialization of the industry of this country. I do not believe we can drift on as we are going now. Clearly we are drifting rapidly toward socialization. I do not believe it is possible under our system of government with the universal ballot for anybody, any organization, any corporation, to escape public vengeance once it is aroused. They have too many ways of getting at them. When any corporation flees from the regulatory agency of a State to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and seeks refuge in the Federal courts against the necessity to obey the voice of the State where it is located, it is simply building the dam a little higher, a little higher against the time when it breaks under the accumulated pressure and the deluge comes. These corporations have got to arrange to get along with the people in the State where they are doing business. It is impossible under our system of government to escape absolute dependence upon the sense of fairness of the people. That is all there is to it; and the quicker these corporations find it out, the better it is going to be for them and for the people whose money is invested in these corporations.

The people, on the other hand, must learn that they have got to treat these corporations fairly. God Almighty has some natural laws which operate to control what human beings may do to other human beings. In my State the railroad companies were given every privilege. Then the promoters got in charge of the situation. They would develop a town site 20 miles from another town, make a preferential rate and starve those people out, and do all sorts of things. Later on when they began to crowd them, the railroads began to buy up legislatures, to have their paid men in the legislatures.

If there are any utilities engaged in that sort of practice, the quicker they take their hired men out of the legislatures of this country and begin to trust the people the better it is going to be for them. [Applause.]

I believe a bill like the Johnson bill is the only sort of governmental arrangement which gives any hope of security to the industry of this country. This is a government of the people. There is not any other government.

Take the State of Texas, for instance. We were for a while an independent nation. Do you mean to tell me that we would not have had public utilities in Texas if we had remained an independent nation because there was no other court that the utilities could resort to outside of Texas? That is perfectly ridiculous. Take a State like Virginia. Suppose the Union had not been formed. Do you mean to say that Virginia would not have had electric lights down there because there would not have been some sort of tribunal outside of Virginia that the utilities could have resorted to? Talk about the Constitution. The Constitution of the people and of this Government is not written in a document. The safety of invested capital is not in a court. It is in the people.

The people have to treat these corporations right, and I want to see that too. After we let the railroads have everything and the railroads did everything they could, when anyone ran for the legislature promising to do something against a railroad they were elected. What happened? We ran railroad investments out of the State of Texas. We had some streaks of rust across Texas. Then we had to pay higher freight rates and passenger rates than we would otherwise have had to pay. But we learned our lesson. The railroads learned their lesson and the people learned their lesson. God Almighty has not any other plan of educating the people except by experience, either our own or somebody else's.

When you take the American people, who are the source of power and who have the final word and say, and undertake to separate them from responsibility, you violate the very plan of nature provided for the development of nature. How are you going to have a dependable people unless you make them responsible? That is what we need in this country, and that is what we have got to have in this country. Responsibility sobers judgment. You take one of these wild-eyed boys and move him in here. He will raise Cain for a year or two, then he will begin to feel responsibility. The same thing is true of human nature everywhere. Give the American people responsibility and they will govern correctly. What we have been trying to do is to build up a wall between the people and political power, violating everything that has been taught to us in connection with the history of government.

I have not anything against the utilities, and I am not afraid of the people. What should be done in this country, if there are any people in responsibility with real good old-fashioned horse sense in these utilities, and there are—I know some of them—instead of permitting the utilities to be put in the attitude of showing every time the question comes up that they are afraid of the people and unwilling to trust the people, let them remove these economic brigands who have been holding high places as captains of industry and put some people with good old-fashioned common sense into managerial responsibility. Let them go down to the folks and say, "Look here, we are going to trust you; give us a square deal and we will come in here and build the right sort of utility. We will take care of you folks, and when we get into dispute we will thresh the question out with you, and not put it up to some Federal judge and get an injunction."

People do not like to be enjoined. Free people do not like to have some court or some human being undertake to deny to them the right of effectuating their governmental will. The quicker these corporations find it out the better it is going to be for everyone. We can get along with these corporations. These courts that have been the havens of refuge for some of these utility corporations have done more to create enmity and prejudice for which these utilities have to pay a tremendous price than all the other influences in this country. Let the people connected with these public-utility corporations go around and mingle with the people and walk shoulder to shoulder with the ordinary people and the situation will be different. When the people come to the conclusion that they will be treated fairly they will get along better and the utilities will get along better.

Whenever we reach a situation where the majority of the sentiment and purposes on the part of the people of a State is not honest and fair, that is the end of the road. A public utility comes into my State and says, "We want a franchise." They make that request to a State that has a right to determine the question. These rate-making agencies do not have to sit up on a bench like a bunch of judges and determine what the rate ought to be. That is not the way to figure it out. It is less formal. It is not a lawsuit. They go out and secure any sort of sensible information that will help everyone in arriving at a correct conclusion. I find in my committee that if we just get down and casually talk around with the witnesses we learn a whole lot more about the matter than if we sit up like a bunch of Supreme Court justices and have a lot of fellows out in front making hot-air speeches. Let them talk to the witnesses and get all the information that they want, just as you do when you want to find out something. That is necessary in these rate determinations. That is why it is arranged that neither the legislature nor the courts should have first responsibility. The people through their regulatory agency may say, "This seems to be a fair rate"; and the utility may say, "We hardly think that is a fair rate."

All right. The courts of the State are open. Why should not that question be sent to the courts of a sovereign State which gives them the right to live?

Do you think I would do business in a State where I do not trust the integrity of its courts? That is what this means. Right square down to its essence it means just that. Now, I respect these other gentlemen, but there is not any getting around the point. This is a domestic question, a question between the people and the public utilities, created by them to serve the people of the State. When they say, "We are not willing to go into the courts of your State and have the question litigated", what does it mean? It means that they declare "We do not trust their honesty or their judgment", that is all. Did you ever run away from a thing you trusted?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Does anybody think that the American people do not understand what this means? How good would you feel toward a fellow who said, "I do not trust you, and I do not trust your agencies to give me a square deal"? Suppose something comes up later and he has to go into the State courts. He has a damage suit against him, for instance, or there is some other reason to resort to them, and day before yesterday he was not willing to trust them. Do you think it may be expected of human nature that he would as probably get a square deal as if he had not slapped them in the face day before yesterday?

The quicker these utilities get right down to doing business with the people of the States and the courts of the States, the better it is going to be for the people who have their money invested in these utilities. Do not have any question about that. This fellow who has been taking a vacation over in Greece would be afraid of a State court. He would rather try his matter before the courts in Greece. That is where he has been litigating, anyhow. You take the kind of people we know connected with our public utilities and in my State, and as a rule they are all right. It is some of the big fellows who are at the head of things in places like

New York and Chicago that cause the trouble. If you would turn the men loose who are their representatives in Texas, there would not be any danger about their getting justice in the courts of my State. The people like them. It is when they want to put on the screws, it is when they do these slick things, and build up prejudice against themselves that they are afraid to go back to the courts of the people they have been robbing. That is what is the matter with them, and the quicker we get these crooks out of power the quicker the people in the States will insure justice. That is all there is to it. I am not overlooking the fact that when wrongdoing has aroused opposition and antagonism that in a given case injustice may occur. Retribution does not recognize fine distinction or discrimination. This resort to Federal courts may postpone, but only for a later date, when principal and accumulated interest must be paid. Only those can be depended upon to protect us whom we trust. Only the people can protect, therefore the people must be trusted. A failure to trust the people deprives of the people's protection.

We all want to do what is right. I do not think there is anybody who has higher regard for another person than I have for my dear friend, Judge LEWIS, whose amendment prevailed in the committee. Oh, the boys have been jawing at each other, you know. They have had to appoint a lot of postmasters lately, and it is along about election time. That is not good for the nerves. We have been sitting up late nights reading letters from our constituents and the boys have been sort of fussing with each other, but they are all right. They are the best-behaved lot of fellows under normal conditions you ever saw. They get messed up a little every now and then; but every man on the committee has been trying to do what he thinks right about this matter. They have different notions about it. My friend CONDON is an awfully good boy in a bad cause, but he lines up usually on the right side, and I am very fond of him.

I am not going to take any more of your time, because I know what you are going to do. I have talked to juries before. I have been around with folks a good deal in my life. I do not aim to send this speech out, anyhow, so I am going to quit. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CONDON].

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Chairman, we are about to close this debate, and I know there is not anything I can say that would change the mind of any Member of the House, and if I did have any such chance prior to the speech of our distinguished chairman, that chance has long since disappeared.

I pay this House the compliment that it can and it will rise above appeals to passion and prejudice. I know that in the heat of debate Members have said some things that, perhaps if they had time to reflect, they might not have said in just the way they did, but I do not think this is going to affect the vote of any Member of this House. I know that every Member here on both sides of the aisle respects the opinions and the motives of each Member who does his duty when he is called upon to discuss the great public questions that come before us and, finally, to cast his vote as the Representative of the constituents who have sent him here.

It is true, as the distinguished Chairman of the Judiciary Committee said just a few moments ago, that on many occasions I have been with him and have gladly followed him, and I want to emphasize, if I may, and ask the House to indulge me for a moment in a few brief personal references.

I want to emphasize that on every vote that has come before this House when it has been a question of the utilities as against the public, the record will show I have voted in the public interest. I had not been in this House but a few months when I was called upon to cast my vote on that great controversial question of Muscle Shoals. There were probably few people in my district and few people in my State who cared one way or the other about that question. I could have voted against the proposition or voted for it without any political effect whatever, but I believed in that proposition and I voted for Muscle Shoals, and on every other vote that came before the House on that question—and you men who have been here for a number of years know that it recurred frequently—I was recorded in favor of the proposition.

Then when the anti-injunction bill came before the Judiciary Committee it was referred to my subcommittee, and at that particular time there was much being said in the Congress and in the city here that the committee would delay the consideration of the bill which had passed the Senate, but on that subcommittee I cooperated with my distinguished colleague, Major LaGuardia, now the mayor of New York, and, along with the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. MCKEOWN, we reported the bill promptly to the full committee, and the full committee reported it to the House and it became a law. I was happy to support that legislation not only in committee but on this floor by my voice and vote.

In that particular instance we were called upon to deal with the abuse of injunction procedure by Federal judges; we did not, as is attempted here in the Johnson bill, cut down and destroy the equitable jurisdiction of the Federal courts because of these abuses. No; but, like sound and reasonable men, like men who understand the law and the necessity for the law, and who understand also that there are times when popular prejudice and clamor does not wish to see any law enforced, we so amended the code as to prohibit Federal judges from committing the abuses complained of and which were bringing the Federal courts into disrepute in labor disputes.

When this bill came before the Judiciary Committee, in spite of appeals for haste, in spite of appeals to pass the bill without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i", I am proud to say here that the committee refused to be hurried, to act hastily, but in the calm and thoughtful deliberation in executive session we considered every argument that had been made in favor of the Johnson bill, and likewise considered every argument made in favor of the Lewis substitute.

As a result of the deliberation of the committee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] was designated to act as the agent of the majority of the Judiciary Committee to draw a substitute, and that substitute was submitted to the Members who voted for it, and who approved of it as a proper solution of the abuses of existing procedure, pointed out during the hearings.

Now, my friends, I had an open mind on the question. I am not a lawyer familiar with the utility rate cases. I have never tried a case for a utility company. I have never been offered a brief, and do not hold one now for any utility company.

But when the question came up on the hearing, I maintained an open mind, as the records of the hearings will show. I wanted to know why it was necessary to pass the Johnson bill. There are several places in the hearings which will show that questions were asked by me seeking to find the necessity for legislation as proposed in the Johnson bill.

Now, it has been said that the Lewis bill does not meet the objections made to the committee by those who appeared there in favor of the Johnson bill.

If you will permit me, I want to read a few excerpts from the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before the committee.

We had before us several members of public-utility commissions from several States. One of them was the gentleman from Virginia, H. Lester Hooker, chairman of the public-service commission of that State. He said:

> The utility at present has two bites at the cherry, entailing much delay and greatly added expense, before an ultimate decision is reached—the burden of all of which is loaded onto the rate-paying public.

He made two points—the great delay and the expense.

Then, again, a little further down, he said:

> It is a procedure to which there is certainly a meritorious objection.

Note that it is the procedure to which he says there is meritorious objection. He was not objecting, apparently, to the jurisdiction of the court, but to the procedure. I submit that the Lewis amendment fully corrects the abuse of procedure that the gentleman from Virginia referred to and complained so strongly against.

We had also before the committee a gentleman from Maryland, Hon. Harold E. West, chairman of the Maryland Public Service Commission. I quote him, page 37 of the hearings:

> Our commission cannot complain, as they have complained, of unusual delays. * * *
> Our objection is not to the Federal court at all. Any court is all right with us so long as it is composed of square men who know the law. But our objection is to what might be termed "the rules of the game." Under the present system the utility has the case tried before a small commission and appeals to the Federal courts and changes the rules of the game while the game is in progress.

I submit to you that the Lewis bill takes care of that objection. It provides that when the record is made up before the commission that record shall be the record upon which the three-judge Federal court shall determine the issue, and that does away with this great objection of expense. That does away also with the one thing that makes possible the interminable and unjustifiable delay in the New York Telephone case, which went on for 10 or 11 years because of the opportunity afforded by the court to the telephone company to try its case de novo before the Federal master without any regard to the voluminous and expensive record already made before the New York Public Service Commission. That cannot happen under the Lewis bill, because when the question goes on appeal from the commission to the court, the Federal court must accept the record made before the commission. Some of our friends say that we are going to get a speedier decision of the question if we pass the Johnson bill. I am not so sure of that, because the Johnson bill will confine these questions solely and exclusively to the State courts.

Do you know that in some States it is possible to start the proceeding in the circuit court and to appeal it to the supreme court of that State, and then ultimately the question would have to go to the United States Supreme Court? You have an intervening court between the court of last resort in the State and the utility commission. Take the State of New York. It was testified, and it appears in the hearings, in a colloquy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIVER] and Mr. Maltbie, of the New York commission, that the practice there is to appeal the case from the commission to the appellate division, and then there may be a final appeal from the appellate division to the New York Court of Appeals, and from there the case goes from the court of appeals to the United States Supreme Court, if the losing party is not satisfied with the decision in the final State court. I submit that in every case that would arise in New York it would be possible, and it would probably occur, for appeals to be taken to each one of the judicial tribunals, so that instead of having an appeal only from one Federal court to the United States Supreme Court, you would have, under the Johnson bill, an appeal through at least two State courts and finally an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is possible in a great many of our States, and you will find in the back of the printed hearings, on page 227, a list of the States, showing the procedure in appeals from rate decisions of the rate-making body of each State.

Do you want really to hasten the decisions of these cases? Do you want to overcome the two great objections raised through present procedure—delay, undue and unnecessary delay, and undue and unnecessary expense?

Then, my friends, if you really want to do that, laying all passion and prejudice aside, forgetting the shadow of Samuel Insull as he came from the ship in New York, forgetting about the public disrepute in which the utilities of the country are held at present, and I think justly so, you should support the Lewis bill, because it gives you, without question, a prompt and speedy remedy for the trial and disposition of these cases, with the possibility of but one court proceeding standing between the holding of the rate-making body and the final decision of the court of last resort. Do not fall into the error of voting for the Johnson bill to eliminate court delays because that bill in some States will have the opposite effect of increasing the delay. The Johnson bill will confine these cases exclusively to the State court procedure. To avoid delays in some of these States the legislatures must change that procedure, and, according to the testimony of our distinguished friend the chairman of our committee, it is your State legislatures that are amenable to the corrupt practices of these public utilities. What chance, then, will you have of getting these corporation-controlled legislatures to change the State court procedure to promote a prompt decision and avoid a mutiplicity of court actions?

I know that I cannot add anything to this debate. I have taken the floor more to justify the position that I held in the committee and which I want to publicly hold here on the floor of the House. I do not intend to go any further into the legal phases of this matter. Most of you are lawyers, and I am frank to confess that most, if not all, of you know more about Federal procedure than I do, but I call to your attention in these last few minutes the fact that the people of the United States adopted the Federal Constitution, among other things, "in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, and insure domestic tranquillity." There was a reason for the framers of the Constitution putting those words into the solemn preamble of that great document. We had a Union before the Constitution, but that Union was a rope of sand. We had a Union without an Executive, we had a Union without a Federal judiciary, and the only thing that made the Union under the Constitution superior to the Union under the Articles of Confederation was the establishment of this Federal judiciary.

Writing into the Constitution that article which said that the judicial power of these United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress from time to time shall ordain and establish was the salvation of our Federal system. Oh, yes; Congress does not have to establish these inferior courts. There is no compulsion upon Congress. There is no outside force within our Government that can make this Congress set up district courts and circuit courts of appeals, but I want to remind you that there has never been a day since the first Congress convened in the city of Philadelphia when they passed the Judiciary Act of 1789, when there was not a minor Federal judiciary. There has never been a day when there were not Federal district courts and Federal circuit courts to try justiciable questions that arose between citizens of the different States, and the questions which had to do with the confiscation of property.

You know the conditions that brought about the Constitutional Convention. You know of the jealousy and hatred that existed between the States, lately engaged in a rebellion, fighting for their independence against the mother country. You know one of the strongest reasons that compelled members of the Constitutional Convention to suppress their prejudices and vote for the Constitution was their hope that as a result of their actions there would come to exist here in America a government that would be a strong government, that could enforce its will, a government that would have a judiciary to compel respect for its laws. That is what has resulted.

My friends, if there is one thing that establishes the fame of the great dominion State of Virginia, it is that she produced the men who fought hardest for this great judicial system. It was Madison, if you please, the Father of the Constitution, who fought for the Judiciary Act in the First Congress of 1789; and it was John Marshall, of Virginia, the wise expounder of that great charter of government, who defended the Federal judiciary and marked out in his celebrated opinions the boundaries of its power.

We are today engaging in a task that is but the beginning of a mighty attack upon the integrity of the Federal courts and their jurisdiction. This bill in itself is but a minor matter. True, we are only taking away from the Federal courts jurisdiction in utility rate cases; but, my friends, that is chiseling; and that word was used by Judge Storey a hundred years ago in commenting upon the attempt to withdraw or withhold or undermine the jurisdiction of Federal courts.

It is chiseling. It is sapping at the foundations of American Government. I warn you who come from States that are not fully developed and that have to go beyond the borders of your State to look for capital to assist in the development of that State, there may arise in the minds of people who have money to loan upon the passage of the Johnson bill a fear that will deter them from investing their capital in States where their investments may not be safeguarded by the Federal judiciary. I do not believe, personally, that any man has anything to fear from any State in this Union with respect to the conduct of its judiciary, but we must be practical. We must face conditions as they are, and we must recognize the fact that there are people in our country who do entertain those fears. Do you want to dam up the resources of investment capital? Read the record again, my friends. Even after you vote today, no matter how you vote, read the record and consider the testimony that was presented to the members of the Judiciary Committee.

I have the highest respect for the courts of every State in this Union. I would be willing to submit my life and my property to the jurisdiction of any one of these courts, but again I say we must be practical in this matter. We are not legislating even for the great State of Texas alone. We are not legislating alone for the little State of Rhode Island, which I have the honor to represent, but we are legislating for the greatest Government of the greatest country in the world. We are legislating for a country that stretches over a half continent; a country that is as varied as any 20 or 30 countries in Europe or Asia, because the conditions of life in our country are as widely varied as life in the far north and in the subtropics. There are all sorts and conditions of life that confront the people of our country throughout its far-flung territory. It is important, in my judgment, that we should have in the Capital of our country a government that is supported by a strong Federal judiciary, which reaches out into all States where there are district courts of that judiciary established.

By way of digressing for a moment, what are the Federal district courts of our land? Are they not the people's courts? Are not the men who have been appointed to those Federal courts citizens of the Republic like ourselves? Are not many of them former Members of this House and former Members of the Senate?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONDON. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. You must have a $3,000 case before you can get into the Federal court.

Mr. CONDON. I well know that; but, after all, those judges cannot be the hobgoblins that they have been described to be. They have the weaknesses and frailties that are inherent in human nature, but you cannot condemn the entire Federal judiciary because of a few horrible examples. In all my experience at the bar of my State I have never heard one word of criticism of the Federal judges in my section of the country. Frankly, if I had a case to submit to them as far as the reasonableness or fairness of a rate established by a utilities commission was concerned, I would as soon and as confidently submit that case to a three-judge court of the Federal judiciary than to the judiciary of my own State. But that is only my opinion with reference to a special local situation with which I am more familiar than you are. There are similar local situations in your State with which, of course, you are more familiar than I am. But I come back again to the fact and the argument that we are legislating as a Congress of the United States, and we must ever keep in mind the welfare of the whole country; not the welfare of any one particular section of the country, but the welfare of the whole country, and all of our people.

Now, before I conclude, I just want to read, if I may, the answer by the chairman of the Massachusetts Public Utilities Commission, given to Mr. Benton, of the National Association of Railway and Utilities Commissioners, as throwing some light on the question of the importance of the Johnson bill, at least in the eastern section of the country.

The chairman said that he was not opposed to this Johnson bill, but he went on to say this further—I am quoting now from page 224 of the record:

> As to my letter in relation to the so-called "Johnson bill", you are at liberty to use it in any way you see fit. You are quite right in your understanding that this department has no objection to the Johnson bill. On the other hand, we feel that it would accomplish little or nothing so far as Massachusetts is concerned.
> In a period of very nearly 50 years of the regulation of gas and electric companies, where commissions were given the power to make orders, there has been, to my knowledge, resort to the Federal courts in three instances only, namely, the Haverhill Gas & Electric Co., some twenty-odd years ago, contested an order of the board of gas and electric light commissioners, our predecessors in the regulation of gas and electric companies. Perhaps this case could be considered two cases, as there were two petitions, but I have always viewed them as one case. Both terminated in favor of the Commonwealth. There was no resort to the Federal court by any company under the regulation in Massachusetts subsequent to the Haverhill Gas & Electric case until the Worcester Electric Light case, instituted in July 1927, and the Cambridge Electric Light Case, instituted February 20, 1928. In the Worcester Electric Light case a temporary restraining order was issued and an injunction followed. In the Cambridge Electric Light case a temporary restraining order was issued on February 20, 1928, which was revoked on March 11, 1928. The Cambridge case was dismissed by agreement on February 11, 1929, resulting in the department's order being sustained. In the Worcester case the master found, on February 11, 1929, that the department's order was not confiscatory, and by agreement later, on June 5, 1929, the injunction was dissolved and the case later dismissed, leaving the department's order in full force and effect. These are the only cases that have arisen in the Federal courts attacking an order of the commission as to rates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not true, as I see the record—and I care nothing for the passionate, prejudiced statements that have been made outside the record—it is not true that a large number of these cases have gone to the Federal courts and that justice has been denied because there has been great delay. On the contrary, hundreds of cases have been submitted to the State courts throughout the country without any appeal being taken to the Federal courts. But I agree with the gentleman who preceded me on the floor that some of the cases that came before the Federal courts in which there was great delay were such nationally known cases, involving such large sums of money, in which the abuse of the power of taking evidence by the master was so flagrant that the attention of the whole country was directed to them; and because of these isolated abuses we have before us the Johnson bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONDON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I am very much interested in having the gentleman's reaction as to the effect certainty of tenure of office has on the judges. For instance, Federal judges are appointed for life subject to good behavior and are, therefore, free from political and local influences, whereas judges of the State courts are elected by popular vote and are not free from political influence.

Mr. CONDON. Answering the gentleman's question, I may say I believe one of the troubles with our Federal judiciary is that the Federal judges are appointed for life; and there is no power to remove them except by impeachment which, as I said on the floor of the House in the Louderback case, is almost a practical impossibility.

I favor the appointment of Federal judges, their tenure of office being based on good behavior. In my State and in the great neighboring Commonwealth of Massachusetts the judges are appointed. Judges are not elected in New England, to my knowledge, but they are appointed to serve during good behavior; and I am frank to say that I hear no great criticism of judges appointed by the Governors of our States to serve during good behavior. Have I answered the gentleman's question?

Mr. MAY. Are not Federal district judges liable to removal for misbehavior?

Mr. CONDON. I do not understand that to be so. I understand there is no way in which to remove a Federal judge except by impeaching him on the floor of the House.

Mr. MAY. Of course, that is the method of removing him.

Mr. CONDON. But it is such a difficult method of removal that I do not approve of it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request. I do not mean to have anything more to say on the bill, but I ask unanimous consent that I may make a statement for the benefit of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I assume that you understand what the vote will be on. As soon as the parliamentary situation makes it possible, what is known as "the Lewis amendment" will be offered to the Johnson bill. The vote will be on the Lewis amendment.

Some of the Members who understand parliamentary usage were in doubt this morning as to just how we might get a clear-cut expression of the attitude of the Members with regard to each of these propositions. Insofar as the members of the Judiciary Committee are concerned, I understand that they want to cooperate. We want to cooperate in making it possible to record the judgment of the House with reference to these propositions.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the vote in the Committee of the Whole will be on the Lewis amendment to the Johnson bill. If the Lewis amendment fails, and I hope it will, the Johnson bill will then be before the House for passage, and I hope the Johnson bill will pass? The only way the Lewis bill could then come before the House would be upon a motion to recommit.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There was some question this morning as to whether that motion could be made under the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I feel quite confident, after having discussed the matter with the Chairman of the Rules Committee and others, that the spirit and intent of the amendment made to the rule yesterday will be carried out and that a motion to recommit with instructions to substitute the Lewis bill may be made so there may be a vote in the House upon both propositions.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. On the other hand, if the substitute, or the Lewis amendment, is agreed to in committee, when we get back into the House a separate vote can be had upon it. Is not this equally true?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I stated the alternative to that. So, whether the Lewis amendment is voted up or down in the committee a roll call can be had on the Lewis amendment in the House.

Mr. GOSS. In the one instance by a separate vote on the committee amendment, if the committee adopts the amendment, and in the other instance on a motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make one further statement so the matter will be clear? I am sure I speak for both the majority and the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary when I say I hope all the Members of the House will cooperate in making the desire for a clear-cut test of the attitude of the House toward these two propositions possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, no district court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of an administrative board or commission of a State, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with any such order, where jurisdiction is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or the repugnance of such order to the Constitution of the United States, where such order (1) affects rates chargeable by a public utility, (2) does not interfere with interstate commerce, and (3) has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, page 1, line 3, down to and including line 10 on page 2 and insert the following:

"That the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding after section 266 thereof a new section to read as follows:

"'SEC. 266A. In the case of any suit brought in a United States District Court to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of an administrative board or commission of any State or any political subdivision thereof, or to enjoin, suspend, or restrain any action in compliance with such order, where (1) such order affects rates chargeable by a public utility, does not interfere with interstate commerce, and was made after reasonable notice and hearing, and (2) jurisdiction of such suit is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship, or of the repugnance of such order, or of the law or ordinance under which such order was made, to the Constitution of the United States, or solely upon any combination of such grounds—

"'(a) The provisions of section 266, as amended, which relate to hearings and determinations by three judges, to the right of direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to a stay of proceedings, and to precedence and expedition of hearings, shall apply, whether or not an interlocutory injunction is sought in such suit; and, when an interlocutory injunction is sought, the provisions of such section relating to notice of hearing and to temporary restraining orders shall apply;

"'(b) The hearings and determinations shall be on a transcript of the record of the proceedings, including evidence taken, before such administrative board or commission with respect to such order, prepared at the expense of the complainant, and certified to the court by the board or commission in accordance with the law or practice of the State, except that (1) upon application of any party the court may take additional evidence if it is material and competent and the court is satisfied that such party was by the board or commission denied an opportunity to adduce it, and (2) in case no record was kept or the board or commission fails or refuses to certify such record, the court may take such evidence as it deems necessary;

"'(c) The court shall not have jurisdiction if the complainant (or, in case the complainant is a partnership, association, or corporation, if the complainant or a member or stockholder of the complainant) has theretofore commenced suit in a State court have jurisdiction thereof to contest the validity of such order on any ground whatsoever.'

"SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not affect suits commenced in the district courts, either originally or by removal, prior to its passage; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered, in the same manner and with the same effects as if this act had not been passed."

Mr. TARVER (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the committee amendment, which is merely the Lewis substitute bill, with which we are familiar, be dispensed with and the substitute printed in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Lewis amendment.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK]. I am unable to understand his attitude today after all the years I have listened to his appeals for State rights. The passage of this Johnson bill without the so-called Lewis amendment" will be one of the greatest steps back toward State rights that Congress has taken in decades.

We are being driven, under the present system, to State socialism or governmental ownership of public utilities. I have been one of those men who did not favor governmental ownership, but we are being driven to it, and the attitude of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] and the attitude of the other gentlemen who are sponsoring this Lewis amendment represent a school of thought that is driving us to that extremity.

I am going to show you in a moment some of the concrete results. When we speak of utilities, the one outstanding utility that bobs into the mind of every individual is the Power Trust, the great power interest with its multiplied ramifications. It reaches into every home and runs its fingers into every light bulb in America. We have been forced to resort to governmental ownership at Muscle Shoals. In doing so we have established a policy of producing and distributing power, not based upon the people's ability to pay, not based upon watered stock and overhead charges that are unreasonable and unconscionable, but based upon the cost of production and distribution. I am going to read you just a few of the concrete results of that work.

Our people were paying the same exorbitant rates that were being paid in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Texas, Colorado, and other States. Our contract between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the city of Tupelo, Miss., went into effect on the 7th day of February, and I hold in my hand copies of light bills showing the amounts paid in January and March by a citizen of Tupelo. In January, under the old rates, he paid $3.50. In March he paid 84 cents under the T.V.A. rates.

Here is another one who paid $10.66 in January and $5.98 in March. Another one paid $4.10 in January and $1.32 in March. Another one paid $6.98 in January and $1.72 in March. This is bringing electricity down to something like what it costs to produce.

I know the statement is being made that we are robbing the commercial and the industrial users of power for the benefit of the householder or domestic consumer. Let me give you just a few illustrations to refute that argument.

I suppose you would call a filling station a commercial user. Here is one that paid $62.85 for power and light in January. In March he paid $21.23. Here is a wholesale groceryman who in January paid $94.36; in March he paid $39.42. Here is a manufacturer of ice cream. In January he paid $92.19 and in March he paid $56.23. Here is a small manufacturer. In January he paid $210.25 and in March he paid $145.38.

I also hold in my hand the duplicate receipt of the operator of a cotton mill. Here is the answer to the charge that we are robbing the industrial users of electricity for the benefit of the domestic users.

In January they paid $3,181.33 for electricity. In March they paid $1,896.40. In January they used 204,803 kilowatt-hours; in March they used 258,000 kilowatt-hours, or 26 percent more. If they had paid the January rate in March the bill would have been $4,008, or $2,112 more than they did pay, a saving of $25,000 a year for one small manufacturing establishment, simply because we have been able to bring the rates down and base them on the cost of production and distribution. Every item of cost was considered in fixing these rates, even to the cost of the dam itself.

I know the power interests have gone all over this country and sold watered stock—what they call "preferred stock"—in order to build up political strength in order to defeat legislation of this kind.

Unless this Congress passes legislation such as this Johnson bill, reestablishes the confidence of the American people, and gives them proper protection we are going to be swept into governmental ownership of all public utilities. The people are sick and tired of being plundered by unreasonable utility rates. If you want the utilities to run the country, vote for the Lewis amendment. If you want the American people to receive justice at the hands of the utilities, vote down the Lewis amendment and vote for the Johnson bill as it came from the Senate. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOSS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Does the vote now come on the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in order that we may understand, a vote of "aye" is in favor of the Lewis bill and against the Johnson bill. That is correct, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts and Mr. LEWIS of Colorado) there were—ayes 27, noes 112.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 2, line 1, after the word "State", insert "or any rate-making body of any political subdivision thereof."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have your attention just a moment because this amendment means a great deal to some of the States.

In many of the States in this country, and this is true in Arkansas, the rate-making body in most cases is the town council or the city council. We have had many laws in Arkansas relative to rate-making bodies, and at various times in our history the rate-making power has been lodged in different boards or commissions. Your State may have today a rate-making commission or a rate-making board, which is a State-wide board and the next legislature may change the law and place this authority in your town councils, or in some board of a political subdivision of your State.

There is no one any more strongly in favor of the Johnson bill than myself, but when the bill becomes a law I want it to function and to accomplish the purposes for which it is intended; and, very frankly, unless this amendment is adopted, it will mean practically nothing to the States that are situated like Arkansas. We have not had much rate trouble down there, but we do not want to have any trouble; and I ask you, in all earnestness, to adopt this amendment in order that we may have the benefit of this law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is this offered as a committee amendment?

Mr. MILLER. No. I will say to the gentleman that when we had the Johnson bill under consideration I offered this amendment in the committee and it was adopted by the committee, but it was not reported because the Lewis bill was reported as a substitute. I am now offering the amendment for adoption.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In other words, it was not in the Lewis bill which came out of the committee?

Mr. MILLER. That is true.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Is the chairman of the committee in favor of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MILLER. I think he is.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak on this subject because it was very fully discussed by the members of the Judiciary Committee, but this amendment which is proposed by my colleague from Arkansas is very essential to my State.

I am in favor of the Johnson bill. I want to obtain the benefit of that bill for our State, but it so happens that under existing law of my State the rate-making power for municipal rates is in the municipalities. We have a State commission, a fact-finding tribunal, that ascertains what is a fair and reasonable rate, but that is merely advisory, and it is up to the municipality to make the rate. I therefore ask you to vote in favor of this amendment. It will not hurt the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The only fear I have is this: I do not think it will hurt the bill, but it may send it to conference, and it may not get out before Congress adjourns.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. The gentleman need not worry about that.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is this acceptable to him?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is the opinion of gentlemen of the committee with whom I have talked, that it would be a good idea to put this language in the bill.

Mr. GOSS. As I heard the amendment read, it seemed to me that it would take in any rate-making body of the municipality. I think that would be going a little farther than does the Johnson bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Here is the reason: In many States the State rate-making agency does not make the utility rate for municipalities.

Mr. GOSS. A board of aldermen in a town might not be the rate-making body for a municipally owned plant. Now, if this amendment is adopted, the board of aldermen as such could make the rate.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All right. Let us understand the situation. In a good many States the central rate-making agency does not make the rate for the utilities in municipalities. These rates are made—possibly by a board of aldermen or some agency of the municipality. The gentleman from Arkansas believes, and that belief is shared by most members of the committee I think, that as a matter of precaution the language suggested ought to be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Is it not a fact that when this was offered in the committee it was unanimously adopted, but it was lost in the Lewis amendment voted to the Johnson bill?

Mr. GOSS. Let us take an example. Suppose we have a municipal board of aldermen as the rate-making body, and they make a rate for a municipal plant. But here is a privately owned plant being located in the same town, and the rate would be made by the public-utility commission of the State. Therefore you would have a municipal plant operating under one rate, and a private plant operating under another.

And, if there was a break-down, and they were forced to run parallel, which rate would control?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Where you have a State rate-making agency with jurisdiction, then no other agency or subdivision of the State makes the rate.

Mr. GOSS. Could not the board of aldermen make a rate for a municipal plant?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment. This has nothing whatever to do with making rates. This is merely a proposition that if a rate be tested, it shall be tested in a State court. It does not make a particle of difference whether it is made by the State commission or by the board of aldermen. This does not grant any right to anybody to make a rate.

Mr. GOSS. But it would it reviewed.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Reviewed merely by the State courts, instead of by the Federal courts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Take a concrete case. I think it is the transit commission in the city of New York that controls the subway.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If they did or could fix a rate, there is no reason why this utility company should go into the Federal court any more than if a State agency fixed a rate.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Not at all. The question is not who fixed the rates, but in what court shall the rate be tested, prior to its going to the Supreme Court of the United States, if a confiscatory question is raised.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is admitted that this amendment ought to be in the bill even by those who are opposed to it, because in some of these States the right to fix rates is granted to municipalities by the constitution, the organic law of the State. These are the ones who suffer most, because the record shows that it is in the cases of municipalities trying to get reduced rates that are worn out by litigation. They have no money to carry on the litigation, and as for anybody stopping this bill in conference, that is a bugaboo. Nobody is afraid of the "big bad wolf" at this stage of the game. We want to put this amendment in because these small municipalities in these States are distressingly in need of this relief.

Mr. McCORMACK. If this amendment is not adopted, and the rates are established by a local body in a city or town where, in case of local controversy, would that case—what courts would determine it?

Mr. McKEOWN. They would get you in the Federal court.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. In other words, if this bill passes without this amendment, those cases affected by the decision or action of a State commission would go to the State courts, and the local problems which this amendment covers would then be compelled to go into the Federal court.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; and they would be wiped out before they would get started. They cannot afford it.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. Is it not true also that these municipalities have been the ones which have been fighting for the principle that is involved in the Johnson bill all the time?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; always, because they are more easily whipped than the States.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If this amendment is not adopted, the municipalities will be in no worse position than they are right now?

Mr. McKEOWN. Why?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Because they will have the right to appeal to either the State courts or the Federal courts.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is right. Then there is no use to pass the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. But the State legislatures can change their own laws to protect the municipalities under this.

Mr. McKEOWN. Not where the power to fix rates is granted in the organic law.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. It will give municipalities the same right and the same privilege that it gives to the States?

Mr. McKEOWN. Exactly. That is what we want to do.

Mr. SABATH. It is the gentleman's contention that those municipalities need that protection even to a greater extent than most of the States?

Mr. McKEOWN. Absolutely.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. With the aggressive leadership of the Senator who sponsored this bill in the Senate and our own leader in the House, is there any danger that this could get tied up and not become a law at this session?

Mr. McKEOWN. No.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not affect suits commenced in the district courts, either originally or by removal, prior to its passage; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered, in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 752) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to orders of State administrative boards, and pursuant to House Resolution 350, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 201, noes 19.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—S. 752

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members of the House may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that the United States Supreme Court will uphold the constitutionality of the Johnson bill.

Whenever salutary Federal legislation has been proposed, whenever some great national reform has been enacted into law by Congress, it has immediately been assailed by those who declared it to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States—"unconstitutional." This has been a matter of such frequent occurrence during our entire history as a Nation that today a wide-spread distrust of the Constitution exists on the part of those who are unfamiliar with the modern progressive tendency of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Unfortunately, instead of bearing only reverence and affection for that great document, many have come to view it as an instrument of oppression; for, does it not prevent our securing those measures of relief which we need, and, in justice, should have?

The most cursory sort of an investigation of the United States Supreme Court Reports will reveal the fact that this opinion of the Federal Constitution as construed by our highest judicial tribunal is not justified. The prevention of corporate aggression and the protection of the life, health, and happiness of the multitudes against the greed and cupidity of the few can be realized under our Constitution, the Supreme Court has repeatedly held in recent years. It is within the power of Congress to act in accordance with State Bank v. Haskell (219 U.S. 111), as—

> Held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare.

I shall not on this occasion attempt any discussion of the commerce clause, what constitutes interstate and intrastate commerce, distinctions between the sovereignty of the State and Federal Governments, the fifth and fourteenth amendments, or any particular one article of provision contained in the Federal Constitution, but shall rather confine myself to a consideration of the broad outlines and dimensions of the Constitution as a whole and endeavor to catch something of its real spirit, if possible, in order to correctly answer this question, into which sooner or later all constitutional questions resolve themselves, to wit, Was the Constitution made for the people or are the people made for the Constitution?

The Constitution of the United States emanated from the people. It is "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

As was said by Mr. Justice Matthews, speaking for the Court in Hurtago v. California (110 U.S. 516):

> The Constitution of the United States was ordained, it is true, by descendants of Englishmen, who inherited the traditions of English law and history; but it was made for an undefined and expanding future and for a people gathered and to be gathered from many nations and of many tongues.

A constitution, from its nature, deals in generals, not in details. Its framers cannot perceive minute distinctions which arise in the progress of the nation, and therefore confine it to the establishment of broad and general principles—Chief Justice Marshall in The Bank of the United States v. Deveaux et al. (5 Cr. 87).

> Constitutions of government are not to be framed upon a calculation of existing exigencies; but on a combination of these with the probable exigencies of ages, according to the natural and tried course of human affairs. They ought to be a capacity to provide for future contingencies as they may happen. (Federalist no. 34.)

The Government of the American Nation is, then, "emphatically and truly a government of the people. In form and in substance it emanates from them. Its powers are granted by them, and are to be exercised directly on them and for their benefit" (Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland 4 Wheat. 405)—a statement, the grandeur of which was to be enhanced 44 years later, when, standing on the battlefield of Gettysburg, Abraham Lincoln said that "a government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Beveridge says:

> The nationalist ideas of Marshall and Lincoln are identical; and their language is so similar that it seems not unlikely that Lincoln paraphrased this noble passage of Marshall and thus made it immortal. This probability is increased by the fact that Lincoln was a profound student of Marshall's constitutional opinions and committed a great many of them to memory.
> The famous sentence of Lincoln's Gettysburg address was, however, almost exactly given by Webster in his reply to Hayne. "It is * * * the people's Government; made for the people; and answerable to the people." But both Lincoln and Webster merely stated in condensed and simpler form Marshall's immortal utterance in McCulloch v. Maryland. (The Life of John Marshall, by Albert J. Beveridge, vol. IV, p. 293. Note.)

The Constitution was written in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the greatest exposition of the rights of the people which has ever been given expression by the heart and mind of man. The Constitution is to be interpreted and construed in the light of its preamble:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic transquillity, provide for the comon defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

It is worth while to recall the words of James Wilson, who said in reply to the objection that the Federal Constitution had no bill of rights:

> Here the fee-simple remains in the people, and by this Constitution they do not part with it. The preamble of the proposed Constitution, "We, the people of the United States * * * do establish" contains the essence of all the bills of rights that have been or can be devised.

The Constitution is not a creature of circumstances, and, in order to meet the necessities of the people, should always be treated as an enunciation of fundamental principles rather than as declaratory of cramped and cabined rules of law, which latter canon of interpretation would make it an instrument of oppression instead of one of beneficence.

The Supreme Court of the United States has not lost sight of this fact. If there ever was a time when the truth of the words of Chief Justice Marshall in the celebrated case of Gibbons against Ogden was apparent, that time is now, when our great, constructive emergency recovery legislation is under attack. Chief Justice Marshall said—what we are again witnessing:

Powerful and ingenious minds, taking, as postulates, that the powers expressly granted to the Government of the Union are to be contracted by construction into the narrowest possible compass, and that the original powers of the State are retained, if any possible construction will retain them, may, by a course of well-digested but refined and metaphysical reasoning founded on these premises, explain away the Constitution of our country and leave it a magnificent structure, indeed, to look at but totally unfit for use.

They may so entangle and perplex the understanding as to obscure principles which were before thought quite plain, and induce doubts where, if the mind were to pursue its own course, none would be perceived.

This is the very thing that eminent lawyers, some of them distinguished Members of this body, are doing—seeking to explain away the people's Constitution by arguing that the Federal Government does not possess the power to save the commerce and lives and institutions of the people in what everyone, even they, themselves, admit to be the most serious crisis and national emergency in our history.

What did Chief Justice Marshall mean when he said that "The Government proceeds directly from the people" and "Its powers are granted by them and are to be exercised on them and for their benefit"? Are not the courts a part of the Government? If not, why not? Shall only the executive and legislative departments be responsive to the will of the people? Should the judicial department nullify the will of the people and render our republican government a sham and a pretense?

Is the Federal Government helpless and impotent to act in a great national emergency? The Selective Service, Espionage, War Industries Board, Food Administration, Control of Railroads, Industrial Mobilization Acts passed by Congress during the World War and upheld by the United States Supreme Court furnish the negative answer. Justice Brandeis in the recent case of The New State Ice Co. v. Leibmann (285 U.S. 262, 76 L. ed. 769) has correctly said:

The people of the United States are now confronted with an emergency more serious than war.

Henry Upson Sims, one of the leaders of the American Bar and president of the American Bar Association in 1929–30, has well said:

It is gratifying to realize that there have been statesmen enough among the judiciary of this country to prevent the legal framework of the Constitution, which the early political statesmen drew for us, from being laid aside like the garments of childhood. The courts of the early days of our history may not have foreseen the proportions of the present industrial and commercial age. Of course, Marshall did not see it. But they did see that the constitutional provisions are rules of social order rather than mere laws to be interpreted in the light of the limited environment of the draughtsmen—

In its classical decision in Gibbons v. Ogden (1824), the Supreme Court inaugurated its interpretation of the so-called "commerce clause" of the Constitution and held that Congress possesses the right to regulate commerce and navigation, domestic and foreign—gave Congress exclusive power over interstate commerce—and yet almost 100 years elapsed before Congress passed the Interstate Commerce Act. Equally remarkable is it that the "general welfare" clause did not receive judicial construction until 1896.

In a decision rendered by the Supreme Court more than 50 years later—1877—Pensacola Telegraph Co. against Western Union Telegraph Co., it is said that—

The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce or the postal system known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of times and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stagecoach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph. * * *

And we may now add, to the airship, the radio, as well as to any future means of communication.

Mr. Speaker, the meaning of the power to regulate commerce must keep pace with the development of modern conditions, for with changes in conditions the meaning of words change, and this also necessarily reflects itself in the process of interpretation.

Thus, Munro—The Government of the United States, Macmillan, New York, 1930, page 311—speaking of the commerce clause, says that the elasticity of the written word finds more ample illustration here than in any other field of American constitutional development; that a definition of the commerce power today would be out of date tomorrow, and an exact definition cannot be given of anything that changes its form and scope so frequently as the commerce power does.

Speaking of the Constitution, Mr. Justice Story said:

It is not intended to provide merely for the emergencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence.

In the case of South Carolina v. United States (199 U.S. 448), Mr. Justice Brewer said, in delivering the opinion of the Court:

The Constitution is a written instrument. As such, its meaning does not alter. That which it meant when adopted it means now. Being a grant of powers to a Government, its language is general, and as changes come in social and political life it embraces in its grasp all new conditions which are within the scope of the powers in terms conferred. In other words, while its powers granted do not change, they apply from generation to generation to all things to which they are in their nature applicable.

Cooley says:

The principles of republican government are not a set of inflexible rules, vital and active in the Constitution, though unexpressed, but they are subject to variation and modification from motives of policy and public necessity.

I believe that those who are inveighing against the constitutionality of the National Recovery Act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and the series of acts of Congress designed to aid the people and the country in the present national emergency would do well to read and ponder the address of Hon. John J. Parker, judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, delivered last summer before the annual convention of the American Bar Association of Grand Rapids, Mich. I should like to read just two paragraphs from the masterful address of this learned jurist and student of constitutional law. His logic and reasoning seem to me to be unanswerable. Judge Parker said:

It is no sign of the abandonment of our constitutional theory that the activities of the Federal Government should have increased greatly with the passage of time; for this increase has been in accord with the Constitution and not contrary to it. The Federal Government must necessarily control interstate and foreign commerce; and it is manifest that the scope of this control must have been enlarged as interstate and foreign commerce became more and more important with the development of transportation and interstate communication. The Sherman Act passed in 1890 was no departure from constitutional theory, but arose out of the necessity of curbing monopolies, which were growing up in interstate commerce and the realization that, because of the control vested in Congress over such commerce, the States were powerless to deal with the problem. The same was true of the Clayton Act and the acts creating the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission. For this reason I am not excited over the passage of acts further regulating interstate commerce. Certainly, if Congress may legislate for the purpose of preserving free competition, it may, when this free competition is on the verge of destroying industry itself, legislate to eliminate its destructive features and in the interest of controlled cooperation.

And I have the same feeling about increased activities of the Government under the general welfare clause. The people of the United States constitute a great nation. There is no reason why their National Government should not foster the healthy growth and development of that nation by encouragement to agriculture, industry, education, road building, and other activities essential to the national welfare. And in time of national distress, when the industry of the country is prostrate as a result in large measure of the collapse of interstate and foreign commerce, there is nothing in our constitutional theory which prevents the National Government using its powers for the relief of suffering and to place industry again on its feet. It is the only agency which the people have of sufficient size and power to approach the problem presented with any hope of success, and I see no reason why it should be precluded from exercising the power.

Thus we find that the people possess plenary power under the Constitution and that such power was to be enjoyed by them for all time. The Constitution was made for the people, not the people for the Constitution. Further evidence of this is found in the fact that ours is a republican form of Government.

Our forefathers discarded the old Articles of Confederation and adopted the Constitution during a time of extreme distress and emergency.

The whole document, indeed, was not so much a declaration of faith as of fears, for it was put together in an atmosphere of restlessness, at a time when business conditions in the thirteen States were about as bad as they could be. Independence had been gained by war, but not prosperity, says W. B. Munro, in The Makers of the Unwritten Constitution.

The conditions of the Colonies are hard to realize in our day. Mr. Lawson has referred to them in his exhaustive work on the general-welfare clause. I quote:

Dark as was the foreign outlook for America, her domestic situation was worse. Mutual jealousy and antagonism dictated the policy of the States toward each other. Commercial rivalries and unfriendly imposts irritated the feelings of all. They quarreled over their lands, over payment of their debts, and over the apportionment of expense. All Government was threatened with dissolution.

It was imperative to adopt the Constitution to prevent national anarchy, Washington declared. He said:

We are descending into the vale of confusion and darkness. The confederation appears to me to be little more than a shadow and Congress a nugatory body. To me, it is a solecism in politics—that we should confederate as a Nation and yet be afraid to give the rulers of the Nation who are the creatures of our own making—sufficient powers to order and direct the affairs of the same.

In a letter to Carter he wrote that it was his—

Decided opinion that there is no alternative between the adoption of it (the Constitution) and anarchy.

The wings of Washington's wrath carried him far.

Good God—

Cried he—who, besides a Tory, could have foreseen, or a Briton predicted, "the things that were going on." The disorders which have arisen in these States, the present prospect of our affairs * * * seems to me to be like the vision of a dream. My mind can scarcely realize it as a thing in actual existence. * * * There are combustibles in every State, which a spark might set fire to. (Washington to Knox, Dec. 26, 1786.)

In other words, the Constitution is not a fair-weather state paper, intended only for days of sunshine and calm. It came into being during the days of adversity and distress of panic and storm, of darkness and despair, a period not at all unlike that in which we are living today. Yet there are those who would contend that that same Constitution is an absolute barrier to a fulfillment of the people's needs and desires, that Congress is a "nugatory body" and does not possess "sufficient powers to order and direct the affairs of the Nation", that we must look exclusively to the bankrupt State governments to restore commerce, industry, and agriculture in these United States, and that the Constitution forbids the Federal Government to do so.

Mr. Speaker, let it be said to the everlasting credit and honor of the members of the United States Supreme Court, as more recently indicated in their decisions in the Minnesota Mortgage Moratorium and New York Milk Control Board cases, that they have never taken this view of the Constitution and have never nullified Federal legislation which was meritorious and needed to meet the demands of the national emergency. There are mirrored in their decisions the ever changing and progressing economic and social conditions of the American people. Our republican form of government would become a mere fiction today if the constitutional obstructionists had their way, but they will not. The Supreme Court has never construed the Constitution to consist merely of dead letters of faded ink upon a crumbling parchment. On the contrary, they have, by their decisions, rendered the charter of our fundamental laws a living, breathing, vital, growing document, with a soul and a spirit, expressing eloquently the hopes, the desires, the aspirations, the longings, the yearnings of the great heart of America for truth, for justice, for progress, for the welfare, and the happiness of all her children. The Constitution was made for the people, not the people for the Constitution.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, public utilities in rate cases invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to defeat the will of the people in the States where these utilities are engaged in business. Jurisdiction of Federal courts in rate cases is not dependent upon diversity of citizenship. It is based on the claim that rates are confiscatory, and the Federal courts have jurisdiction regardless of whether the utility is a foreign or domestic corporation. Upon the allegation that the rate for telephone or other utility users fixed by State authority is confiscatory, then it becomes the duty of the Federal court to grant an injunction. Delay results to the injury of the taxpayer. Justice delayed is all too frequently justice denied.

I favor passage of the Johnson bill. I oppose the Judiciary Committee amendment. States should be permitted to supervise and fix rates of public utilities without interference by Federal courts. Congress should before now have enacted this remedial measure making it impossible for public utility companies to thwart the will of the people in States where such companies choose to do business. As a Representative of the people of a sovereign State, I protest against the continued and unfair practice of public utilities in invoking the jurisdiction of the United States judges. We are putting an end to that. In fact, I should like to do away altogether with the inferior Federal courts.

Public utilities in rate cases are accorded full and complete hearings before a State commission; in Ohio, before the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio. Then the corporation, if dissatisfied with the rate fixed, may apply either to the State or to the Federal courts for an injunction to restrain the rate-making authority from making its order effective. Of course, shrewd public utility lawyers invariably bring such action in the United States district court. These courts try the entire case de novo, and the judgment of the Federal judge, who is not responsible to the people of the State and who frequently owes his position to the favor of the State political boss, is then substituted both as to the law and the facts for the decision of the State public utilities commission or legislature. The Federal courts thereby perform a legislative function. These inferior Federal judges overcome by the stroke of a pen the carefully considered decision of the State rate-fixing authority. Great expense is thereby involved and years of delay have been occasioned in many cases of utmost importance.

President Roosevelt, as Governor of New York, in a message to the legislature of that State, said—

The special master becomes the rate maker; the public service commission becomes a mere legal fantasy. This power of the Federal court must be abrogated.

Let us pass the bill as introduced by Senator HIRAM JOHNSON and as passed in the other body. Let us proceed to divest the district courts of the United States of jurisdiction in public-utility rate cases of a purely intrastate character.

The resort to the Federal courts against the rates fixed tends to develop bad feeling between the people of the State and the public utilities; also it develops a feud between the State and Federal authorities. An example is the recent threat by the Governor of Georgia to call out the National Guard of that State to resist the enforcement of an injunction issued by the Federal court.

Public utilities have heretofore enjoyed the preferential status and special privilege of going to the Federal courts for injunctions against State authority. We should pass this bill taking away this special privilege, then public-utility officials will be less interested in the personnel of the Federal courts. Public utilities should be compelled to confine their appeals to the courts of the States involved, with the final right of appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

An individual in Ohio cannot elect to appeal from the State courts to the United States district courts. Heretofore property rights have been placed above human rights. Public utilities doing business in Ohio have been enjoying rights denied our citizens. Certainly any public utility after a full and fair hearing before the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio cannot justly complain when it is afforded a review in the courts of the State and an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. We should no longer tolerate a situation which permits public utilities to wear down those seeking fair rates, through delays by long and expensive litigation in the Federal courts.

Public utility companies seeking business in my State or in any State should deal in a manner entirely fair to the people. If they do they will have no difficulty in securing justice in State courts. My vote is in support of the Johnson bill to abrogate entirely this power of the Federal courts to interfere in the fixing of rates for the public utility corporations. After this has been accomplished, I look forward to the time when we may further strip the United States district judges of power and authority now exercised in such courts. United States district judges are, as a rule, domineering, dictatorial, arbitrary, and tyrannical, and without responsibility to the people.

WORLD'S FAIR, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules (H.Res. 360).

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 360

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3235. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Library, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire any time on the rule?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I should like the usual 30 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I gladly yield to my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois, when we reach the 5-minute rule, will offer an amendment to eliminate as much as $205,000 from this bill?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know yet, but I have assured the gentleman that I am willing to go as far as I can and practically as far as I will be obliged to go to meet any opposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman would get a great deal of opposition out of the way and he would have a much better chance to get his bill passed if he would agree to eliminate as much as $205,000 from the amount, because undoubtedly $200,000 would cover all the expense necessary, and the balance of it would be wasted.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will allow me to go on now, I will take the matter up later. I want to be fair.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order Senate bill 3235, which has been unanimously passed by the Senate upon special request of the President. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate upon the bill, and thereafter the resolution shall be taken up under the 5-minute rule.

President Roosevelt some 6 weeks ago sent a letter to the Senate recommending this appropriation so that the Government may again participate in the great Chicago World's Fair. Most of you remember that 2 years ago an appropriation of $1,000,000 was made by the Congress for participation in this great undertaking in the city of Chicago. I am satisfied that the people of America recognize that, notwithstanding the unfortunate economic conditions that prevailed last year, Chicago gave to the Nation a great fair.

I am sure that the millions who attended returned to their homes pleased with and benefited by the wonderful exhibits and with their treatment by the good people of Chicago.

The amount asked for and recommended is $405,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I gladly yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman inform the House how much money Congress has already contributed to the Chicago fair? What is the total sum?

Mr. SABATH. The total sum is $1,000,000. Of this amount there was a balance of $77,000, but a portion of this has now been expended.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to my good friend.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the word "contributed" is a little unfortunate. As I understand the situation, the Federal Government did not contribute anything. They paid for their own exhibits. That is the purpose for which the money was appropriated. The different departments of the Government have exhibits there. That is the purpose for which the original $1,000,000 was appropriated, and that is the purpose for which this additional $400,000 is requested.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How much longer are we going to be called upon to maintain these exhibits at the expense of the taxpayers at this exposition in the gentleman's city? I understood at the time the gentleman got his first resolution through that there would be no expense incident to Federal participation in the fair.

Mr. SABATH. There was no expense. The amount originally appropriated was spent by the Government for its own exhibits, and the fair did not receive and has not asked for any contribution from the Government.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Government's exhibit has been of very material benefit to the Fair.

Mr. SABATH. In former years Congress has appropriated large sums of money for such purposes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As far as concerns this $1,000,000 for the good Democratic city of Chicago, we appropriated nearly $3,000,000 for the good Republican city of Philadelphia for the same purpose.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Of course I do not want the good Democratic city of Chicago to be treated differently than the good Republican city of Philadelphia, but I am interested in the taxpayer; and, furthermore, I am interested in the proposition that there are other needs of the Government for which this nearly half-million dollars could be spent with better results.

Mr. SABATH. I would not ask for this appropriation were I not thoroughly and conscientiously satisfied in my own heart that the appropriation is absolutely required for the best interests not only of the good city of Chicago but of the entire Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. When we appropriated $3,000,000 for the exhibition held by the Republican city of Philadelphia, we had plenty of Republicans, rich ones, all over the United States to tax to yield the money; but now the people all over the United States are Democrats and when we raised that $1,000,000 last year we had to raise it from Democratic taxpayers. This $405,000 also will come largely from the pockets of the Democrats of the Nation.

Mr. SABATH. And they are patriotically willing to contribute their fair share of the necessary cost of a really great fair.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. Is not the situation in Chicago at the present time such that the Government has a very large building there housing all these exhibits; that these things have cost the Government a lot of money; and that the money asked for in this appropriation is merely to open the doors of this building and continue the exhibits that were out there during the past year? If we do not appropriate enough money to continue the exhibitions of the different departments of the Government, the Government building will remain closed for the 6 months the exposition is open this year.

Mr. SABATH. That is true.

Mr. BLOOM. There will be no further expense as regards the building; the only expense will be in connection with the exhibits.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. TRUAX. I do not think we ought to be too hard on the Republican taxpayers because they seem to be hard up the same as the Democrats have been. Even Andrew Mellon, that great refunder of income taxes, is asking for a refund of the taxes that he paid last year.

Mr. SABATH. I concede that even the Republicans have been hard up; but economic conditions are improving, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio, and I feel that within a short time, with the usual and loyal cooperation of our splendid citizens, we will get back to the old-time prosperity.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman cite any precedent in the history of the Nation where a world's fair has been continued into the second year?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know that the world has ever had such a great exhibition as the present one in Chicago. In addition, the gentleman must know that the city of Chicago has gone forward under adverse conditions; and it was the same adverse condition which deprived millions of worthy persons of the privilege of visiting Chicago. Chicago desires to give these good people who were unable to attend last year the opportunity and privilege of visiting the city and the fair this year.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think that the taxpayers of the United States outside of the city of Chicago would vote to spend $405,000 to keep this exhibit open?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; and I will tell you why.

Mr. BLOOM. It would cost more to keep it closed.

Mr. SABATH. If we do not appropriate this money, it will cost the Government a large sum to take care of the exhibits that are already there.

Mr. RICH. For $405,000 you can put on a whole show.

Mr. SABATH. I venture to say that this fair has done more good to the railroads of the United States than anything else that the gentleman can possibly mention.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is there any assurance that the city of Chicago, after another very successful year, might not ask us for a third appropriation?

Mr. SABATH. I am satisfied that the city of Chicago will not ask for an additional appropriation. I want you to realize that though this fair has been beneficial to Chicago the same as it has been to the United States at large, it was brought about by its citizens who spent millions of dollars, this money being contributed by the citizens of the city of Chicago originally, in order to make this great fair possible.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will it not be possible to get around the fair grounds by the same methods of transportation as were invoked last summer, namely, busses, trolley lines, and so forth?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then why ask for $2,500 for an automobile for the Commissioner?

Mr. SABATH. I am going to move to strike that provision from the bill. Of course, the gentleman understands that this is not my bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the first sensible thing I have heard in connection with this bill.

Mr. SABATH. May I say to the gentleman that I was instrumental in eliminating this appropriation last year when it appeared in that bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman is showing good judgment. Why not take out the other $400,000 and only leave $2,500 in the appropriation?

Mr. SABATH. If that were enough and if the gentleman were serious in his statement, I would consider the matter; but I know he is not serious. I feel that the gentleman from Massachusetts recognizes the need for this appropriation, and may I say that when the time comes there will not be a great deal of difference between us as to the amount.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I interrupt the gentleman to say that the words he is putting in my mouth are inaccurate? I do not recognize that we need an appropriation of $400,000 for a Government exhibit which last year cost a million dollars for the whole thing, including buildings and everything else. Now, the gentleman is asking for almost half as much and states that everything is there. I do not agree to that kind of an expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. SABATH. When we consider the bill I want to make it plain that I am not going to insist on any appropriation which I feel is unfair or not justified.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Answering the gentleman from Massachusetts, may I say that the expenditure for that automobile was a Republican Commissioner. That was for former Postmaster General New.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is immaterial. Will the gentleman tell us how many Democrats are riding in official automobiles in Washington today?

Mr. BLOOM. None.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. Was not this automobile bought for Charles Dawes?

Mr. SABATH. No. It was for former Postmaster General New, who is the Commissioner.

Mr. TRUAX. Is he a Republican?

Mr. SABATH. He is a Republican.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. May I ask the gentleman this question? If we agree to appropriate this $405,000 that he wants, will the gentleman guarantee us safe custody while in the city of Chicago?

Mr. SABATH. May I say to the gentleman from New York that we have demonstrated to the people of America that the city of Chicago is the safest place in the world to visit. If each and every one of you Members of the House and friends will visit us and will avail yourselves of the opportunity, you will find Chicago to be the most law-abiding and the cleanest city in the United States.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman said something about Chicago being the safest place in the world. Dillinger has found it to be the safest place in America?

Mr. SABATH. No. He found it pretty hard there and did not remain long. He soon became uncomfortably conscious that Chicago's peace officers were alert, able, fearless.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is rarely the case that our good friend from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] ever brings on this floor any legislation that we all cannot support without hesitation. He is an able, zealous, dependable Member of this House, and his service is always most valuable to the country.

But he is so very loyal to his city of Chicago, and is always anxious to do so much in behalf of the people of Chicago, that when his home city has a measure here up for discussion, he is a partisan, and we always cannot follow him on Government bills that grant money to Chicago.

And ADOLPH SABATH has so many friends on this floor that it is a hard matter to stop him when he is trying to put something across. So I realize today that we here who are not willing to spend another $405,000 out of the Treasury, after granting $1,000,000 for the Chicago Fair last year, will have to put on our best fighting clothes if we defeat him.

I am not unfriendly to Chicago, and I am not unfriendly to the Chicago people. I want to see them all enjoy the very best that is to be had, and to succeed in all worthy undertakings. But they must not look to the Government for all of their help. The Government helped them immensely last year. The Government's exhibits were great drawing cards for this exposition. They were worth much to this project. The Government's cooperation brought millions of profits for Chicago. Now, it is asking entirely too much for the Government to furnish a $2,500 automobile for the fair commissioner, and to appropriate another $405,000 in cash. I am not willing to do it. It calls for entirely too much drain upon the taxpayers of this Nation.

All of us were very kind to Chicago last year. We went there last year and took our families. And all of us paid our own expenses, and we all left a good deal of money in Chicago. Every place I went into I had to pay an entrance fee and before I got out I had to pay more entrance fees to the subsidiary attractions after I got inside. It was pay, pay, pay, and pay. Oh, there was plenty of entertainment there. Dr. Tugwell had his chamber of horrors there, and we had to make him take some things out of it.

Mr. SIROVICH. What was it?

Mr. BLANTON. Some most valuable mineral crystals. I think the time has come when we should call a halt to this foolish expenditure of money. If Chicago wants to carry on the fair, all right. It is a money-making institution. It is good for the city of Chicago. They made lots of profit last year. The Government helped them make the profit. We are all friends of Chicago. But we must protect the Treasury and the interests of the taxpayers of this Nation. It is all right to spend our own money, but it is wrong to spend the money of the people wastefully. Let us not go down into the pockets of the tax-burdened people and take from the Treasury this $405,000 more.

Before this bill was called up I understood the amount was going to be reduced. I understood the amount was going to be cut, and that they were not going to ask for more than $200,000; but here they are asking for $405,000 and an extra $2,500 for an automobile, and I do not think it appeals to a single Representative on this floor who does not live in Chicago, and if it does not appeal to us, why are we going to vote for it? Why are we going to pass it if it does not appeal to us? Can you go home and justify your action to your constituents? I cannot do it, and I am not going to vote for it. I am going to vote against both the rule and the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am always quite surprised when I find myself in agreement with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. I must be mistaken in my position. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I am extremely pleased that today we are in hearty agreement.

If my memory serves me rightly, when this exposition was first suggested in Congress, the advocates came before the Ways and Means Committee and assured the Committee it would not ask for an appropriation to help carry on the Chicago Fair. Then in order to provide a Government exhibit, $1,000,000 was appropriated last year. Wherever this exhibition was housed, the buildings must still be there. Why is it necessary today to ask the Government to appropriate the sum of $400,000 from the money of the taxpayers to again exhibit the same features that were there a year ago?

This simply shows, Mr. Speaker, how reckless we are in appropriating and spending the people's money. We have no right to do this under the circumstances. We are tax-burdened to death now and, occasionally, when there is an opportunity to show that we have a little sense, rather than too much generosity, why not economize?

I do not blame the people of Chicago for wanting this exposition again. It was a good one, and I enjoyed going to it, and probably I shall go there again, but I did not suspect that I would help to pay for it out of the money of the taxpayers. I am willing to go out there at my own expense and see the Government exhibit, because it was a fine one, but I think the greater part of the people who had any interest in attending the fair went there last year. I do not believe it is going to add to the knowledge of the American people one dollar's worth to provide an automobile for somebody to ride up and down the fair grounds.

If it is desirable to secure an automobile for this purpose, borrow some of the useless ones here in Washington today. I do not think Mr. Tugwell, for instance, can use two automobiles here at one time. Send out one of those that Tugwell has today and let the commissioner, if you are going to have a new commissioner, a man by the name of New, I believe—I do not care what his name is—let him use one that has already been paid for out of Government money.

What assurance have we from the advocates of this appropriation that another year they will not be back here saying that as long as Chicago made money in 1933 and 1934, let us have it again in 1935 and have the Government put up several hundred thousand dollars more.

I am opposed to this and shall vote with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is becoming confused. The President of the United States, in collaboration with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, has importuned Congress to make this appropriation of $405,000. It is an appropriation not one penny of which will go to anybody on the fair grounds who is not associated directly with Government exhibits.

Much has been said about this amount of money being wasted. The truth of the matter is the amount is very carefully detailed in the report on the bill by the Senate Committee on Commerce. The bill has passed the Senate. The amount is divided among 18 different departments, running as low as $463 for 1 department.

The world's fair last year accommodated fifteen and a half million visitors, not for what some people think was a sort of fly-by-night pleasure fair, but a great industrial exposition, an exposition of learning and an exposition that was to show the progress in nearly every line of industry in the world. The Bureau of Standards, for instance, has one of the most important exhibits that has ever been made by the Federal Government in its history; and this exhibit, with your consent, if this bill is passed, and you go along with your President, as I think you will, is going to be improved this year. It should be improved and can be improved.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me proceed, please. I do not want to get into the confusion of my colleague of a few moments ago. I would rather treat this matter seriously, because it is a serious subject, and it is going to put Uncle Sam in a very humiliating position if Congress should vote this appropriation down.

The Federal Government has invited foreign governments from all parts of the world to participate in the exposition this year. Several governments that did not participate last year are putting up costly buildings there today.

There will be more exhibitors this year than last year, because times are more prosperous than they were a year ago. It is presumed there will be more travel this year than a year ago. They are laying great plans to entertain at least 15,000,000 visitors to the fair this year. Surely no reasonable man—and I am not thinking of dollars and cents—no reasonable man will want to see the most important exhibitor in this fair left out this year. No one wants that.

It is very late now. The fair will open in a little more than 2 weeks. The buildings have to be renovated, the exhibits have to be restored, there is an immense amount of work to be done, and I predict that much of it will be done while the visitors are on the grounds, entailing much confusion and dirt. That will be unfortunate, but it will be made necessary by the long delay in passing this resolution.

The President of the United States took the matter under consideration more than 2 months ago. He is certainly not a spendthrift, and the item for the car for the commissioner is negligible. You can vote that out of the bill, as far as I am concerned.

But I will tell you what the commissioner's car could be used for. We have many important official visitors from all over the world. Last year Governors from the various States came to see the fair, and they were met at the railroad station by the commissioner or his representative, and they were given a reception—it made them think they were an important part of the United States, and they appreciated that greatly. Two thousand five hundred dollars for a car is not an unreasonable expenditure.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. And it will not cost nearly as much as it cost to take the fleet to Montauk.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me say to the gentleman that did not cost a dime. That fleet was already down on the coast, and they were being socially entertained in Newport society. Admiral Pratt determined to take the fleet back to one of its former maneuvering places in New York State, and I hope the gentleman from New York does not object to that.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman from Illinois wishes they would bring it back again?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do, I want the people of New York State to see the fleet, and I hope it will come back there again. I do not like to hear that fine effort referred to lightly. No; I will not tell you about Montauk. That would remind you of that old California story. A typical Californian at a funeral said he would say a few words about California so long as "nobody else wanted to eulogize the dead man." [Laughter.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Did the commission have a car last year?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am not certain about that, but as far as I am concerned it might be taken out of the bill, although I think he ought to have a Government-owned car.

Mr. UMSTEAD. If he had one last year, he ought not to require a new one now.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] to explain the facts about that matter.

Mr. KELLER. The facts are these: Last year the Packard Automobile Co. loaned a car to the commissioner. The Packard Co. has already agreed to loan another car this year, and we are not going to ask for a car.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Then, why is it in the bill?

Mr. KELLER. When the matter came up I made inquiry, and the Packard Co. stepped forward and agreed to do that, and the car does not have to be appropriated for.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say this to a lot of my good friends on the Democratic side of the aisle, and I have learned to appreciate them highly, particularly the younger members. Unless you vote with your President, you are likely to be put on that now famous black list. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUAX. You cannot throw a man out of bed when he is already on the floor. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman said that this was a party car.

Mr. BRITTEN. I said what? I did not say anything about it being a party car.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes, the gentleman did. He said that parties come there and that they are entertained, and that they have to have a car. Who does the party-ing?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I yield to other gentlemen.

Mr. TRUAX. One other question I want to ask.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me explain. When any visiting potentates, as they are called, come to the World's Fair, they are entertained. There is a reception committee. The American troops which are in camp in the fairgrounds act as their body guard, and the thing is done up in real Chicago manner. The Middle West is known the world over for its genuine hospitality and fine spirit. That had a lot to do with the success of the exposition.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I attended the fair last year. It was an education to me, and I am certain it was to a great many Members of this House. I ask this question simply for information. What is the financial status of the exposition as it begins the second year?

Mr. BRITTEN. My impression is that the bonds subscribed for by the railroads and the business people of Chicago and other public-spirited men and women have been paid back to the extent of 50 percent. What the state of the other finances is I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand this car is for the use of ex-Postmaster General New; is that correct?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; if he remains commissioner for this year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am wondering whether the car will have a hole in the top for a high hat, like that of the former Postmaster General, Mr. Brown.

Mr. BRITTEN. If the present Postmaster General gets into that car, they will have to have a special deck on it, because he is so tall.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made the statement that the guests were going to be done up beautifully. What does he mean by that?

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not say that. The gentleman evidently has visited the fair and spent most of his time in the Streets of Paris. There are other important elements at the exposition besides the Streets of Paris.

Mr. McFARLANE. When this matter came up originally the record shows that there was not any appropriation going to be asked for.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is right.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why this one?

Mr. BRITTEN. And no appropriation was asked for.

Mr. McFARLANE. But the gentleman is asking for it now.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; the Government wants this to present its own exhibit. In days gone by for various expositions, like the one in Philadelphia or the one in St. Louis, appropriations were made to boost the fair. That is not the case in this instance. General Dawes came down here and told a certain committee that not $1 would be requested as an appropriation from the Government to the exposition, and not $1 has been requested.

Mr. McFARLANE. The only exhibits that are there that are free are the Government exhibits.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken. The greatest exhibits on the ground are free, all of them.

Mr. TRUAX. How about the fan dancers?

Mr. BRITTEN. The only ones not free are the fan dancers, the amusement places, and hundreds of concessions where you have to pay to get in and pay to get out, and you have a good time while you are in there. I hope the gentlemen will take this bill seriously and vote for it. Your Government wants it, your Government exhibits need it, your Government exhibits cannot prevail unless you do vote the appropriation.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BRENNAN. Is it not true that while this is an Illinois exhibit, while the fair is being conducted in the State of Illinois, it gives employment to people from every State in the Union?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true.

Mr. BRENNAN. And the trains are bringing people from every State in the Union daily?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BRENNAN. Is it not true that not only the people in the State of Illinois but the people from every State are granted concessions? It is not an Illinois exposition, it is an American exposition.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is an international exposition.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Since they started this fair, has not the State of Illinois put a 2 percent sales tax on all visitors so that they can collect enough money to pay off the bonds?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; it has not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. It is at least national, because the $70,000,000 Charley Dawes took back from the R.F.C. to Chicago made it national.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, the gentleman is wide of the mark.

Mr. BLANTON. But he did take $70,000,000, did he not? No; I believe it was $90,000,000, and it was in cash from the Treasury.

Mr. BRITTEN. His bank has paid back more than 40 percent of that already.

Mr. BLANTON. What has become of the other 60 percent?

Mr. BRITTEN. It is being paid off gradually and will all be paid back. The Government will not lose a penny on that loan which saved the banking situation of the entire Midwest.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman underwrite it?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman does that every once in a while.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois underwrites it, so of course it is good.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Would not the gentleman be willing to accept as one of the Government exhibits "the little red house" that he is forever talking about?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is already an outstanding exhibit. The Nation knows all about that.

Mr. TRUAX. The Nation does not know only what the gentleman has said about it. Why not take it out there and let the Nation see it?

Mr. BRITTEN. If we took that out there, with its scarlet-fever occupants, it would be the greatest attraction at the fair grounds.

Mr. TRUAX. Outside of Sam Insull, I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have listened to the figures of millions of persons who would attend the fair this year. I want to ask if it is not a fact that it is only possible through improved business conditions under the present administration that those people will be able to attend such an exposition?

Mr. BRITTEN. Unquestionably, the people are in a better mood to attend fairs this year. They are taking the little family and getting in the automobile and going to the fair for 2 or 3 days. Everybody along the right-of-way leading to Chicago will benefit by the exposition this year just as they did last year. The people in Missouri, the people in Minnesota, in Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, and practically every State in the Union will benefit by this exposition. It is your exposition, gentlemen. Protect it and be proud of it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is an old friend. It has been with us now a long time. At first, it was not going to cost anything, and then it cost $1,000,000 for the Government exhibits and items connected with it, and I want to read two or three of them to you.

Commissioner's office spent $493,000; the Agricultural Department put on some exhibits that our friend from Texas stopped, $101,000. The Commerce Department, $80,000.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I should like to know what the gentleman is reading from?

Mr. TABER. From a Senate document, Report No. 583.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman reading the expenditures of last year?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Well, we are not voting on that today.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; but I want the folks to know about it. You see, when you know something about how things have been done and how it is proposed to be done, because I am going to tell a little about that, you can form some kind of judgment as to what you should do. They propose to spend for the commissioner's office next year $172,000. They propose to spend for the Agriculture Department $45,000, and for the Commerce Department $43,000. The Smithsonian Institution——

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is completely mistaken; he is not reading the right column.

Mr. TABER. Oh, I do not know where the gentleman would get the total if it is not what I am reading. Perhaps I cannot read, but this report is here and anybody can send and get it. It is Report No. 583.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman put that in the RECORD?

Mr. TABER. Certainly, I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including this table showing what was appropriated, what has been spent, and what is estimated will be spent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.
